A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of this volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around and the stay-at-home to see where he went.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

BIBLE MYTHS,

AND THEIR PARALLELS IN OTHER RELIGIONS:

BEING A

Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity,

CONSIDERING ALSO THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

[Heathen Illustration of the Temptation.]

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

WOMAN: FOUR CENTURIES OF PROGRESS. A Lecture Delivered at the Freethinkers' International Congress, Chicago, October, 1893. By Susan H. Wixon. 10c.

This is a capital summary of woman's history and present status, showing her former slavery and degradation and her rapidly progressing emancipation. It is full of salient facts, and is written in a lively style. It should hav a wide circulation among both women and men, as it is calculated to enlighten them both, and shows that "Freethought has always been the best friend woman had," and that her "condition decides that of the race." There are few pamphlets of thirty-four pages that contain more facts and points of value on the woman question, and it will be of great service for handy reference to those who wish to be well posted on this theme that is now becoming so prominent.

THE GIANT DELUSION. By Otto Wettstein. Price, 10 cents.

This is a good, hard-headed Materialistic onslaught upon Christianity and Spiritualism, and consists of blows straight from the shoulder, backed by a keen logic that it will be hard to refute. It is a paper read before the International Freethought Congress at Chicago, October 5, 1893, and contains some quite original arguments and new forms of presenting old opinions with reference to the question of immortality. It preaches the gospel of Secularism and advocates having a good time here and now. Those who wish for a powerful, terse advocacy of Materialism will find it here in handy and useful form for distribution.

THUMBSCREW AND RACK. By Geo. E. Macdonald. Price, 10 cents.

Of all the horrors this caps the climax! A sure prescription for nightmare, and a certain destroyer of all belief in the tender mercies of the Christian church. It is well to endure the revelation of past atrocity to realize what Christianity might do if it again had the power. Its perusal will help the reader to resolve to resist every encroachment upon liberty made in the name of God, for it shows what cruelty even good men can inflict when they become godly men. The author has rendered a service in making this collection of illustrations of the instruments of torture, and by explaining them in his peculiarly pungent style. Every Liberal needs this book in his armory among the weapons for attack.

THE BIBLE INQUIRER. By A. Jacobson. Price, 10 cents.

For a long time to come it will be necessary to prove to the Sunday-school bred Christian that the Bible is not the word of God. For this purpose the collection of questions contained in this pamphlet, with answers solely in the words of "holy writ," is a most admirable means. There is no getting away from the Bible's testimony about itself, and the best way to secure Freethinkers is to make Christians study the Bible. The fact that this work has reached its fourth edition shows that it has been found useful. There is no better book to use as an entering wedge for doubt with the thick-and-thin believer who cannot be reached on the plane of reason or the "higher criticism."

ROBT. C. ADAMS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT IN THE Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,

At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

Hard Knocks at Christianity.

By R. WHEELER.

This book is just what its title implies—thumping whacks at superstition. It deals with the effect of Christianity on the world, showing what Christians have done to advance their religion and impede the progress of man. It shows that Jesus was a false prophet, that the gospels are not authentic, and that Christianity is a borrowed system of religion. That the Bible is not in accord with Science, that the atonement scheme is futile and foolish, and that religion is not a real benefit to man.

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

LITTLE DAUGHTER: "Didn't the minister say that there had been a great falling off in the attendance at church, lately?" Mother: "Yes, he did." Little daughter: "There doesn't anything stay in fashion long, does it?"—Street & Smith's Good News.

"A FASCINATING profession yours," simpered a popular preacher, to a lawyer in large practice, "a very fascinating profession." "Yours is better," replied the man of law, somewhat gruffly. "Why do you say so?" asked the reverend gentleman. "The opposit party hasn't got any right of reply."

MAMMA: "What hav you been doing, Eddie?" Eddie: "I'se been baptizing Eva's doll." Mamma: "Well, did you repeat the ceremony?" Eddie: "Yes'm." Mamma: "What did you say?" Eddie: "I baptized her once, and I asked her if she felt any better; she said nothing, an' I baptized her again."—Literary Digest.

A. STERLING MORTON tells this story: The Good Pastor—"I noticed that you looked pleased when I denounced certain members of our congregation for visiting bad places, deacon, but I could not understand why you threw up your hand in such a peculiar way, and slapped your knee." The Deacon: "Oh, that was because you reminded me of where I left my umbrella."—Judge.

"How did Mistah Jackson come out wif 'is trouble wif de deacons?" "Does you hab ref'rence to de trial dat de henhouse 'currence gave rise to?" "Dat's what I means." "He's reinstated in membership, he is." "Golly! I thought it were a clah case." "No'n deedy. What dey charged 'm wid wus chickens, an' dey couldn't prove nuffin' but tuhkeys."—Washington Star.

PRIEST: "But you must remember, Mr. O'Hoolahan, that when you giv me money, you are but laying up a treasure in heaven." Mrs. O'Hoolahan: "A threasure in heaven, is it? Indade! Well, divil a cent will you git from me agin. As long as Boss Corrigan, Boss Croker, Boss dis fellar an' dat, wid de Foleys an' de Ragans, stan' a chance of bein' sint to heaven before I do, divil a show would I git at de treashure, at all, at all."

THE following conversation took place between two Highlandmen rounding the Mull of Kintyre: "Keep her heat up, Tuncan, keep her heat up, man; we'll maype be able to make Campbeltown or Carradale yet before daylicht goes oot." Duncan: "Keep your own heat up, Tonald, and not sit in the bows there greeting like a bubbly jock. If we get to Campbeltown I doot it'll be by crawling alang the bottom. Och, och, this is what I got by sailin' wi' a whisky cask like you aboard; O Lord, I wush it wass yesterday." Donald: "Och, och, this is what I got by sailin' wi' twa whisky casks like you aboard; O Lord, I wush it was the day before yesterday." Duncan: "Stop fetchin'; we're maist doon. Tonald, you might pray." Donald: "Yes, O michty for gracious Lord, Tuncan's an aufu feef; he stole Macquillim's nets and hens, an' promised me the hauf, but niffer did I get a broon papee. It's twenty years since I socht a favor from you, an' if you'll tak' us safe intae Campbeltown it'll be as lang again afore I'll ask anither."—Coast Seamen's Journal.

AN eminent New York divine, in the course of an address at a fraternity dinner recently, told this story. Said he: "I met a Brooklyn friend of mine a few days ago, and as he appeared to be feeling in an unusually exuberant frame of mind, I asked him why. He replied that he was happy because he had done three good actions the day before. He had met a poor woman on the street. The woman held a sickly-looking child in her arms and she was weeping. Inquiry showed that she was weeping because she was convinced that her child was dying and unbaptized. 'But,' said the Brooklyn man, 'why do you not hav the child baptized?' 'Because I hav no money, and the fee for baptism is $1,' said the woman. Whereupon the good Samaritan handed the woman a $10 bill, gave her his address so that she could bring back the change—which she did return—and went his way. 'That is one good action,' said the doctor. 'Now for the other two.' 'Oh,' observed the Brooklyn man, 'they are all three in that one. First, I relieved the sorrows of a weeping woman; second, I assured the child of eternal salvation; and third—' Here he hesitated. 'Yes?' said the doctor. 'What was the third?' 'Well, said the Brooklyn man, 'the third was that I got rid of that vile counterfeit $10 bill I had been carrying for more than a year.'"—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine.

Gems of Thought.

No man should be reverent at the expense of his reason.

THE fate of nations is determined by the deeds of men.—Investigator.

PROGRESS is the natural form of perpetual motion.—Katharine Mabley Corbett.

I WOULD willingly say of the metaphysicians what Scaliger said of the Basques—"It is said that they understood each other, but I don't believe it."—Chamfort and Vauvenargues.

THE credit given to popular traditions, and the fictions substituted for truth, and these two errors being accredited in ensuing ages—these are the cause of that obscurity in which the most important facts are veiled.—Tacitus.

WHEN demagogs need more money than they are taking in they proceed to excite the prejudices of one class of the people against another class, and then to satisfy this prejudice by the penalties of increased taxation.—Galveston News.

THE laws framed to protect religion were based on a superstitious belief that an offender of the gods might bring down their wrath on the whole community; those laws survive in all laws for the punishment of individual immorality, and in the related laws against immoral literature. The pious laws did not benefit the gods, but did retard religious progress by punishing new ideas as blasphemy; that the moral statutes equally retard ethical progress appears to me equally certain.—Moncure D. Conway.

REALISM worships at the shrine of nature. It does not say that there may not be a sphere in which beings higher than man can liv, or that some time an eye may not rest upon a fairer sunset than was ever born behind the clouds and sea; but it knows that through countless ages nature has slowly fitted the brain and eye of man to the earth on which we liv and the objects that we see, and the perfect earthly eye must harmonize with the perfect earthly scene. To say that realism is coarse and vulgar is to declare against nature and her works, and to assert that the man she made may dream of things higher and grander than nature could unfold.—C. S. Darrow.

THERE are thousands of men and women, fathers and mothers, who repudiate with their whole hearts the creeds of superstition, and still allow their children to be taught these lies. They allow their imaginations to be poisoned with the dogma of eternal pain. They allow arrogant and ignorant parsons, meek and foolish teachers, to sow the seeds of barbarism in the minds of their children—seeds that will fill their lives with fear and pain. Fathers and mothers should do their utmost to make their children free. They should teach them to doubt, to investigate, to inquire; and every father and mother should know that, by the cradle of every child, as by the cradle of the infant Hercules, crawls the serpent of superstition.—R. G. Ingersoll.

THE last appeal of conservatism is always to the historic sense. Any daring innovation or startling progress is solemnly summoned to confront the past, and a petition is sent up to be respectful to "historic continuity." But the surprising thing is that it is the radical and not the conservativ who really conserves the past. As a matter of fact, it is the man with a forward look who lovingly turns his face backward to see what there is in the experience of the race to warrant his position. The autumn leaf painted in dying glories prates of historic relations, and pleads for continuity, but the new bud that is pushing its way at the base of this petition draws its nourishment from the living past, and is so strong in the continuity that it is too busy to talk of creeds. —Unity.

IT is not certain that the immediate future will hav the light. Credulity is deep rooted. Socialism may bring, with the complicity of Catholicism, a new Middle Age barbarian church, an eclips of liberty, of individuality, in a word of civilization. But the ulterior future is sure. The future definitivly will no longer believe in the supernatural, for the supernatural is not true, and all that is not true is condemned to die. Nothing lasts like the truth. This poor truth appears pretty well abandoned, served as it is by an imperceptible minority. Be tranquil. It will triumph. Judaism and Christianity will disappear. Jewish work will end, but Greek work—that is, science, rational and experimental—civilization without charlatanism, wi hout revelation, founded on reason and liberty, will, on the contrary, go on forever. The trace of Israel, however, will be eternal.—Renan.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especially in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

ZEKE AS A SIGN.

Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign: according to all that he hath done shall ye do: and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God.—Ezek. xxiv, 24.

Each canvasser for signatures should take two copies of this petition and have both signed; one to be sent to the House and the other to the Senate. All adults, men and women, should sign.

Cut this petition heading out and attach to sheet of paper, ruled as indicated at bottom of this. When sheet is filled with names put in an envelope, stamp and address to THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Place, New York City, and mail at once. For more blanks send to same address.

Petition to Congress Asking It to Reject the Proposed God-in-the-Constitution Amendment.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress Assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, do hereby respectfully pray and memorialize your Honorable Body to reject the proposed Amendment to the Constitution prepared by the National Reform Association and offered in the Senate on Jan. 25th, 1894, by Senator Frye, and in the House on the same day by Representative Morse. The proposed Amendment would change the Preamble to the Constitution by the insertion of the sentences within quotation marks which follow the words "We, the people of the United States," in the paragraph below:

We, the people of the United States, "devoutly acknowledging the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and nations; grateful to him for our civil and religious liberty, and encouraged by the assurances of his Word to invoke his guidance, as a Christian nation, according to his appointed way, through Jesus Christ," etc.

We ask the rejection of this proposed amendment for the following reasons:

1. That the American principle of separation of church and state may be maintained.

2. That the rights of all classes of citizens may be conserved and perpetuated. It is manifest that the adoption of such an Amendment to the Constitution would be, in fact, the incorporation of certain religious and sectarian dogmas in the fundamental law of the land. Such recognition of religious dogmas in the civil law was very carefully guarded against by the wise founders of the Republic, both in the Constitution as originally adopted and in the First Amendment thereto.

3. As the Constitution now stands no discrimination, on the ground of heresy, can be legally made against any citizen. More than one hundred years of experience amply justifies this wide tolerance and forcibly pleads for its continuance. Men of all shades of religious, non-religious, and anti-religious belief can and do render allegiance to and acceptably serve the State, and this without hypocrisy or perjury. Should this proposed Amendment be adopted, it would at once shut out of public life candid and honest men, whose reason, for any cause, cannot accept one or more of the three creedal statements contained in said proposed Amendment, but unscrupulous doubters and rejecters of these creedal affirmations would have no difficulty in taking the oath of allegiance to the Amended Constitution. Hence said proposed Amendment offers a premium for hypocrisy and perjury, and is, consequently, in the highest degree immoral. It is also unjust, in that it deprives a part of our citizens of their equal rights, because of a difference of opinion. Again, it must be hurtful to the State, because, as already shown, it would admit pretenders and timorous men to positions of trust and responsibility, and bar out men of honesty and courage.

4. The experience of all times and nations has shown conclusively that every attempt to force from the citizen a direct or indirect acknowledgment of the truth of any of the dogmas of religion is disastrous. It creates new religious hatreds and intensifies the old; it demoralizes religion and corrupts the state; it tramples the equal rights and liberties of the deserving citizen, and puts into the hands of bad men a dangerous and terrible power over the property, persons, and lives of their fellow-citizens.

5. If Theistic, Trinitarian, and Christian majorities may to-day rightfully force upon Deistic, Atheistic, or Agnostic, and Unitarian and non-Christian minorities their distinctive creeds, what warrant have we that some other day the Catholics, the Methodists, or the Presbyterians will not Amend into the Constitution their distinguishing sectarian dogmas? That step would logically follow the one which your Honorable Body has been asked to take, and against which we respectfully but strongly and unalterably protest.

MOROCCO will pay to Spain twenty million pesetas indemnity for the Riffian attack on Melilla last fall.

UDO KEPPLER, son of the famous cartoonist, Joseph Keppler, has had his first name changed to Joseph.

JAMES MONTGOMERY BAILEY, famous a few years ago as the "Danbury News Man," died on March 4.

ANOTHER entombment of coal miners has occurred in Pennsylvania. This time at Ashland. Seven were buried.

LIEUT.-GEN. JUBAL ANDERSON EARLY, ranking officer of the late Confederacy, died at Lynchburg, Va., March 2.

THE first detachment of pioneers for the Freeland communist experiment near Mount Kenia in Africa has left Hamburg.

AT the late elections in Brazil, Prudente de Moraes was elected president and Manoel Victorino Pereria vice-president.

THE Persian government has announced that its mints will no longer coin silver. Importations of silver will be forbidden from April 1.

MONEY has won; there is an improvement in the financial outlook of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, and so Talmage has decided to remain as pastor.

STEELE MACKAYE, author and dramatist, died near Timpas, Colo., on a Santa Fé train, while on the way to San Diego, Cal., for the benefit of his health.

CONGRESSMAN WILSON, chairman of the Ways and Means committee, is ill in Mexico, where he went to recuperate after the exhausting fight over the tariff bill.

THE bill providing for a vote of the cities and towns which may hereafter become parts of the "Greater New York" has passed both houses of the legislature and been signed by Governor Flower.

REV. W. P. RATLIFF, Populist member of the Mississippi legislature, shot and instantly killed S. A. Jackson, a Democratic member, and mortally wounded two bystanders, in a court-house duel.

EMPEROR WILLIAM has declared Ernst Haeckel's "Monism, a Scientific Confession of Faith," unsalable in Germany. The book, now police-forbidden, ran through five editions in as many months.

CONGRESSMAN DUNPHY, of this city, has quit Tammany, because of election corruptions in portions of his district and Croker's opposition to tariff reform. We understand that Mr. Dunphy will oppose the Christian amendment.

GEORGETOWN, COL., wants to secede from the United States and become a part of the Mexican republic. A petition to this end is being numerously signed. The signers now claim that it was intended to call renewed attention to the silver question.

JOHN Y. MCKANE, the Gravesend boss, is now in Sing Sing. Many convictions of dishonest election officers and fraudulent voters hav occurred in New York city. So far there has not been a failure to convict. Some of the offenders hav been sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

THE tides of progress ebb and flow. Senator O'Connor has introduced a drastic anti-divorce bill in the legislature of New York, going so far as to make the corespondent a felon. But in Buda-Pesth, Hungary, 300,000 persons take part in a joyful demonstration over the adoption of the Civil Marriage bill.

MR. GLADSTONE has been forced by increasing physical infirmities to resign the premiership. He refuses a peerage. Lord Rosebery has been summoned to form a new cabinet, and held his first conference March 3. Labouchere, leader of the Radicals, declares that the latter, with many of the Liberals, will not support a government headed by a peer. If this is true, the Rosebery government may not last a week.

Miss Wixon has taken as her mottoes in writing this beautiful book of 292 pages—which she has dedicated to the memory of her father and mother—these sentences from the works of a great synthetic philosopher and a gifted liberal minister:

As with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not.—Herbert Spencer.

Living is an Art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the Arts.—Thomas Starr King.

"Right Living" is well bound in cloth and printed on good paper.

IN PRESS.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought. By Samuel P. Putnam. Subscription book, elegant binding, over one hundred portraits, $5.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History, adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

WOMAN'S EMANCIPATION

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,

Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

What Would the Christian Amendment Bring?

The first thing to be done in an educational way in arousing the people against the Morse-Frye joint resolution for an amendment to the federal Constitution is to show them just what its originators and promoters hav put into it and expect it to accomplish. In our last issue we quoted extensivly from an exposition of the proposed amendment written by Rev. R C. Wylie, secretary of the National Reform Association. Mr. Wylie expounded its theology, its political philosophy, and fore shadowed its practical application.

In the Christian Reformer of March 3d the subject is still further elucidated, the investigation being pursued along the same lines as those followed by Mr. Wylie in his first article, and the conclusions reached are substantially the same, but the phraseology employed brings out still more sharply, in some cases the salient features of the Covenanters' destructiv scheme. The writer first considers the theological aspects of the amendment, summing up its inclusions and implications in these six affirmations:

"1. God's supreme authority over the nation itself.

"2. God's supreme authority over the individuals composing the nation.

"3. God's just judgment, in all his providences, of both men and nations.

"4. These expressed relations of the nation to God, in their connection in the proposed preamble, imply that the nation, as itself possessing authority, must derive its authority from God who is supreme.

"5. Still further that God's supreme authority is expressed for a nation's guidance in the divine word.

"6. That God is the one sovereign governor of the nation in and through Jesus Christ. The old form of amendment suggested a double sovereignty, and a two-fold supreme rulership. This new form is in perfect harmony with the scripture view, which is that 'God rules the nations' (Psalm xlvii, 8), and that 'He is the governor among the nations' (Ps. xxii, 28). The words of this last Psalm are the words of the Messiah speaking of his God and ours. So also in Revelation, prophecy tells us that the kingdoms of this world are to 'become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ' (Rev. xi, 15)."

Should this proposed amendment become a part of the preamble of the Constitution, whoever thereafter takes the oath of allegiance as citizen or functionary by that act accepts or professes to accept these theological dogmas:

1. God is the ruler of the nation.
2. God is the ruler of the individual.
3. Special divine providence.
4. The source of authority in government is God, not the people.
5. The Bible is God's statute book for the government of the nation and of individuals.
6. Jesus Christ is God's deputy governor on earth.

In other words, this amendment is designed to outlaw Atheism, Agnosticism, science—which knows nothing of special providence—Freethought, Judaism, Unitarianism, and self-government. It is designed to make the doctrins of Theism and Trinitarian Christianity essential parts of the constitutional and statute law of the civil republic. It is designed to force acceptance of the Bible—with its alleged authenticity, divinity, inerrancy, and impeccability—upon all whose reason or moral sense will not permit them to voluntarily take it as a divine guide. It is designed to make men and women submit to laws which a dominant priesthood says rest upon a true interpretation of Bible teachings. It is designed to punish honest investigators and fearless truth speakers and reward credulous dupes and trembling hypocrits. It is designed to do that which every page of history solemnly warns us against attempting—to teach religion by law; develop love of God by pains and penalties. The world has had a million times too much of such criminal folly.

Regarding the relation of the nation to the Bible what has the proposed amendment to say? The Christian Reformer avers that it covers:

"1. The expression of supreme authority and law. This is necessarily included, as already seen, in the connection of God's word with his supreme authority. That authority must be expressed for the nation over which it is, and that expression must be in the Word of the supreme Ruler. Besides, the 'guidance' of a nation is its 'government.' Both words appropriately refer to the steering and control of the ship of state. The governor is the helmsman or the guide.

"2. The nation in its troubles needs God's Word for comfort and strength. The 'assurances of His Word' afford this help. These assurances include all the inspiring promises which the nation needs. And very especially,

"3. The nation, in its sins, requires assurances of pardon and acceptance. Nothing in the relations of the nation to the Bible can be more important than this. Our nation is a sinful nation. It must find forgivness or be destroyed. God's Word assures it of forgivness, if it comes to him in his appointed way."

God is the governor of the nation through his deputy, Jesus. His authority must be expressed through the Bible. The "guidance" which he givs through the Bible is really government, which means, of course, that the priests, as the visible representativs of God and his vicegerent, Jesus, will not merely guide the nation by the inculcation of the precepts and admonitions of the Bible, but will actually govern it by the legal enforcement of its commands, as they interpret them. They will steer and control the ship of state, appealing for their authority to the dummy helmsman they hav themselvs set up at the wheel. To change the figure, and adapting the biblical legend, the oracle will hav the face of Jesus, but the voice and hands will be the voice and hands of the priest.

The nation is sinful. God will destroy it if it does not come to him for forgivness "in his appointed way." What constitutes "sin" in the nation we can learn only from the Bible. So no pardon is possible unless we believe the Bible and condemn by law what it condemns, and enforce by law what it commands. But men differ with regard to the doctrinal and ethical teachings of the Bible. Then whose understanding of that collection of books is to be made the law of the land? Manifestly that of the majority. Whenever the majority decree that we must incorporate iu the law a certain doctrinal tenet or moral precept which is found, or which the majority say is found, in the Bible, the dissenting minority must submit. That is, the majority constitute a state church and make the distinguishing dogmas of that church essential parts of the law of the nation and of its sub-divisions. Thus inability to believe becomes a crime. The priests of this official church will refuse to convey to the nation the forgivness of God so long as the nation is guilty of "sins" which they condemn. While God withholds his pardon his priests will agitate and legislate against the heresies which stand in the way of the divine absolution. We are told that "the nation, iu its sins, requires assurances of pardon and acceptance. Nothing in the relations of the nation to the Bible can be more important than this." Important to the priesthood, we are to understand. While it is possible for this caste to make the majority of the people believe that the absence from the statutes of drastic laws against heresy subjects the whole nation to the danger of God's vengeance, it will be easy for the ecclesiastics to retain their power and manufacture confiscatory and punativ decrees and establish legal inquisitions to suit themselvs. Of course religious liberty vanishes and persecution in every form deemed necessary to perpetuate the supremacy of the theocracy inevitably supervenes. All these immeasurable evils the adoption of the Christian amendment will surely bring upon the American people.

We are now brought to the consideration of the "moral relations of the nation—its relations to Christ." The Christian Reformer tells us that here the amendment includes:

"1. Christ's relation as Mediator. This is not in the old form of amendment at all, except by remote inference. In the new form it is most distinctly expressed—'according to his appointed way, through Jesus Christ.' This is God, in Christ the Mediator, hearing the nation's prayer for guidance, and granting this guidance with the Mediator's hand on the helm of the ship of state. The very idea of Christ's mediatorial office includes, of necessity, both our approach with thanks and prayer to God, and the communication to us through him of the blessings for which we pray and giv thanks. To speak of invoking God for anything according to his appointed way through Jesus Christ without including the bestowment of the blessing sought through the same mediation is as superficial as it is unscriptural.

"2. Christ's relation to the nation as its Prophet. The nation needs God's Word for instruction. This is a part of 'guidance,' which is thus more comprehensiv than 'ruling.' And the Word of God givs many assurances which are the utterances of the Mediator as Prophet rather than as King.

"3. Christ's relation to the nation as its priest. The nation, as we saw in another connection, needs forgivness. If it comes to God in his appointed way, guided by his Word, it must come through the merits and mediation of the Great High Priest. In no other way, as the Senate of the United States and President Lincoln acknowledged in 1863, can the nation obtain the pardon of its sins.

"4. Christ's relation to the nation as its King. The word 'guidance' includes government, rulership, or kingship. The names 'Jesus' and 'Christ' are royal names and titles. They mean savior and anointed. They bring distinctivly to view Messiah the Prince, the Anointed Savior-King. Who can say that Christ's royal titles are not here?"

The incorporation of the Morse-Frye amendment into the Constitution would force upon the citizen the acceptance of these doctrinal affirmations:

1. Jesus Christ is the divinely-appointed mediator between the nation and God.
2. He is the nation's prophet.
3. He is the nation's high priest.
4. He is the nation's king.

All this we should hav to believe or be legally damned. We should hav to believe that "God, in Christ the Mediator," hears the majority's prayer for guidance, and givs this guidance with the mediator's—meaning the hierarchy's—"hand on the helm of the ship of state." In other terms, we should hav to believe in the duty of prayer and in direct answer to prayer. We should hav to believe all the dogmas specified and hundreds of minor ones that are more or less closely related to them. If we could not believe any or all of these dogmas, and, failing to believe, should refuse to stultify ourselvs by pretending to believe, we would find ourselvs at the mercy of the majority's laws. Persecution for opinion's sake begins the moment doctrinal averments creep into the organic law and the statutes. The desire to persecute is present before the law is colored by religion. No man of ordinary sense ever desired to put his religious opinions into the Constitution and into statutory enactments unless he was unwilling to let his creed stand upon its merits or fall because of its demerits under the clear light of impartial investigation. The wish for compulsory conformity is behind the National Reform movement. The church must dominate the state in order that the beliefs of the Covenanters and their allies may be shielded from honest criticism. No one supposes that these theocrats will admit that they wish to persecute, but they do frankly, with particularity and great elaborateness, proclaim their zealous desire to put every essential dogma of their creeds into the statute books and to compel the makers, adjudicators, and administrators of law to appeal to and enforce the authority of the Bible. Persecution, then, is their object. It is probable they do not wish to cause undue suffering, but they do mean to coerce dissenters to any degree that may be found necessary to make them acknowledge the divinity of certain theological statements and render outward respect to the church and its institutions. Persecution does not cease to be persecution because veiled under the euphemism of "enforcement of God's righteous laws." No Covenanter is better qualified than any Unitarian or Freethinker of equal general intelligence to determin what are God's laws. If a God exists and has either physical or moral laws to enforce we may be sure that he needs neither the counsel nor other assistance of the National Reform Association or the Women's Christian Temperance Union. When any man contravenes a law of the material universe he is apprised of the fact without a message from Jesus via Rev. H. H. George, Frances Willard, or a federal judge. If he invades the rights of his fellows he will be the more quickly called to account and their rights will be the more effectually protected the less time legislators and courts waste in fooling with "God's laws," of which they know nothing.

The Morse-Frye joint resolution is capable of mischief and of nothing but mischief. It should never come out of the committee room, but it may. Wherever it appears it must be fought with every legitimate weapon at our command. We must destroy it or it will destroy us.

The Song of the Siren.

The liberties of nations no less than the fortunes of individuals are wrecked on the rocks of "No Danger." Incalculable suffering has been caused, millions of lives hav been sacrificed, because men hav been careless and indifferent. They hav not resisted the first encroachments of the tyrant, the insidious sapping and mining of the legions of superstition, the heartlessly selfish scheming of the beneficiaries of injustice. The Civil War of 1861–5 was caused by just such blindness and apathy. As Karl Heinzen has tersely said, the American people had to learn through the stern teaching of the logic of events what they should hav learned by the study of the logic of justice. The far-seeing men who, decades before that awful conflict opened, prophesied its coming and did what they could to induce the people to remove the cause by peaceful means, were laughed at, slandered, and persecuted; called "alarmists" and fools; told that they were "scared by their own shadows"; that there was "no danger"; that the sky of the country's future was cloudless and serene.

And now the grandchildren of those ante-bellum optimists are equally sure that there is "no danger" in the scheming of the National Reformers and their allies. Even a Liberal paper speaks of the proposed Christian amendment as "ridiculous." It is ridiculous in the eyes of the rationalist, but how many rationalists are there among the millions of church-members in the United States? Ridiculous it is, intrinsically, but the more dangerous because it is ridiculous. Below is an extract from a letter we hav received from a subscriber in Detroit:

"I inclose a list of seventy-nine names remonstrating against the proposed constitutional amendment. The most of my objectors to this remonstrance say it is not necessary to fool away any time remonstrating, that there is absolutely no danger that any such silly stuff as this proposed amendment will ever receive any attention whatever at the hands of the United States legislature. One, a lawyer, ventured the assertion that, if the bill ever comes to a vote, he felt assured that not a dozen men would vote for it. Another lawyer refused to giv the matter any attention, upon the presumption that the bill will go into the hands of a committee and will never see daylight again. Quite a number of intelligent men laughed me to scorn for being alarmed over the idea that such an absurdly silly proposition would ever receive the slightest consideration by such a body of intelligent men as our national Congress. I quit canvassing in disgust."

No wonder our friend was disgusted. These people he encountered know practically nothing of the facts; they hav at the most only the haziest idea of the scope and strength of the so-called National Reform movement. Members of Congress who are on general principles opposed to a union of church and state are in a similar state of blissful ignorance. A member from Kentucky, replying to one of our subscribers, wrote that the joint resolution would not even be seriously considered by the House Judiciary Committee. As matters of fact, however, a sub-committee of that committee had already given serious and interested attention to arguments in favor of the amendment, and since the time the Congressman wrote the committee, on March 6th, heard nine spokesmen of a delegation of two hundred National Reformers argue for the amendment while it refused to permit the Freethinkers and Adventists to divide time with them and present arguments in opposition. We reported last week the fact of the shameful packing of the sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate by the theocratic lobbyists and gave the names of several Congressmen and Senators who are "all right" from the point of view of the pious tricksters.

Now the committees may not report the joint resolution favorably, and if they do the Senate and House may not adopt the amendment. But, as we hav said before, the Reformers will not be beaten by apathy and indifference on our part. And we wish the "no danger" people to bear this prediction in mind: No matter how often they may fail to carry the committees or the two Houses of Congress with them, the Covenanters will never rest until they are overwhelmingly defeated or defeat us in a political struggle which will arouse the people of the entire country and align the voters in two great parties for and against the theocratic theory of government. For years Congress and the courts hav been playing into the hands of the political church, and the adoption of the amendment to-day would be merely a ratification by the people of the unconstitutional performances of the law makers and judges. Such ratification would remove the last obstacle in the way of the state-church. This is no "scare" of ours; it is a cold statement of facts, of facts which are openly and confidently appealed to continually by the National Reformers. That the Detroit lawyers and millions of other citizens are unacquainted with or fail to realize the significance of these facts is their misfortune and the country's danger. So long as the privileges granted to the church are granted in violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, we stand on a vantage ground in a strong defensiv position, from which the adoption of the Christian amendment would drive us. While the Constitution remains as it is there is always hope that we can turn the tide of legislativ and judicial revolution, and force the church back into her proper place. But with the Constitution amended as the theocrats desire, the struggle for religious freedom would be a hundred-fold more difficult.

To return to the Detroit "all's well" people: It is passing strange that men hav such short memories. Hav these students of the law forgotten the Edmunds amendment which lacked but four votes of receiving a two-thirds majority in the Senate? Hav they forgotten the Blair amendment which was defeated in the House only after a protracted struggle? And above all else, hav they forgotten the Sunday closing of the World's Fair by Congress? The church molded the House and the Senate and the president like wax in her fingers; the committees that heard remonstrants refused to consider the fundamental principles involved, and at the next session, after the friends of the free Sunday had at last awakened and Congress was asked to repeal the Sunday-closing clause of the appropriation bill it was the same story over again, and repeal was contemptuously refused. Hav the singers of the siren's song of "no danger" forgotten that the same delusiv lullaby chant went up from all over the country when the question of closing the Fair on the preachers' day was first broached? The chanters then had forgotten the Centennial Exposition, when Hawley obeyed the commands of the Protestant priesthood and shut the gates at Philadelphia in the faces of the people, as seventeen years later Congress shut them at Chicago. Seventeen years mark but half the lifetime of a generation, and it would seem that even persons with the poorest memories could retain the impression of such a startling lesson that long. But what shall we say of the capacity to forget of men who cannot remember in 1894 the Congressional triumph of the church in 1891–2? Strange indeed that they should forget so soon how the organized theocrats frightened that "intelligent body of men," "our national Congress," into abject compliance with their demands! It is fortunate that a few, at least, hav not forgotten how the Sabbatarians forced every Populist and a large majority of the Democrats and Republicans in the House to vote for a measure obnoxious to every precept and principle of religious liberty and equal justice.

Mr. Putnam quotes Judge Miller to the effect that the Supreme Court cannot interpret the Constitution for the co-ordinate branches of the government. But the fact remains that the decision of that court in one of a class of cases is respected by the subordinate federal courts and the state courts when they pass upon other cases of the same class, precisely as the minor state courts respect the decisions of the supreme court of their state. Furthermore it is also true that the United States Supreme Court has the last word concerning any law passed by Congress. And the state supreme court has likewise the last word concerning any law passed by the legislature of its state, unless an appeal is taken to the federal Supreme Court. Theory is one thing —and Judge Miller's theory is pleasant reading for Secularists just now—but the opposing facts are awkward to handle. It will be found on examination that the Supreme Court does, practically, interpret the Constitution for the whole country, including Congress and the executiv department of the government. The test is right here: Is there on record an instance in which, the Supreme Court having declared a law of Congress unconstitutional, Congress has turned about and re-enacted the law in the exact form in which it passed it at first? If not, is not this state of affairs very good evidence that, in practice, the Supreme Court is the national authoritativ interpreter of the Constitution, Judge Miller's opinion to the contrary notwithstanding? And when has a state legislature re-enacted a law under like circumstances?

The Supreme Court declared in an obiter dictum that this is "a Christian nation," and since its opinion was given several state Supreme courts hav echoed that view, in one way or another, in passing upon the constitutionality of state Sunday laws. Up to this date no power has been found to call in question the dictum of the Supreme Court and save citizens from the penalties of Christian law. So it will not be prudent for us to lean on Judge Miller's exegetical reed and murmur, "There is no danger in the Trinity church opinion of Judge Brewer and his associates."

Do not fail to read the contents table of Susan Wixon's new book, "Right Living." See first page. It is now ready for delivery.

The contributions to the treasury of the National Reform Association amounted to nearly five hundred dollars for the week ending March 5th. The enemies of growth are activ and rich. The more they giv to destroy the guarantees of religious freedom the harder we must work to defeat them.

We are gratuitously informed that the God-in-the-Constitution amendment will, if adopted, "mark the proper boundaries of true liberty." So did the Inquisition. There was no true liberty while the Inquisition ruled. There will be none after this amendment becomes a fact. That is the way the "proper boundaries of true liberty" are "marked" by religious despots, always. Liberty is on one side of the boundary and Christian rule on the other.

The latest news we hav from Washington was contained in a letter written to the Editor by Mr. Putnam. The president of the Freethought Federation had not yet been able to get a hearing before the Judiciary Committee. He will present petitions and his argument in manuscript, and will also publish the argument immediately. He thinks that the unexpectedly strong opposition of the Freethinkers has blocked the game of the theocrats for the present. This is good news, and it once more shows us how important it is to be alive to the dangers that threaten and activ in the work of defense. Mr. Putnam hugs no delusion. He says:

"Of course we must not hold up, for this thing will be tried again. We must annihilate them; that is the only safety. It is well that I came here."

English Freethinkers are making the atmosphere quite sultry for Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, the constructor of the "Atheist Shoemaker" story. He was to speak at Newcastle on March 5th, and preparations were being made to distribute among his audience Mr. Foote's pamphlet exposing Mr. Hughes and his story. When he lectured at Bradford, Mr. J. W. Gott distributed six hundred copies of the Freethinker at the door. Mr. Foote's exposure of the Hughes pamphlet and of Mr. Holyoake's "vindication" of it cannot be printed fast enough to supply the demand. Probably three hundred thousand copies will be needed.

That stanch friend of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and wholesale disseminator of Liberal literature, Captain Silas Latham, receives this handsome notice in an article in the Sun describing bluefish catching off Cape Hatteras:

"Capt. 'Sile' Latham, in the crack smack Gertrude Summers, has been breasting the perils of Hatteras all winter in pursuit of the 'blues.' He is a most venturesome man, and is said to be absolutely without fear so far as the dangers of the sea are concerned. No chance seems too slim for him if he sees a prospect of winning. He comes from a long line of fishermen ancestors, and he has a fine vessel. Captain Latham has spent all of the cold months in the bluefish Mecca trying to make out where the fish go to and how they can be captured in piping cold January weather, when each fish would be worth a round sum."

The New York Examiner (Baptist), in the course of an article condemning the Sunday laws of Tennessee and Maryland, says:

"The Empire State has many defects, but we are proud to be citizens of a commonwealth where legal persecution of one denomination of Christians by others long ago ceased to be a possibility."

This felicitation was premature. One week ago last Sunday the members of St. Mary's church, Winfield, worshiped their God by taking part in and witnessing a performance of the Passion Play. Whereupon the Presbyterian minister of the town, backed by the Sunday Observance Society of this city, procured the arrest of several of the performers, and they were not released until the Catholics had promised that they would not again worship in that particular way.

We are requested by a committee of seven women to announce that all who desire to help the cause of equal suffrage will find at Sherry's during March and April, between nine and six o'clock, petitions to strike out of the constitution of the state of New York the word male as a qualification for voters. We do so cheerfully, at the same time taking occasion to remark that five of the seven committee-women hav failed to begin the reformation at home by striking the male given names out of their cognomens. We respectfully commend to the friendly attention of Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell, Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Mrs. J. Warren Goddard, Mrs. Robert Abbe, and Mrs. Henry M. Sanders a pleasant little anecdote told by "Our George." A man of clear thought, bearing the euphonious name of Charles Smith, one day received a letter addressed to "Mrs. Charles Smith," whereupon he at once seized his pen and wrote to his correspondent: "I object to being called 'Mrs.,' but if you mean my wife, her name is Jane."

On March 11, Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire, introduced in the House the bill offered by Senator Gallinger in the Senate for the suppression of Sunday labor, trade, and amusement in the District of Columbia. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. In the Senate it went to the Committee on Education and Labor. Last week we gave the names of the members of this committee. The members of the House Committee on the District of Columbia are: John T. Heard, Missouri, (chairman); J. D. Richardson, Tennessee; Harry Welles Rusk, Maryland; J. E. Cobb, Alabama; E. E. Meredith, Virginia; C. A. Cadmus, New Jersey; J. Abbott, Texas; G. W. Cooper, Indiana; C. M. Cooper, Florida; A. C. Harmer, Pennsylvania; P. S. Post, Illinois; William Cogswell, Massachusetts; J. J. Belden, New York; S. G. Hilborn, California; J. W. Babcock, Wisconsin.

Send in letters of remonstrance. A victory for the Sabbatarians in the District would be the entering wedge for a national Sunday law, to be introduced at this session. The District of Columbia belongs to all the people of the Union and we hav a right to demand that it be kept free from the rule of the Sabbatarians. Make yourselvs felt in the committee rooms.

On Sunday evening, February 4, the Passion Play was produced in St. Mary's Catholic church, Winfield, Long Island. There were fourteen scenes, beginning with Jesus in the garden and ending with the transfiguration. There does not appear to hav been anything in the exhibition to disturb the equanimity of well-balanced people, but the orthodox believers are greatly perturbed. The Independent says that "it ought not to hav been allowed"; Rev. Mr. Mallmann, pastor of the Presbyterian church in the village, talked the district attorney into issuing summonses for several of the performers; the Sunday Observance Society of New York contributed a letter to help bulldoze the officials, and it is announced that the grand jury will be asked to bring in some indictments. This is a purely sectarian squabble. One kind of Christians are shocked by the method employed by another kind to present the common "truths" of Christianity, and so they are trying to wield the Sunday law club in order to induce the erring brethren to take a proper view of the matter. Pastor Mallmann said that the play was both sacrilegious and illegal, and should be prohibited "for the good of the community." Its illegality is only an incident; because it is "sacrilegious" it has been made illegal in order that the community may be "protected"! Could there be a more distinct admission of clerical desire for and enjoyment of legislation in the interest of religion? What business has the law to take cognizance of such an "offense" as "sacrilege"? But of course there is "no danger" of priestly domination! The arrested Passion Play performers were arraigned before District-Attorney Noble. At the close of the examination he "lectured them severely, and scared them half out of their wits." If this is true the district-attorney is a cad, a very impudent one at that. What business has he lecturing people for attending to their own business? But the preachers and Sunday Observance knaves behind him, and who hav forced him to make this exhibition of himself, are worse than cads, even impudent cads.

FRANKLIN STEINER will return to the West the latter part of March, and wishes to make an extended tour of Iowa, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. Liberals in those states desiring lectures will address him at Box 882, Des Moines, Ia.

"LOCOMOTION, as Related to Life and Survival," was the interesting subject of Dr. M. L. Holbrook's lecture last Sunday before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association. He showed the evolution of locomotion, and how man, by his ability through his inventiv genius, having created an artificial locomotion, had been able to advance as he has. It was necessary for man to devise artificial locomotion, for if he did not, he would have perished in the struggle for existence, especially when competing with the brute creation. It was an evolution lecture in the full sense of the term, and the simplicity which characterizes the doctor's writings characterized this lecture. It was able, learned, and well worthy being heard.

To the Liberals of Long Island: Having, in conjunction with other Liberals, arranged for a lecture at this place by Franklin Steiner, on the evening of March 21st, at 8 o'clock, I hereby invite and request all Liberals of Long Island, or elsewhere, to attend. This will afford a good opportunity for the Liberals of the Island to become acquainted and establish fraternal relations with one another. Their presence will giv a prestige and moral support to the meeting, and be a source of enjoyment to all Liberals, who will thus hav the opportunity of hearing their principles declared and advocated by an able and accomplished speaker. Wantagh is on the southern, or Montauk, branch af the Long Island railroad, about twenty-seven miles from New York and Brooklyn. The 21st of March falls on Wednesday, so persons who desire to attend can hav the advantage of the late trains which run only on Wednesday and Saturday evenings.

Freethought and Secular Notes from England.

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

There is no lack of excitement at the present time throughout the United Kingdom. In all sections of society thought and expectation are at their hight. Theological audacity and falsehood hav been exposed; the non-representativ House of Lords has made its crowning effort to destroy the radical and Freethought work which took months of hard and persistent labor of the House of Commons to accomplish; the clerical party is still continuing its obstructiv tactics by endeavoring to contaminate the education of our public schools with the evils and follies of theological speculations; high dignitaries of the church are deploring the sad and wretched social condition that now exists in "Christian England," and those who profess to be reformers of the many abuses that now abound in this "Bible-reading" country are proclaiming that we are upon the eve of the greatest moral revolution that Great Britain has ever experienced. I confess that the "signs of the times" plainly indicate that such an expectation is not groundless, and it is certain that a fundamental change from the present disordered condition of affairs is an absolute necessity, if the happiness and welfare of the general masses are to become realities. Society to-day in England is rotten to its very core. Poverty, with its blighting effects; injustice, with its glaring inconsistencies; wealth, with its cruel monopoly, and theology, with its superstitions and withering pretensions, are wrecking our personal comfort and overshadowing our national glory. Fortunately, we recognize that a gleam of sunshine is penetrating through the dense clouds of our social life; and that ray of hope is the determination and activity of the working classes, who are now conscious that if redemption from the present evils of a priest-ridden and aristocrat-ruled nation is to be achieved, it must be won by the efforts of the people themselvs. They hav discovered that priests hav misled them, that governments hav deceived them, that their supposed representativs in Parliament hav betrayed them; therefore, having learned by bitter experience that their trust has been abused and their hopes hav been falsified, their patience has at last become exhausted and they are now resolved to use their own power to secure and to retain those rights which belong to every member of the community. My firm conviction for years has been that self-reliance is the grandest feature that can adorn individual character, and therefore I am more than gratified to see that the working classes of England are, in the present crisis, relying upon this noble characteristic. If they will but be firm in their present attitude the moral revolution upon which we are now entering will culminate in a solid and lasting triumph over theological dominancy and aristocratic monopoly.

A COMPLETE EXPOSÉ OF THE REV. H. P. HUGHES.

In my last "Notes" reference was made to the excitement which had then just been caused by the appearance of a report in a Christian journal that Mr. G. J. Holyoake had investigated the story which was concocted five years ago, and which stated that the Rev. H. P. Hughes had converted an "Atheist shoemaker." Notwithstanding that many efforts had been made to obtain proofs of the truth of this story, none were given. The reverend gentleman found that his veracity was questioned and that even among his own friends a strong feeling existed that his persistent silence upon the subject gave cause for suspicion as to the truth of the "pious tale." Ultimately Mr. Holyoake was induced by Mr. Hughes to "investigate" the matter, which investigation resulted, it was alleged, in a "vindication" of the reverend gentleman. It is said that "out of evil cometh good," and undoubtedly it has been so in this case, as the sequel will show. On hearing of the remarkable proceedings upon the part of Mr. Holyoake, Mr. G. W. Foote immediately commenced a real investigation, and, as it was expected, the story turns out to be a pure fabrication. The father and brothers (who are professed Christians) of the man who was said to hav been "converted" hav come forward and they hav publicly declared that he never was an Atheist, and that the account given by the Rev. H. P. Hughes was absolutely false. Mr. Foote has obtained undoubted facts which prove that the alleged "conversion" was another of those "pious frauds" that hav from time to time been perpetrated for the "glory of God." What course Mr. Holyoake will take, now that he finds he has been caught with theological guile, is not known at the date of my writing. As for the Rev. H. P. Hughes, his action, now that he has been found out, is as cowardly as it was before questionable. He declines to reply to Mr. Foote because his (Mr. Hughes's) honor and veracity hav been impeached. Could orthodox audacity go further? Here is a "pious servant of the Lord" who for five years has been trading on a barefaced falsehood of his own concoction, grossly deceiving his credulous followers, and after his wickedness has been fully exposed and his falsehoods completely refuted he tries to shelter himself behind a "dignified silence." But he will not be permitted to do so, for go where he will throughout the country he will be publicly reminded of his first shameful "sin of commission" and then of his cowardly "sin of omission" in not publicly repenting of the evil he has done. We are sorry to find that the English Methodists hav among them such a sad specimen of "human depravity" as the Rev. H. P. Hughes undoubtedly is; and we would remind this preacher of the "gospel of truth" that, if Rev. xxi, 8, be accurate in its statement, a fearful doom awaits him.

SECULARISM CONTINUES PROSPEROUS IN ENGLAND.

Among the encouraging "signs of the times" is the fact that at all Freethought lectures throughout the provinces, as well as in London, the attendances are large and the enthusiasm of the listeners is most hearty. It is true discussion at these meetings is very rare, but the various preachers find it a trump card to refer to Secular lectures in the announcements of their sermons and from their pulpits. To show the interest that is manifested in the National Secular Society it may be mentioned that the "Shilling Fund," started by Mr. Foote in aid of Secular propaganda, has been well responded to from all parts of the country. Subscribers to the Hall of Science Company, which has for its object the securing of a memorial to the late Mr. Bradlaugh, also continue to increase. The Freethinker, although its price has been doubled, has still an increasing circulation, and its readers are not confined to Great Britain and Ireland, but they are to be found in most of the civilized cities of the world. It has been previously mentioned in these "Notes" that last year a prosecution was threatened at Portsmouth for charging for admission to Secular lectures on Sundays. It came to nothing, although the president of the National Secular Society challenged the bigots to proceed. Mr. Foote has again visited the same town to test the courage of the would-be prosecutors, but they deem the discretion of doing nothing "the better part of valor." The Christian faith must indeed hav fallen low when its conductors deem it necessary to threaten to resort to a musty old act of Parliament, passed in the days when every person who dared to criticise religion was liable to be made amenable to any pious magistrate whose first consideration was the interest of the church. Thanks to the spread of Secular ideas, the orthodox enthusiast can bark, but he dare not bite. Probably the desire to persecute still exists in many theological quarters, but it is kept in abeyance by the power of Freethought, which is not only stronger within our own ranks than ever it was, but it is rapidly gaining force in numerous religious circles. This encourages us to persist in our vigorous work, and it also inspires us with hope that mental freedom will ere long still further overcome intellectual servitude.

ORTHODOXY AND A FREE SUNDAY.

When we assert that orthodox Christians are opposed to the cultivation of the intellect and to social refinement, we are indignantly informed that it is not so. But let us test the question practically. Last year the English bishops met in convocation, and the subject was raised as to the opening of libraries and art galleries on the "Lord's day," which it is well known is the pagan day of the sun. It is rather curious, by the way, that the sun should be supposed to be against everything else shining, although it shines itself on that particular day. The Bishop of London (Dr. Temple, of the "Essays and Reviews" fame) declared that the opening of such institutions on Sunday would "greatly shock" artisans and manual laborers. But to make doubly sure he suggested that a vote should be taken upon the subject. The "Lord's Day Observance Society" took the matter up, and we hav now their report. They invited an expression of opinion from working-class communicants, Sunday-school teachers, members of Bible classes, regular attendants at religious services, and others, and care was taken that the inquiry should be made when parochial and congregational organizations were in vigorous operation. Of the replies received, seventy-four per cent were unanimously against Sunday opening. Twenty-one per cent showed a majority "against," five per cent showed a majority "for," and none were unanimously "for." It will be observed that in this sham inquiry no figures are given, but only the percentage. Thus, supposing the Sabbatarians had obtained one hundred votes, not any five of them were in favor of studying on Sundays even the works of that God who they believe made the animals, plants, and minerals, that are to be found in our magnificent museums, and yet we are told that Christians are always in favor of the cultivation of the intellect. The fact is, however, the church has ever been and still is in favor of mental recreation only when it is supposed to strengthen the belief in its own creeds and dogmas.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC SOCIAL ARMY.

We hav long had in England Salvation and Church armies, and now we are promised a Roman Catholic Social army, which it is stated is to be formed and put into the field by Cardinal Vaughan, archbishop of Westminster. According to announcement, the object of these soldiers of the mother church is not proselytizing, but social reform. They are to inquire into the financial and home affairs of the dwellers in the houses they visit. Now, if we could persuade ourselvs that the real aim of this new army was to relieve distress and to provide better homes for the poor than they at present possess, we should wish the soldiers every success, Catholics though they be. But unfortunately, we are too well aware of the Jesuitical policy of "the only true church" to hav any faith in its purely secular work, apart from religious considerations. The one object of Roman Catholics is to make converts, fairly if possible, but make them they must at any cost. We fear this new move is but a disguised plan to get at the poor through their stomachs. Evidently the Catholic church feels the truth of Pindar's words:

> The turnpike road to man's heart, I find,
> Lies through his stomach, or I mistake mankind.

CATHOLIC PRETENSIONS.

Cardinal Vaughan has just visited Birmingham, and from a speech he delivered on the occasion, we can well understand the training that he will giv his army. He said people outside his fold were "profoundly ignorant of the teachings and doings of his church." The truth is, we know sufficient of its history to justify us in believing that any extension of its power must prove detrimental to the liberties of mankind. We quite agreed with the cardinal when he said that, "as education was spread among the people, they would be inclined to put aside the rule of faith in order to liv simply by the rule of reason." But this is exactly what this "light of the church" does not want; hence, to avoid such a desirable result, he advises that special efforts should be made to "permeate" the minds of men with the doctrins of his church. Will not this be one of the principal "marching orders" of his army? The cardinal further said that the Roman church "had always maintained the dignity, power, and authority of reason; that it was created by God and planted in man to be his light and guide." These words taken by themselvs read as if they were remarkably liberal. "But"—there is generally a "but" or an "if" in any Roman Catholic avowal—the cardinal continued, "the church always held · · · reason was not independent or self-sufficient · · · in all matters which pertained to the life to come. It was capable of being deceived." Of this latter statement we hav no doubt, and probably the speaker spoke with authority at least upon this point. What, however, in the cardinal's opinion, is to protect our reason from being deceived? Here it is: "God had left a divine teacher in the world, none other than the holy Roman Catholic church founded by Jesus Christ on the Apostle Peter, whose successors had come down through centuries." This supreme nonsense will no doubt be an additional order for the new army. But I am not inclined to hav my reason "deceived" by such fallacies as are here propounded, and therefore I impeach this self-styled Apostolic church as being in all ages of its existence the persistent destroyer of reason, and the relentless murderer of some of the bravest of thinkers who preferred to follow the legitimate promptings of what it is said God gave them as "a guide and light."

MY IMPEACHMENT VERIFIED.

A great mission has been going on for some time in the Catholic churches of Westminster and throughout London during Lent. One hundred and fifty of the most distinguished preachers amongst the Jesuits, Dominicans, Capuchins, Franciscans, Marists, Oblates, Augustinians, and other religious orders took part in the services, and a Lenten pastoral by Cardinal Vaughan was read, in which he said: "The dangers of London life were always great, but they are far greater to-day than they ever were. The sharpening of the intellect by schooling and popular literature and the growth of Rationalism, Communism, and Atheism, by the decay of religion, hav rendered the dangers to Catholic youth far more subtle, far more penetrating, far more formidable than they were in the days of greater ignorance and poverty." It will be here seen that my impeachment is verified, for the days of "ignorance and poverty" are evidently preferred by the cardinal to the present time of intellectual progress. This proves that the Roman church is still the enemy of reason and freedom, and as such it is one of the principal "dangers" to be guarded against.

THE BISHOPS AND THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

The majority of the English House of Lords are Tories, and it is well known that they hav it in their power to dispose of certain beneficies among the clergy. The bishops, knowing this, are with very few exceptions the firm allies of the lords in their obstructiv policy toward progressiv legislation. There is no doubt that ere long the question of the disestablishment of the English church will become what is called in England one of "practical politics." The Welsh and Scotch churches are already threatened, and what John Bright termed the "adulterous" connection with the state is to be abolished The bishops understand this, and therefore they feel the need of help from all their friends. This is one reason why they hav joined the lords in rejecting the progressiv measures that hav recently been passed by the Commons. The Parish Councils bill has just been mutilated in a most disgraceful manner by the combined efforts of the lords and bishops. Briefly the facts are these. The representativs of the people in the House of Commons decreed that there should be local government in every parish with a population of two hundred. The House of parsons and landlords has practically said that in at least four thousand parishes the rule of the parson and squire shall continue. In the teeth of the People's House, which decreed that all the new governing bodies should be electiv, the House of landlords has said that the rotten system of outside nomination shall endure. Then the House of landlords and bishops, emphasizing the familiar connection of beer and the peerage and beer and the state-aided Bible, decreed that the public house should be the center of village life. Worst of all, like a gang of misers shielding ill-gotten gear, they hav, on a motiv of avowed and unblushing self-interest, shut the door of the laborer to the land. If the laborer wishes an acre of ground he must pass a special act of Parliament for himself before he can get it, and it may cost him anything under £2000. The church has laid up a reckoning with landlord aid. It has managed to keep its greedy hand in the patronage of the village doles. It has shut its schools, which it calls upon the public to maintain, against the parish as a meeting-place, and it has also succeeded in filching from the community every public building, no matter what, of which the parson or his officers, in Lord Selborne's phrasing, may either alone or with others chance to be acting as trustees. In future, every such building, if the bill were to pass, would be declared by law an ecclesiastical edifice. Nor is that all the account of the establishment. To its jealousy Londoners hav mainly to ascribe the fact that the provision for parochial reform in the metropolis, which is groaning for light on its institutions, has been thrown out. Such is the work of English lords and bishops. Every measure of first-rate importance that has been introduced by the present government has encountered the savage hostility of the peers, aided by the bishops. Home Rule, Betterment, Employer's Liability, and Parish Councils hav fallen in turn under their lordly displeasure. Where a bill was not contumeliously kicked downstairs it was distorted into complete unlikeness to its original self. Our American friends may rejoice to know that at last the people are aroused to a sense of their duty. For at the time of writing an agitation is going on throughout the country for the abolition of the House of Lords, and with its fall the bishops will cease to obstruct the carrying out of the expressed wish of the nation.

THE CHURCH AND THE MASSES.

It is quite refreshing to discover even one man in the church whose mental vision is sufficiently clear to enable him to see things as they are, and who has the moral courage to condemn the very institution from which he derives his support. Such a man we hav in Canon Scott Holland, who has just preached a Lent sermon, in which he impeached commercial morality, upbraided the rich squire and the greedy lawyer, and assailed his own church as "an organization and a national institution, which had yielded so often to the impulse of self-interest, and had suffered itself to arrive at a position where it had become the very by-word for arrogance and merciless ambition." Again, he spoke of the church showing itself "to the masses of English workers in country and town, now at the very crisis of their fate, as the symbol of all that was aloof from their life, the type of all that was privileged and propertied, and jealous, and unsympathetic, and least like Christ." These are brave words to come from a parson. Rarely is denunciation so strong and true heard from any responsible quarter—least of all from the church's own ranks. And since a parson holds it needful to speak so boldly and bluntly of his own class, it is plainly shown how hopelessly out of touch with the mass of the social community the church must hav become.

THE MARRIAGE QUESTION.

Archbishop Macdonald, of Scotland, has issued a pastoral address in which he alludes to marriage as being "raised to the dignity of a sacrament," and that it was a contract which, when "once formed, could not be severed but by death." Further, he urged that the contracting parties should both belong to the "holy mother church." In case of "mixed" marriages, the husband and wife "could hardly fail to be tainted with that fatal spirit of so-called liberalism, which, with mistaken charity, placed all creeds on an equality, and proclaimed that it mattered not what they believed, provided their lives were regulated bv a spirit of kindliness toward their fellow-men. There could not, in these circumstances, be that true reflection of the virtues and peace of the holy family" at Nazareth which the holy father wished to see realized in every Catholic home. This may be a religious idea of marriage, but it is far from being a good one. Many lives hav been blighted, and the happiness of homes wrecked, through a forced continuation of a union of two persons who had been unwisely mated. Hence the law of divorce has been found to be a good one, inasmuch as in many instances it has rescued men and women from what might hav been a life-time of pain and misery. Besides, the archbishop's notion of marriage is based upon the supposition that love can be had at command. It cannot, for conjugal love is a growth or an inspiration evoked by kindred feelings in two natures. In the absence of this reciprocal feeling passion may exist, but not real love. And surely, if "a spirit of kindliness" prevailed in the domestic circle, that ought to prevent the evils of "creeds." We should like to hav been told where the "peace of the holy family of Nazareth" was to be seen. It was not manifested in the actions of its hero, who, it is said, ran away from his parents and caused them days and nights of anxiety; nor in his general conduct, which was so turbulent that his own brothers thought he was mad. The Catholic idea of a home, with a virgin mother, a miracle-working baby, and a husband who was not sure that he was father of his "first-born," may suit the archbishop, but it does not come up to my ideal of domestic felicity.

SEVERAL BRIEF FACTS OF INTEREST.

The Gifford lectures delivered in February at Edinburgh were by Professor Pfleiderer, of Berlin. His first lecture was upon "Christianity," in which he pictured the orthodox conception of its nature and origin, and asked: "But was all this intelligibly conceivable history? No." He pointed out that the first account of Jesus was oral, and, therefore, exactness could not be retained; moreover, Jesus had been "transfigured, beautified, and idealized by the unconsciously working fantasy." In reference to the gospels he puts that ascribed to Mark first, and the one bearing the name of Matthew last. The professor's statements will not be very acceptable to orthodox believers.

Some time since a royal commission was appointed to formulate a scheme for establishing a university for London. It may perhaps be necessary to explain that the present London University is not one in the same sense as those of Oxford and Cambridge. Useful as the London one has been, it is only a kind of office for the registration of the qualifications of students who hav studied in various parts of the united kingdom. It teaches nothing, but only examins the taught. It is now intended to erect a magnificent institution, to be conducted on secular lines, as it will be open to all, irrespectiv of creed or no creed. And thus we progress despite the church.

A memorial to Darwin, the distinguished naturalist and Freethinker, is contemplated at Shrewsbury, where he was born. Some years ago the grammar school of that town at which Darwin was educated was transformed into a public library subscribed for by the inhabitants of the town and neighborhood, and a statue of Darwin was to be placed in front, but for some reason or other the scheme was not carried out. The subject is again revived by the mayor of Shrewsbury, and in addition to this memorial it is suggested that a Hall of Science should be built in which Darwinian principles shall be expounded. Some years ago Mr. C. C. Cattell wrote to the local press proposing that a portion of the public library should be specially devoted to Darwinian literature.

On the stone in Stratford church over Shakspere's grave are certain imprecations against whomsoever should attempt to move the poet's bones. The words are, "Cursed be he," and it was supposed that such a style of cursing was original, but an article in Macmillan's for February shows that religion, long before Shakspere's time, played a great part in the cursing business. Some of the inscriptions on the gravestones of the Christians are said to hav been horrible in their ferocity, as when the violater of the tomb is told that he "will be accursed of God and man forever." In another case the offender is threatened with the curse of all the fathers of the Nicene council. "He that throws rubbish in this inclosure," the inscription runs, "has the anathema from the three hundred and eighteen fathers as an enemy of God."

The agitation among the laborers of Great Britain continues to be as vigorous as ever. A few days ago Mr. Tom Mann addressed a large assembly in Perth, when we are glad to see that he mentioned co-operation as a possible remedy for many of our present evils. He attributed nine-tenths of the crime in the midst of us to the poverty that now so extensivly prevails on this side of the Atlantic. According to his estimate there are over five millions of the laboring class in this country existing in a state of either semi or actual starvation. He also complained that although knowledge and wealth had increased, "the standard of life among workers has improved very little indeed." No doubt the advance has been exceedingly slow comparativly, but I hav faith that the improvement of the condition of the masses will go on more rapidly in the future for the reason that the people hav now taken reform into their own hands.

The rebuilding of Gough square in the city of London necessitates the demolition of the house in which Dr. Johnson was born. It was in the garret of No. 17 in this square that with the aid of his amanuensis the doctor wrote his famous Dictionary of the English language. It was here also that his wife died and that he was arrested for debt. The house stands almost opposit the printing-office of Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court.

Since my last Notes were written, Mr. William Holyoake, the artist, brother of Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, has died. He was buried at Highgate cemetery, and at the request of his son and daughter the "Father of Secularism" spoke over the grave of his last brother. Many members of the Royal Academy of Artists, of which Mr. Holyoake was a member, were present. William Holyoake was a quiet, kindly-disposed man, and was highly respected by all who knew him. From his early days he was a Freethinker.

I hav not space left to giv particulars of the fight now going on in the London school board between the progressiv party and the exponents of theology. It will be a desperate fight, and in my next communication I will endeavor to giv the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER a full account of the conflict.

Birmingham, Eng. CHARLES WATTS.

"Christ built no church, wrote no book, left no money, and erected no monuments; yet show me ten square miles in the whole earth where Christianity is not, and where the life of man and the purity of woman are respected, and I will giv up Christianity."—Lowell.

The inference is that in Christian countries the life of man and the purity of woman are respected to a degree not known elsewhere. What is there to support this assumption? Look at the standing armies of millions of men. See the great armaments on the seas. Note the enormous slaughter of employees and passengers by railroads. Take account of the private murders and lynchings. Gaze upon the thousands of prostitutes in every Christian city and the Christian men who support them. Observe the frantic efforts of Christian publicists and preachers to prevent freedom of divorce. Open your eyes to the frenzied struggles of various societies to keep the people in physiological ignorance, the prolific mother of impurity, and then tell us if the "heathen" lands can, on the average, show us a worse condition of affairs as respects both crimes of violence and physical and mental impurity.

News and Notes from Washington.

The Christian party made a determined effort to put God into the Constitution last Tuesday. They rallied their forces before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representativs. The room was crowded, mostly with women and clergymen. They claimed that they could hav filled the Capitol to overflowing if they had only been given the chance. They had telegrams, petitions, and letters by the hundred. One letter was from Dr. Miner, Universalist clergyman of Boston, in favor of the Amendment. I am ashamed of Dr. Miner. He ought to know better. His own denomination in times past has suffered bitter persecution from the orthodox party, and yet he is willing to put a club into the Constitution which will one day strike down his Liberal Christianity.

All the arguments before the committee were based on old-fashioned orthodoxy. Listening, I imagined myself back in the days of Jonathan Edwards. There was not a scintilla of modern thought. It was the orthodox God, the orthodox Bible, and the orthodox Christ that they wanted to put in. Most of the speeches were exhortations in the old Methodist style. It was really like a prayer-meeting. Such a mass of absurd statements I never heard before on such an occasion. You would think that even Christians might discuss universal principles before a Judiciary Committee, and not indulge in the platitudes of a revival. There were about a dozen ministers present and they occupied all the time. They didn't giv us any chance to reply. The speeches occupied about ten minutes each, and they were not speeches but sermons. They argued from existing abuses that there ought to be more abuses. Because there were chaplains, and "In God we Trust" on the coin, therefore we ought to put God into the Constitution. Jesus was the "God-Man," said one, and therefore by all means he ought to be in the Constitution. The state is a person, therefore the state ought to hav religion, etc. The hearing occupied about two hours, and then the committee adjourned. Only seven out of nineteen were present. We asked for a hearing on our side, but as no quorum was present the matter could not be settled then.

I hav conferred with the committee, and so far as I can judge a majority are opposed to the amendment. No action has yet been taken. I shall remain here a week to watch the course of affairs. I hav prepared and submitted my argument and petitions to the committee, which is all that can be done for the time being. The Christian party addressed a sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee; but I understand that even that subcommittee is opposed to the amendment. The Christian party has quite a number of activ supporters in the House and Senate and through these they obtain privileges of addressing committees, which hav not yet been granted to us. "Rising Sun Stove Polish" Morse, of Massachusetts, is spreading himself with a great deal of alacrity. But notwithstanding this the Christian party has met with a saddening failure. We might say they hav simply been ignored. They hav had only two hours before the House committee, and only seven out of nineteen attended; and they did not even get a chance before the Senate committee, and only had one hour before a sub-committee. They are a pertinacious set, however, and don't realize when they hav been sat down upon. They declare that they will never surrender, and I do not think they will, for they are fanatics of the first order, and therefore we must always be ready to meet them. I certainly shall not allow them to steal any march upon us. I hav been promised an opportunity to address the committee if need be. At any rate, I shall publish my argument, for now is the time to agitate. One of the members of the committee remarked to me that this was "wild-cat business;" and that seems to be about the way that most Congressman look upon it. But it is not wise to despise a foe, no matter how ridiculous he may appear, when that foe is a determined one and means to keep up the fight. There are some members of the Judiciary Committee who are intensely in favor of this amendment. One remarked that he had received hundreds of messages in its favor and only four against it, and two of these four, he said, came from lunatic asylums, whereat the ecclesiastics had a great laugh. This only shows, however, that some lunatics know more than some Congressmen.

While looking through the book-stores I came across three lectures on the Constitution by Justice Miller, who is, of course, a high authority. On one point I received a great deal of light. It is the common impression that the Supreme Court is the expounder of the Constitution, and that its decision is binding upon all until reversed by the court itself. Justice Miller says this is not so—that the Supreme Court can interpret the Constitution only for itself, but not for the legislativ and executiv departments. According to this the Supreme Court can never make this government a Christian government, no matter how many favorable decisions it makes on that point. The Supreme Court can not expound the Constitution universally, only particularly—that is, in regard to some case before it, but outside of that case the decision has no binding authority. I consider this limitation of the function of the Supreme Court of vast importance, and I put the statement of Justice Miller on record, for it strips the Supreme Court of a tremendous power and entirely destroys the Christian assumption that a decision of the Supreme Court can ever make this a Christian government:

"It is a delusion, it is a mistake, the idea that the Supreme Court of the United States was created with one of its special functions to interpret and construe the Constitution. I say while, however, it is the special function of the courts to construe the Constitution in a judicial proceeding, with parties properly before them, it is equally the duty of each member of Congress and the executiv to make that construction for himself when he is called to act within the sphere of his duty. I think myself I hav changed one of my beliefs of early life when I used to think that when a Marshall and his compeers had decided that the bank of the United States was a financial institution authorized by the Constitution of the United States, the legislativ and executiv branches should also concede the fact. I am prepared to admit, that while they are bound to consider that in that particular—that is, his execution of the law as between the parties—all the other branches of the government must yield. Yet when it comes to the conscience of any member of Congress, or any executiv, to say 'Can I sign a bill?' or 'Can I vote for a measure?' it is for him to decide on the best lights he has, whether the act he is going to do is within the constitutional power of the body of which he is a member."

The Supreme Court can only interpret the Constitution for itself, in it own sphere, but it cannot interpret the Constitution for the executiv or legislativ departments or for the people at large. No decision of a Supreme Court can ever make this a Christian government. No president, no Congressman, and no citizen would be bound by any such decision, except, of course, the parties in suit before the court.

This takes away one of the chief weapons of the Christian party; for it has been their avowed purpose to use the Supreme Court to make this a Christian government, and they hav, to a certain extent, succeeded, and there is danger that some day they might secure the entire Supreme Court; but even if they did, the Supreme Court could not enthrone Christianity in the Constitution.

Moody has been holding monster revival meetings here for the last month—eight and ten thousand present afternoon and evening. There is a lot of music and jingle about it. I went the last night. It was rather tedious. The services lasted two hours. Moody spoke only half an hour. The rest was filled in with singing and praying. Moody preached about the prophet who brought fire from heaven; and to show that there was no mistake about it, he poured upon the altar twelve barrels of water. Now, Moody says that for three years and six months there was neither dew nor rain in that land—all the rivers and springs were dried up, he said. Where did those twelve barrels of water come from? I think water must hav been pretty scarce. I don't believe a barrel would be left anywhere. I don't wonder at the fire from heaven. Most anything would burn with no dew or rain for three years and six months. It's the water that puzzles me.

I hav received word from Mrs. Van Hoeter, of Grass Valley, Cal., that her husband is dead. He was a stanch Liberal, and died and was buried without priest or church. Grass Valley was one of the first places that I went to in California, and I shall not forget the hospitable welcome of Mrs. Van Hoeter. They endeavored to make this world happy. After a long life, our friend has passed away. There is no shadow over the grave. The flowers of memory bloom there.

And another stanch friend is gone. A. Schell, of Knight's Ferry, over whose grave W. F. Freeman spoke the words of remembrance. Mr. Schell was an ardent Freethinker; and both in the East and West his eloquent voice has been heard. He was always ready to help. Our brave comrades are now at rest, but we must keep marching on, in the way that lighted them to peaceful sleep.

The Press and the Platform.

Immediately after the publication of my book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," I wish to enter upon a thorough Freethought campaign throughout the country. The times demand it. There was never greater danger than at present. What is needed is agitation and education. On every side there are signs of ecclesiastical aggression. The church powers, through the facilities of corrupt politics, are surely and almost without resistance encroaching upon the liberties of the people. A long and hard battle is before us for human rights. The first thing to be done is to enlighten the people in the principles of American government, of justice and freedom, of humanity and progress. The glorious principles of Freethought must be declared in their universal application. The clear light of reason must illuminate the message of science, of equality and fraternity.

This requires a determined effort. It requires perseverance, courage, energy, and generosity. It requires steady work all along the lines, in every locality. Wherever there is a handful of Freethinkers they should do something. They should arrange for at least one lecture, if not more, in their community. Let this be done all over the country, and a great advance will be made. There will be a vast power in such a general and united effort.

The platform and the press must work together in this great enterprise. The word spoken and the word printed each has its own influence. The lecture arouses as the book cannot; but the book educates through silent days and in the depths of thought as the lecture cannot. It is my purpose in the important campaign which I now undertake to combine these two in a method not before adopted, and which I believe will give new and far greater success to our cause. I am sure that the Liberals of this country will see the immense advantages of the plan proposed, and will do their level best to make it a brilliant triumph in every state in the Union. Of course I must be amply supported by Liberal friends or I cannot carry it through to the great results which certainly can be reached if there is cordial co-operation. What I propose is this: To give lectures at the usual reasonable rates, and in addition to the lecture to donate a certain amount of books, to be used by the Liberals who pay for the lecture as campaign literature for their own benefit and the education of the community in which the lecture is given. In this way the lecture will leave behind a permanent and extending influence. My terms, therefore, are as follows:

For $12 I will give one lecture and $4 worth of books; for $30, three lectures and $13 worth of books; for $50, five lectures and $22 worth of books; for $60, six lectures and $30 worth of books; or $100, ten lectures and $60 worth of books. These books are to be publications of the Truth Seeker Publishing Company, Investigator, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, and other Liberal publishing houses; Ingersoll's works, Washburn's, Watts's, Remsburg's, Shaw's, Putnam's, etc.—Freethought and scientific literature. I shall pay my traveling expenses, but I shall expect board to be provided for me at every lecture point. It would be impossible for me to pay hotel expenses at these rates.

It will be seen that the only way by which I can successfully carry out this method of lecturing is to have a large number of appointments; at least five hundred—better one thousand. This will probably be the last extensive campaign that I shall make in this country, and I want to devote at least two solid years to the work. I want to go into every state in the Union and to every place where there is a handful of Liberals. I want to make this a campaign both of agitation and education; I want to create a pervading and growing influence, and this comes by means of the books. If I give five hundred or a thousand lectures on these terms, thousands of dollars' worth of Liberal books will be distributed all over the land, and this cannot be done in any other way than as I propose. What a tremendous influence this will be for many years to come!

I hope that wherever possible Liberals will arrange for six lectures. In this way they will get $30 worth of books, which will form a splendid nucleus for a Freethought circulating library. Besides, it takes about six lectures to thoroughly arouse a community, and it takes that number of lectures to adequately explain Freethought in its relations to life, philosophy, science, politics, and human happiness and progress.

It is understood that these lectures are to be given consecutively. I must lecture every night to pay my way, and Sundays must always be counted for two lectures; one in the daytime, and one in the evening. It is only by continuous labor that I can make both ends meet.

When two or three lecture points are a few miles apart, they can join forces for six or ten lectures at the rates above, provided that all my traveling expenses are paid from point to point in this combination.

I shall not be able to enter upon this campaign until the first of June next, on account of business connected with the publication and distribution to subscribers of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought;" but between now and that date I want at least three hundred lecture appointments, and I earnestly ask those Liberals who think of accepting these splendid offers to write me at once, for although I may not be able to visit their field immediately, yet by knowing beforehand what lectures I am to give throughout the country, I can arrange to do so at the least possible traveling expense, and it is by thus having three or four hundred lectures on my list that I am enabled to make such excellent rates, for what I thus save in travel is put into the books.

It is understood that Liberals who pay for the lectures will make their own selection of books, only they must be strictly Freethought and scientific books. I cannot afford to make these rates for any other kind of literature.

The following are the titles of the ten lectures I shall give during this campaign:

"Rights of Man."
"The Religious Conspiracy."
"Liberalism and Christianity."
"Freethought and Morality."
"Evolution and Creation."
"The Bible and Modern Thought."
"Spiritualism, Theosophy, and Freethought."
"Liberty and Authority."
"Ethics of Jesus."
"Geology and Genesis."

Now, I hope that the Liberals of America will accept this magnificent method of work and push forward with fresh enthusiasm to larger fields of effort. I set my mark at one thousand lectures for this campaign. That will distribute over $5,000 worth of books. Think of it! Rally. Let there be a memorable advance. Write at the earliest moment to

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Observations.

The American Eagle flew high and yelled properly when the administration's proposal to restore the Kanaka queen to her sandwich throne was repudiated as a policy of infamy. The eagle, especially the spread-eagle, favors the annexation of Hawaii and the pensioning of the queen and princess. But the cause of monarchy is not extinct. The same statesmen who thought it unamerican and undemocratic to right the wrong this nation has done the queen of Hawaii are now urging an amendment to the Federal Constitution recognizing a back number local deity as the ruler of the United States. The eagle, especially the spread-eagle, likes the amendment; but having a military record he prefers to see the kingdom of heaven annexed to some Northern state, and the reigning monarch and heir apparent liberally pensioned.

The Boston Investigator through its financial editor makes this announcement:

We see that the government can buy forty-six cents' worth of silver and pass it upon the people for a dollar;—That if a citizen were to do the same thing he would be locked up for a rascal.

Not necessarily, Ernest; not necessarily. You may hav noticed that you can buy forty cents' worth of white paper, print fifty-two numbers of the Investigator on it, and mail the same to a subscriber for three dollars. You are doing exactly "the same thing" as the government so far as circumstances will permit, but I understand you are still at large and enjoying a reputation for business integrity.

A few years ago a picture dealer in New York was arrested and locked up by Anthony Comstock for selling photographs of an actress in tights. About the same time a crusade was inaugurated against similar photographs in packages of tobacco and cigarets; but there is money behind the tobacco business and the crusade was not successful. Millions of the photographs hav been distributed; the country is tired and surfeited with them; they are so common that they could not be disposed of for one cent per dozen; and the picture for selling which Conroy went to jail is so inferior to these others in wickedness and consequent attractivness that it has no place except as dead stock. Now what a different thing would hav occurred had Comstock's crusade accomplished the object of suppressing the sale of these pictures. Instead of becoming harmless, and falling into the contempt bred of familiarity, they would still retain the power to corrupt and would hold their place as one of the dangers threatening the foundations of society.

If Anthony Comstock and a few other professional meddlers would kindly pay the debt of nature, we should hav more lessons like that taught by the photographs alluded to. For example, there is Herr Most, the wild-eyed revolutionary Anarchist, several times arrested for using explosiv language, and at present the object of police surveillance. Last Sunday night Most spoke at a meeting held to commemorate the assassination of Czar Alexander of Russia, and in the course of his remarks took occasion to say that the present Alexander deserved the fate of his predecessor. Now the New York Sun says that such language should not be permitted, as this country is on "excellent terms" with Russia. I expect it is true that America is on hugging terms with the czar's country, where all gratifying progress comes through assassination, but it is not to our credit. Amicable relations with the leading criminal of Europe is nothing to boast of. Herr Most is a ranter and his language is awful, but he has never committed robbery or taken human life. The czar, on the other hand, exists only by virtue of his power to kill and rob all who oppose him. John Most is a gentleman as compared with Alexander of Russia; also as compared with any American who wants to lock him up for speaking his mind. Let him alone. He is not wound up forever, and when he has talked himself out he will be as innocuous as the cigaret photograph.

Without fear of successful contradiction I claim the Prophet of Gowanus as my discovery. Years ago after putting some of his manuscript in type, I wrote him that a person with a hand like his should not be lost to the printers. His copy is as pretty, almost, as a greenback, and his spelling is good. If he criticises my "poetry," and calls its stanzas "verses," I can easily forgiv him. He should remember, though, that my lines were suggested by his own remarks, and in view of the inspiration he ought to be charitable. Still his fervor has led him to make assertions that I cannot agree with; as when he says that a question which goes to the root of my belief is answered with four verses (verse means line) of doggerel. I want to remind him that the only thing he had said respecting my belief was that I furnished a spectacle for gods and men whenever I alluded, even casually, to the finance question, and I want to add that his remark does not go to the root of any belief held by me. I hav no information, and, therefore, no convictions, as to the way the gods are pleased to regard the subscriber. The Prophet's language conveys no idea to my mind. It is not an intelligible statement, and I did not regard it as a proposition worthy of serious discussion. Hence the four "verses."

The Prophet's suggestion about studying the finance question reminds me of an illustration which appears frequently in THE TRUTH SEEKER, representing a priest directing a peasant's attention toward an apparition of the Virgin and at the same time deftly inserting his hands in the pockets of the spectator. If I were a politician and desirous of escaping criticism while filching from the populace, I should certainly advise people to bury their faces deep in some elaborate treatis on money. While they were so engaged, like ostriches with their heads in the sand, I should improve the opportunity to get in my work. Of course we all know that it is bad form for anybody except a prophet or professor of political economy to object to robbery. Citizens clubbed by the police are wholly unscientific if they protest before they hav read Huxley on astynomocracy. Being knocked down or held up or kicked into the gutter, it is a sufficient answer to their complaint to point out that they hav not studied, even elementarily, the science of assault and battery. A man who has not paid attention to works on swimming has no grievance, according to the Prophet, if he is thrown into water; the dampness is an illusion due to his ignorance. Likewise none but a doctor of divinity is qualified to express a doubt that Jonah swallowed the whale. Under such a system the right to warble would reside only with the learned class, composed of persons like Mr. Roscoe. while Brother John Peck and myself must withhold our remarks and look happy.

I am more than pleased to be regarded as a butterfly. and any time when Mr. Roscoe can come to New York I shall be gratified to light on him.

For the Cause—It Will Help.

WALSH STATION, CAL., Feb. 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed a money order for $5 for one year's subscription to the paper and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." The extra dollar for the cause. It will help a little.

Yours truly, JOS. M. FRALEY.

What Every Freethinker Wants.

WOODSTOCK, N. B., Feb. 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find order for $6.65 to pay for my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER and take advantage of your grand offer of S. P. Putnam's "Four Hundred years of Freethought." That is just what every Freethinker wants at times as a reference. Wishing the cause every success, I am, T. T. DENT.

Bigotry Rampant.

BIXBY, Feb. 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $4 50 to renew subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Do not giv the clerical cranks any quarter. Show the people how they are being deceived by them. The Methodist preacher of Blooming Prairie, this county, refused to giv notice of a Universalist meeting at that place a few days since.

Yours truly, CHARLES ADSIT.

Pleased on Short Acquaintance.

CHANDLER, OKLA., Feb. 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of your valuable paper but a short time, but must say that I am more than pleased with it and the bold stand you hav taken in the cause of truth and right. Please send to my address list of books inclosed. I hope to be able to send you more in the near future. Yours for Freethought,

ALEX. BISHOP.

Impossible to Do Without It.

AUBURN, N. Y., Feb. 25, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $4 to apply on my subscription, which has been due some time, but the scarcity of money has been the cause of my delay. At last I hav been able to raise the amount, and with pleasure I send it for the paper I prize so highly. To do without it now would be impossible. My hope is to be ever able to send in my remittance.

MARY J. JONES.

"The Freethinker."

February 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: He is charitable; he has no fear or anticipation of future life. His sentiments are pure, his works a guiding-post to humanity. Only that which is good and pure has entrance into his store-house of truth. These are the principles and virtues that create for him love for his fellow-man, build for him monuments that even the hypocrits adore and the gods cannot destroy, though he has no faith in their teachings. SAMPER TAXTER.

After Our Whole Library.

DURHAM, ONT., Feb. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You will find herein cash for a few more books. If I hav no trouble with custom-house officers, and my funds hold out, I shall soon hav your complete library. I ordered "Old Testament Stories" some days ago, and hope it does not meet with the same fate as A. W. Archibald's, of Nova Scotia. Mr. Heston's cartoons are certainly very entertaining, and a large amount of information can be gathered from them. Send me your catalog. ARTHUR H. JACKSON.

An Afro-American With His Eyes Open.

OZARK, ARK., Feb. 5, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $4 for Truth Seeker Library for 1893, and back dues.

I am what Christians call a "nigger," but I believe in doing what I can to get my people to throw off the yoke of superstition. They worship a God who is "no respecter of persons," but I found to the contrary that he was a God of slavery, that in his holy book are many passages in favor of that infamous institution, while nowhere can be found a single word against it.

Yours, W. PIERCE.

Preachers the Same, Regardless of Name.

GRAFTON, W. VA., March 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Your shipment of books at hand. "Old Testament Stories" is grand. I show it to everybody, worldling, church-member, or Jew. I hav not attended any church for about four years, and don't intend to go there any more. A preacher is a preacher whether Catholic, Lutheran, Methodist, or whatever else he may call himself. They are for the almighty dollar and often worse things than that. I wish everybody could think as I do; then we would not feed a lot of idlers any more.

Yours truly, CHAS. STOLZENFELD.

Reads Everything in It.

WEST SUTTON, MASS., Feb. 11, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $10, for which renew my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER another year, and send your "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," "Freethinker's Pictorial Textbook," "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," and "The Creation of God."

We are well pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER; are glad to hav George E. Macdonald back, and read everything in it with interest.

With best wishes for the success of it and its Editor, I am, yours truly,

J. E. PHELPS.

A Call for Petitions.

PEORIA, ILL., Feb. 22, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read your article on the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States and will take advantage of your offer of petitions; please forward same.

I might add that I am a regular taker of THE TRUTH SEEKER and was one of a party of ten who met Sunday, Feb. 18th, to construct the foundations of a Freethought society in Peoria. Our secretary was instructed to write you for information, etc., and you no doubt hav heard from him ere this. Will add also that I shall use all the means in my power to prevent said amendment becoming a part of the Constitution.

A. D. RHINESMITH.

All's Grist for the Christian Mill.

SYBENE, O., March 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3. I am informed that there are some fellows down town who are hard up; please take this to them as a peace offering. I trust it will oil up their financial joints until some other reader makes a payment. They call me a heathen because I don't walk up with my family, and be sheared at their church. The mills are grinding all around here; you can hear the orthodox corn crackers in every direction. Everything that goes to their mill is grist, even to little tots eight and nine years old. If my Christian friends pay me any time soon for milk I hav sold them, I want Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Yours for U. M. L.,

FRANK EVANS.

The State-Church Will Make Them Dance.

COLUMBIA FALLS, MONT., Feb. 24, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $6.50 for one year's subscription to the paper and "Four Hundred Years of Freethought."

The woods are full of Freethinkers here—red-hot, outspoken ones; but they seem shy about putting up $3 for the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. They are brave, however, when it comes to borrowing my copy. Some are hard up, but all could rustle the money for the paper, for they take in every jim-crow dance in a radius of twenty miles and spend twice the subscription price. You may rest assured that I hav tried to induce them to take your paper.

Brother George's writings are "hi yu skookum" FRED COOKE.

A Good Plan—Put it in Operation.

OSCEOLA, S. D., Jan. 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5, for which please set the date of my tab two years ahead. Times are hard and crops hav been nearly a failure here, so it is hard to spare the money, but when we think what it would cost us Liberals to support the gospel if we were in the clutches of the churches, the amount seems small indeed. Just think of it! twenty dollars and upward a year, preachers' salary, to say nothing of missionary and other collections; ladies' aid society, gambling schemes, etc. Verily, we ought to be able to support our few Liberal papers, and pay for an occasional lecture. Indeed, why cannot we hav lecture circuits all over the United States, according to Mrs. Smith's Oregon plan? Liberals should certainly be williug to support such an organization even if there could be only one lecturer to a state. It would not leave us so much at the mercy the sky-pilots in case of funerals. Our lecturers could organize the circuits when they were on their regular lecture trips. Would be glad to hear what others think of this and would be glad to hav the ball set rolling. C. STRATTON.

Seed that Has Already Germinated.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Feb. 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I am very much attached to your valuable paper, and I am trying, in my feeble way, to do something for the cause of Freethought. I hav been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER for about three years. But I hav very few copies on hand, for I feel that they are too good to lie still, so I commenced to send them to acquaintances soon after my first subscription. I mailed a number to Lamont, Ia.; Capron, Ill.; Strawberry Point, Ia.; and I see by the paper that some of my sowing has borne fruit, especially at Lamont, Ia. At present I am sending copies as soon as I get through with them to the different fire departments of this city.

I see that my subscription expires on March 1st, so please find inclosed $6.50 for continuation of subscription and "Four Hundred Years of Freethought."

S. C. TODD.

Hard to Teach Science to Theologians.

MARTINSVILLE, ILL., Feb. 19, 294.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the best paper published—THE TRUTH SEEKER—that the Christian tyrants are trying to insinuate their God and their religion into the Constitution. Please send me three or four petitions against the Christian amendment. I will do what I can in securing signatures to it in this very religious community, but it is very discouraging in trying to teach a scientific truth to a mind destitute of the primary principles of knowledge; so we find the most of church members on the subject of evolution. And generally one controversy educates them to avoid a second encounter on the same subject. I received those books—"Mind and Matter," by Büchner, and "Dynamic Theory," by Alexander, and I am delighted and enlightened every hour I study them.

Herein you will find stamps, for which send me "The Giant Delusion," "Church and State," "God in the Constitution," "The Public School and the Catholics," and your new catalog. J. T. HOUSE.

The Eternal Need of Eternal Vigilance.

HARWICH, MASS., Feb. 9, 294

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed fifty cents in postage stamps, for which send me the "Bible Inquirer," "Thumbscrew and Rack," and "Self-Contradictions of the Bible."

I hav never made mention of the lectures given here by Remsburg and Putnam. It is needless, perhaps, to say they were masterly and were well received by those present to hear, but the weather and some other circumstances, needless to mention, were unfavorable, and the attendance was small. It seemed a pity that such elaborate lectures were heard by so few.

Charlesworth came last November, but owing to the failure of his telegram to reach me there was no preparation made and consequently no lecture. However, Charlesworth will get around to it some time and giv us, what we need, a stirring-up.

The Methodists sometimes get up "revivals." I wish we Freethinkers could do the same, but get up such as will last. The Methodists' are only temporary excitements, and soon are followed by reaction. Let ours be eternal vigilance.

B. F. ROBBINS.

Menaces to Religious Liberty.

CHEYENNE, WYO., Feb. 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I will certainly attempt to help out our cause, for I am well aware that it will be a bad day for this country's liberty-loving people if there are not enough of us to hold the balance of power, when ye God-loving religionists get down to the serious mercy of their creeds—exterminating each other in the approved styles peculiar to their different interpretations of the alleged "Word of God." From every indication of the times, this God-like love for each other is becoming each day of a more passionate character. The attempted Sunday-closing of the World's Fair; the incessant efforts to get public money for sectarian purposes; attempts to tamper with the Constitution; efforts to inject religious teachings into our public schools; the murder-advocating utterances of the jesuit Sherman recently, and many other like indications, should certainly be sufficient warnings to all lovers of liberty and freedom, that unless they exert every resource in behalf of our cause these religious fanatics (with intellects so narrow that a microscope is necessary to get a focus on them) will utterly destroy every liberty we at present enjoy. CHAS. S. ERSWELL.

Sere in Years, but Vigorous in Thought.

EVANSVILLE, WIS., Feb. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav now got some money and you will find inclosed post-office order for $10 for Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought;" Remsburg's "Abraham Lincoln;" two of Miss Wixon's address at the World's Fair; two of "Historic Means of Grace;" subscription to the paper, and $1 for Heston. Send catalog. The people here hav lately got up a public library; I want to see if they will pick out $10 worth of books I will get and giv them for the library.

I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for seventeen years or more and tried to circulate it. I liv in a little town of about eighteen hundred inhabitants with six different religious societies; two Baptist, two Methodist, one Episcopalian, and one Congregationalist. There has never been a Liberal lecture here. I was not able to bear all the expense, and could not get much help, nor a fit mau to take the lead. I am now eighty-seven years old; am so deaf that I cannot hear public speaking; can see to read some with one eye; you cannot expect much of me.

Thine for the right, P. F. SPENSER.

Congress Heeded Christian Petitions.

DAVENPORT, WASH., Feb. 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your paper that the Christians are trying to hav God and the church recognized in state affairs and that you call for petitions to be sent to Congress relativ thereto. Allow me to sav that I don't think petitions are a very effectiv way to counteract influences of that kind. Look at the petitions relativ to the World's Fair; Congressmen never see them, or if they do, never take any notice of them. The only way I see to do any good is to send two or three competent men to meet these committees and present the fallacies of this move. If this doesn't hav any effect our case is hopeless. And in order to defray expenses and carry on the guerrilla warfare I pledge $5, providing such a course is pursued. As long as men go to Congress with a view to please the majority in place of maintaining justice and right for a guide in our national affairs the door will always be open for greed and corruption. They hav legislated so long that the country is nearly on the brink of ruin. It is a pity that such tactics hav to be resorted to; shame, oh, shame! PETER SELDE, SR.

[The course recommended by Mr. Selde is the one pursued. The $5 will help pay the necessary expenses.—ED. T. S.]

A Trinity of Privileged Classes.

DIAMOND, ARK., Feb. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Question—Where is the predicate for these hard times?

What are the three greatest evils in our body politic?

Who are the three favored and privileged aristocrats in our nation that support and sustain plutocracy; yes, upon which the plutocrats maintain and support themselvs?

Answer—The titled and privileged M.D's, lawyers, and priests (whether they be Catholic, Presbyterian, Baptist, or Episcopal). These three brothers form the tripod upon which plutocracy supports itself. They are the three evil brothers in our body politic. They hav special laws that giv them rights and privileges that are not granted to any other class of American citizens. They are the three tyrants that to-day clutch the people by the throat, for through these three are the people degraded and being led to the prison-pen. All must recognize their authority and tyranny. It is they who do the thinking for the masses, and the masses must comply because forced by law to follow these three demons of evil. They are the enemies of liberty and the estoppers of justice. With them the Declaration of Independence is a dead letter.

Destroy this triple alliance and plutocracy will fall of itself. We ask not for sympathy or pity, but we do demand justice. We ask for no platform, for we stand by and upon the Declaration of American Independence, and upon it and by it we stand or fall.

DR. G. H. MILLER.

Must Hav "Four Hundred Years."

ST. PAUL, MINN., Feb. 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find money order for a "Freethinker's Pictorial Book." Please send it at your very earliest convenience. as I am going to hav a few young Freethought friends at my bachelor house on a coming Sunday. Money is pretty scarce, and a fellow don't know how long his job will last him, but I want that "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," if I hav to liv on corn-meal and potatoes for the next six months. Well, we had a chance to hear Ingersoll. I must say I was surprised to see so many prominent church people out to hear the "Mistakes of Moses." Some of the most popular clergymen had sensational meetings at their holy palaces. Dr. Smith, of the People's church, had Mayor Eustis, from Minneapolis. He and the doctor of divinity had a debate upon the methods of municipal government. Some of the others were delivering series of lectures, the most important one to be given Sunday night. But that cut no figure as regards the "Mistakes of Moses." I saw a woman there with her husband, who I did not think could be induced to go within four blocks of Robert Ingersoll. The man holds a prominent position in a railroad company. He does not hav much love for clergymen, though he never says anything; but what I want to bring out is this: This woman is subject to heart trouble, and when she is taken down, she invariably begins to fight with her imaginary devil of the Episcopalian church. So you can see that people are taking some stock in the "Mistakes of Moses," even out in wild Minnesota, as it may well be called yet.

FRED BOLLINGER.

Curious Effect of a Revival.

RICEVILLE, IA., Mar. 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: This village is again severely afflicted with a Methodist howling spell. The other night I attended one of the revival meetings and before the services were over I was "moved by the spirit" (of Freethought) to do all in my power to crush the monster (Christianity and church bigotry) and to do all I can for the advancement of Freethought and Liberalism. So please find inclosed $6.50 for one year's subscription to your paper and Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Hard times and scarcity of money compel me to take advantage of your liberal offer. I think it is needless for you to advertise the book any more than to state that S. P. Putnam is its author, for everybody who reads Mr. Putnam's articles in THE TRUTH SEEKER knows that "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will be one of the best books ever published. I often think that God must hav been on our side when he inspired Mr. Putnam to leave the church and work for the good cause of mental liberty.

I often imagin what I would do if I was an almighty God. Instead of counting hairs and watching sparrows fall I would prevent all railroad and steamboat and other accidents which cost thousands of lives annually and untold suffering. I would prevent all droughts, floods, cyclones, and other destructiv storms. I would open all the hospitals and insane asylums and turn all the patients out sane and in good health. I would open all jails and state prisons and turn all the prisoners out good citizens. I would cause universal harmony and peace to prevail over this little earth forever. I would banish that great curse and disease called the Christian religion from the minds of the credulous and superstitious people and replace it with the religion of humanity. I would turn all the gospel shops and temples of superstition into temples of knowledge. I would compel all sky-pilots and pious drones to work for an honest living instead of allowing them to get their living and money under false pretenses. After I had all that accomplished I would look around and find plenty more to do which would be beneficial to mankind.

Wishing you and Mr. Putnam success in your noble work of liberating humanity from the thralldom of superstition and sectarian tyranny, I remain,

Yours for Freethought,

HENRY BISSON.

The Absurdities of the Babel Story.

ESKRIDGE, KAN., Feb 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Why should Christians be fearful of investigation? Superstition is the child of ignorance and fear. We learn from observation, experience, and investigation. THE TRUTH SEEKER was born of a desire to know the truth, a wish to educate the ignorant. Ignorance is the mother of a great deal of crime; as Colonel Ingersoll says, "fear is the dungeon of the mind," and as crime is born of ignorance and superstition, a cultivator of ignorance is a cultivator of crime.

District No. 49, situated about seven miles from here, contains some very Liberal and intelligent people. About three weeks ago the school board of that district called at my place of business, and invited me to deliver a lecture at school-house No. 49, allowing me to select my own subject. I said that my subject would be, "Evolution of and Mistakes About the Christian Religion." The night selected the house was filled with men, women, and children. I was told that some Christians were present, and as I feared I might not hav them before me again, I thought I would do what I could to start them on the journey to intellectual freedom. I began speaking five minutes before 8 o'clock, and closed a little after 10 o'clock. I never addressed a more attentiv audience in my life. One old gentleman, who was of the Christian persuasion, was among the first to grasp my hand when the lecture was over. He was greatly interested in the emarks concerning the "Tower of Babel." I said the account was not only false but foolish; if this globe was all made into bricks it would not build a tower half way to some of those stars, and God ought to hav known better than to hav shown any concern in the matter. He ought to hav known that they would hav to giv it up; but it seems he was afraid the people would get into heaven. How could they get the mortar and brick to the top when they got the tower a million miles high? One fellow would carry the hod until he died of old age, and hand his hod to the other fellow, and so on. They would be compelled to hav taverns all along the journey, and where would they get their supplies? No pastures for stock, and the soil would not be very productiv; no water to drink or mix the mortar with, and after they got so high, the brick pile would be liable to bend a little; and if they got a little too close to some other planet, the force of gravity would cause the top to come away with all the crew—then there would be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth; then God could "laugh at their calamity and mock when their fear cometh." Since I lectured there a minister (who had one of his disciples attend my lecture to take items) has been trying to explain some of my propositions, which is fun for the listeners.

Mr. Remsburg's Lecture in Elmira.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Mar. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: As was thoroughly advertised, Mr. Remsburg lectured in this city Saturday evening, February 24th, to an audience of two hundred intelligent listeners, the élite of Elmira, and had it been any but Saturday evening with the mercury down to ten degrees below zero, it being hardly safe for people to be away from their own firesides, Stancliffe Hall, with a seating capacity of five hundred, would hardly hav accommodated the people eager to hear a Liberal lecture, the like of which has not been given here for many years. Mr. Remsburg gave his noted "False Claims of the Church" in such a masterly, forceful, convincing manner as to secure the closest attention of all present, and he was repeatedly and loudly applauded by nearly the whole audience. Several came over from Austinville, Pa.—twenty-five miles distant—to hear the fearless champion of Freethought.

In making preparations Mr. Tillson, seventy-five years of age—identified with Elmira for fifty years—Mr. Strait, a live, wide-awake, right-thinking Freethinker, and the writer of these lines, felt that we had a herculean task to perform. Briefly, I will say we, a trinity of Freethought, liberty, and justice, went to work with a will, determined to hav the truth proclaimed in our city, and we know of no better subj ct than "False Claims." Its author—invincible, like a brave warrior crowned with triumph and majesty—in a calm, dispassionate, but earnest, unanswerable discourse, utterly demolished the claims set up by the church. Even church-members admitted freely and unreservedly that not a single statement made by the speaker could be denied—all was absolutely true. All seemed greatly pleased with both the lecture and the lecturer and express a desire for his return, and we propose to hav Mr. Remsburg come here again to giv us a series of three lectures, and on Sunday we will confront him with an audience "like unto a multitude."

The amount collected from our good Liberal friends was more than enough to defray all expenses; the residue we gave to Mr. Remsburg, in addition to a stipulated amount previously intended for him; we just doubled the amount, feeling that we could afford to, for he gave us a splendid lecture, expanding upon the subject, going over much ground, absolutely exhausting that famous lecture, "False Claims of the Church."

Mr. Remsburg will not forget his reception in Elmira—a crowning success. Here are press notices:

Mr. Remsburg has a graceful but forcible delivery and elucidated his views, which are of the Ingersoll order, in a manner that stamped him as a really able and eloquent Freethought orator.—Elmira Telegram.

The lecture was well attended. The gentleman was listened to with much interest by the many present, and many of the arguments he brought forth were well calculated to set people to thinking. —Elmira Budget.

The Prophet Laughs.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., March 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Ha! ha!! ha!!! Did we not say he was a poet? Never since Touchstone has anyone ever rhymed with so little reason. And Our George "will rhyme you so, eight years together, dinners and suppers and sleeping hours [not] excepted;" for he can rhyme quite as funnily with his mouth full and in his sleep as during times that would seem more favorable for rhyming. But we wish that our poet had been able to get the proper number of feet into the last line but one, of his poem, without accusing us of writing "into the paper." That "was the most unkindest cut of all." If rhymes could perform the functions of reasons, and if fun could neutralize fact, Our George would be simply invincible. That they cannot is his misfortune, not his fault. But then no one expects argument on the matter of finance from our poet any more than he expects sedateness from the butterfly. If he were different he would not be the same, and therefore would not be Our George. We must take him as he is, for if we attempt to improve him we will probably spoil him. But we do wish that our butterfly would confine his attention to those things which everyone is at liberty to guess at, and let those subjects alone which are demonstrable; for really we get dogmatism ad nauseam from the theologians. Proof, argument, the reason why, are the crying needs of the hour, and those who say that anything is true because they say it is true are of no earthly use. If George will confine his genius to the manufacturing of amusing accounts regarding the siwash country, or to descriptiv essays about thumbscrews and chastity belts, or to answering correspondents we never heard of with regard to matters we know nothing and care nothing about, until such time as he has studied the question of finance at least elementarily, he will probably be able to write something on that topic that will be worth the time spent in reading it. But alas and alack! he will probably prove headstrong enough to reject our advice on the ground that a genius can catch sound ideas as he would the measles. This is the way geniuses are built. Each has discovered a royal road to knowledge universal, and any subject, no matter how abstruse, develops its mysteries automatically to them as they run. Surface indications are sufficient for their their supernal perspicacity; need for revision of their first impressions is never suggested to them by adverse criticism, and questions which go to the root of their belief are answered by four verses of doggerel instead of argument. Buy a barrel of kerosene and a student lamp, George, and go at the financial question like a man some night when the baby is free from colic.

E. O. ROSCOE.

To the Prophet of Gowanus.

DEERING, ME., March 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: To those who of late seem more interested in finance than in the religious aspect I respectfully address the following verses:

There is bickering, and dissection
Of finances and protection
Among our noble champions of liberty of late,
And this fruitless agitation
Seems of infinit duration,
Without a breathing period or chance to lubricate.

But I think our worthy brothers,
Out of due respect for others
And the cause of Liberalism, had best pull in their horns;
For their language is abusiv,
An 'tis by no means conduciv
To feelings of fraternity to pinch your neighbor's corns.

Let's leave finance where we found it,
With the questions that surround it,
Which are safe a little longer in the hands of Uncle Sam;
And turn our whole attention
To some things I now will mention
Which are being propagated by the followers of the Lamb.

There's the God and Christ amendment,
Just now in the ascendant,
Which they mean to push in Congress for all that they are worth;
And our friends Materialistic,
Spiritistic or Deistic.
Must hitch horses and defeat it if they wish to liv on earth.

For we read in every letter
That they mean again to fetter
The minds of honest freemen with superstition's chain;
It will roll our history's pages
Back into the Middle Ages,
And our thinkers and reformers will hav lived and died in vain.

Freemen, cease these vain discourses,
And at once unite your forces,
Let us don the Freethought armor and do battle while we can;
Let us write Truth's vindication
In the annals of the nation:
"Religious toleration is the right of every man."

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Anne Boleyn's Execution—1536.

Her golden head bowed low,
With the heavy weight of care,
And in her eyes' blue luster,
The bitterest despair.
I wis she little recks or heeds,
The scaffold's shadow there.

She had not thought to die,
When with each brilliant guest,
Thronging the castle halls,
Her laugh rang merriest;
And had no premonition,
Of her cruelly sad death.

Now in the gibbet's awful gloom,
Her soul was filled with dread.
And thoughts of death and eternity
Bowed low the graceful head.
"The king is just; I am unfit
For future life," she said.

Ah, words of dread import!
Oh, kneeling, weeping queen!
In those words of supplication,
Is self-condemnation seen;
And over each accuser's face
Do smiles triumphant gleam.

A memory unrevered!
A pitying word unsaid;
Fair innocence in saintly garb,
Mocked by a power dread;
And justice, under despot's reign,
To bru'ish beasts has fled.

—IDA BALLOU.

What the Little Folks Are Saying.

A teacher was expatiating on the beauties of paradise to a class of London street Arabs, lately. All at once the interest flagged. He asked why, when a lad said, "They'd never hav the likes of us about them places, teacher, the bobby 'ud chivvy us out in no time." That is, "The police would drive us out in no time."

SOMETHING SHE HADN'T THOUGHT OF.

Mary is the proud possessor of a doll that her younger brother has never been allowed to play with. But a short time ago, Mary decided that if she married the doll to Harrold the doll's happiness would be increased. Harrold at first objected, but finally allowed his sister to say the few binding words. Then, grabbing the doll he started on a run for out of doors, pursued by Mary. "You can't hav her any more," he called back. "You would marry her to me. And now she's mine."—Boston Transcript.

DISCOVERERS OF THE OLD WORLD.

A principal of one of the grammar schools in Savannah, an old time Irish pedagog, relates an incident which is well worthy of repetition and is indicativ of the aptness of the Irish South.

One day while he was instructing his class in geography the bishop of the diocese happened in, and, as is the custom, propounded some questions to the pupils. "What parts of the globe comprise the old and the new world?" was readily and correctly answered, and when asked who was the discoverer of the new world one powerful chorus answered "Christopher Columbus."

"Now, my little men," said the bishop, you hav told me who discovered the new world, but can any of you tell me who discovered the old world?"

A dead silence for a few seconds, when a little chap named Mahoney, the son of a shoemaker, held up his hand.

"Well, my little man," said the bishop, "let us hav your answer."

The surprise of the teacher and bishop can be imagined when the youngster replied in a voice showing confidence in his answer, "Adam and Eve, my lord." —Savannah Press.

Correspondence.

ANDOVER, KAN., Jan. 21, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I enjoy reading the letters of the Corner. I go to school, and study reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, geography. grammar, physiology, and civil government. I hav two sisters and one brother. I liv in the southern part of Kansas. We are having splendid warm winter weather for Kansas. I liv on a farm of one hundred and forty-eight acres; a creek runs through it. Its name is Dry creek. We are having revival meetings here, or one started, running two nights. The attendance was so meager that they turned it into prayer-meeting, and that stops to-night. That is the way the church is dying here.

We hav very many readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER in this neighborhood. My father takes the paper and thinks it is the best paper that he ever read. Well, I guess I will close for this time, hoping to see this in print. I remain your Freethinker friend, LOTTA WOLFE.

LLANO, OR., Jan. 21, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for a long time. I hav a nice two-year-old colt. I am going to school. and I read in the third reader. I am nine years old and I help my mamma do the housework. I do hope this letter will be printed. LULU MAY JOHNSON.

[What a splendid girl—and what a help to mamma! We are glad to welcome Lulu to the Corner.—ED. C. C.]

BURLINGTON, KAN., Feb. 1, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I am twelve years of age. I got acquainted with THE TRUTH SEEKER Christmas at Mr. Barland's. I find it a very interesting paper. I was left an orphan at eleven years of age, and was not brought up to any religion. I was left to think for myself. Your friend,

HETTIE WILLIAMSON.

[It would save much trouble if every one would think for himself. We are glad to add Hettie's name to our list of friends. —ED. C. C.]

EAU CLAIRE, WIS., Jan. 28, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a letter to the Corner for the first time. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for a number of years. I like to read the Children's Corner. We liv about a half mile from the city on a farm. We hav a good many neighbors; the most of them are church-members, Catholics and Methodists. My father has a great many discussions with them on Christianity. I go to school. I study reading, arithmetic, grammar, spelling, and geography. I hav one brother and four half brothers. My father is asked if he brings his children up to believe as he does. He tells them he teaches them the truth. As my letter is getting long I will close, hoping this will escape the waste-basket. Yours truly,

AMY SHERMAN.

[If all children could be taught the exact truth in all things, the world would be the better for it.—ED. C. C.]

EMMETSBURG, IA., Jan. 31, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I wanted to hav my name in the Children's Corner, so I just thought I would write a letter. Papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the letters in the Children's Corner are very nice. I am in the second room and in the A grammar class. I study geography, arithmetic, language, spelling, and I write this on the typewriter because I thought you could read it better. I am in the third reader, and in about a month I will be in the fourth reader and in the third room. I am going to hav a "safety" in the summer. Papa went to the World's Fair. And we hav been building. I am nine years old. We liv right by the lake, and I can skate very nicely, mamma says. But the skating is all spoiled because it has been snowing. I will write another time. Hoping to see my letter in the Children's Corner, I will close for this time.

From your friend, BROCK COHOON.

PORT TOWNSEND, WASH., Jan. 19, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am going to write you a few lines while I hav time. We hav had vacation now for four weeks. I hav many school-mates, but they are all Christians. One of the girls brought the "Old Testament Stories" to school one day and wanted us all to look at it, but she did not know herself what it meant. Some would not go near it; they said it was very mean to make fun of the Bible. The teacher told her to take it home again, because some mothers would not like their children to look at it. I am the only Freethinker in our class. I am twelve years old and would like to correspond with some of the Corner friends about my age. Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER very long and we all enjoy reading the Corner and looking at the pictures. I take the Youth's Companion, which contains many nice stories. I am very fond of reading and so is my sister. As my letter is getting too long, I will close, hoping this will escape the waste-basket. From your friend,

JENNIE IFFLAND.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, MASS., Jan. 21, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I just came into the house, and thought I would write to you. I hav been skating on a stream that runs by our house. I am eleven years old and hav four sisters younger than myself. We hav never attended church or Sunday-school. All we do on Sunday is help mamma to do the work and then go out and play tag or steps. I guess my papa is the only man in town that takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator He went to hear Colonel Ingersoll three times this winter and he says he will go every time he comes to Boston. Papa said he would like to see you very much and I would too. Your Liberal friend, ROSIE MCCAW.

[Rosie is one of an interesting family whom it would delight our hearts to see. It is far more creditable to help mamma when she is tired than to idle away the time in a Sunday-school. Rosie will always find a welcome in this Corner.—ED. C. C.]

WEYAUWEGA, WIS., Jan. 20, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Weyauwega is a pretty little town with about one thousand people. There are five churches and six saloons, which I think are enough to send us all to hades. We also hav a high school, a grist-mill, a brewery, a basket factory, a cheese factory, and a creamery.

We liv a mile from town. I hav always lived in town, but I like country life better, for I can roam about the fields and gather wild flowers, and listen to the sweet songs of the many birds that liv among the trees. The Waupaca river runs through our pasture. Papa has our place nearly set out to fruit. He is going to raise fruit and poultry. I am anxious for spring to come, for Leland and I are going to hav a garden of our own. INEZ DAWES.

[Weyauwega must be a thriving place in spite of its churches and saloons, which somehow seem always to go along together. —ED. C. C.]

MORRISON'S BUSH, WELLINGTON, N. ZEALAND, Jan. 3, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav posted for you the Christmas number, 1893, New Zealand Graphic. It has four splendid colored pictures, also a lithograph picture of the city of Wellington, capital of New Zealand.

I hav sent you this present because I thought you would be pleased to receive from this part of the world a token of respect from one of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER paper, who is acquainted with the interest you take in the welfare of the Children; and I hope you may be spared for many years, to work for their good. From your friend, BARRATT.

[Thank you, dear friend Barratt, for your kindness. The beautiful number of the Graphic has just arrived. The pictures are lovely—a revelation of that land of luxuriant summer beauty—a paradise among the palms. Thanks for kind words of appreciation. May you, too, liv long and prosper.—ED. C. C.]

CONCORDIA, KAN., Feb. 2, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I delight in reading the Corner, and in fact the entire paper. I am fourteen years of age. I go to school. I hav five studies. My teacher's name is Bert Ainsworth. He reads the Bible, or repeats the Lord's prayer each morning, but it does not amount to a hill of beans. We hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for several years, and think it the best paper ever published.

When our Christian friends and relations come visiting us, they always manage to keep a safe distance from the reading-stand; they think THE TRUTH SEEKER is poison, although we hav caught them reading on the sly. Pa and ma went to Lincoln, Neb., to hear Col. R G. Ingersoll lecture when he was on his Western tour last October—subject, "Shakspere." They thought it was a grand treat.

Yours truly, GEORGE BOWLING.

P. S —All the churches hav had protracted meetings around here, but they hav had hard luck so far. G. B.

[George is one of our splendid boys. Guided by the light of THE TRUTH SEEKER gospel, he will always be brave, manly, and intelligent.—ED. C. C.]

MABEL, MINN., Jan. 24, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I hav just been reading the letters written to you, and I thought I would write too. I liv on a farm of about two hundred acres. We raise a lot of grain, and cattle, and horses. I go to school and study reading, arithmetic, geography, history, writing, and spelling. I liv a quarter of a mile from school. I go every day, but it was so cold to-day that I did not go. My grandma died April 20, 1893, and grandpa died Jan. 11, 1894. They were both Freethinkers. My grandpa has taken the Investigator for twenty-five years and THE TRUTH SEEKER a great many years too. Mamma visited the Fair and so did papa, and both reported a good time. Mamma went to the Congress and Mr. Putnam took her to see you, but you were not at home. I hav one brother who is going to the business school. I hav three pets, and my brother has one dog. I am a little girl ten years old.

As my letter is rather long I will close; but I will remain your friend,

GRACE MONROE.

[We are glad to hav Gracie one of our ever-increasing band of young Freethinkers. Our love to Mamma Monroe, and we are sorry to hav missed seeing her at Chicago.—ED. C. C.]

KANSAS CITY, MO., Jan. 24, 1894.

MY DEAR FRIEND MISS WIXON: As it has been some time since I wrote to the Children's Corner, and wishing the pleasure of expressing my thoughts, I take the opportunity offered by the Corner. Since my last communication I hav changed my address and also vocation. I am at present attending a college of dentistry, and as I pursue my studies of anatomy and chemistry, it strengthens my anti-orthodox belief.

Speaking of religion, I think it purely of human origin. Take the thought of "heaven!" Can anyone conjure anything grander? "Eternal happiness," "living forever," just what everyone wishes for, and has from time immemorial. The writers of the Bible fixed that part so as to answer for all time to come. If they had done the same with the balance there would not be so much disbelief. But no; we hav another place called hell which is not such a pleasant place (according to their theory). That is what everyone gets who does not accept their teaching. "A merciful God" (so-called) planted the seeds of deception. The human nature is not correct or we would not hav a tendency to be disobedient; that shows humanity want no ruling power over them. Since I came here I hav attended a number of churches, but no religion in a true sense—all style and vanity. I thought if the houses of worship were turned into tenement houses for the poor and the salary of the minister contributed to the poor fund, there would not be so much misery, and it would be a Christian act. Yours for the progress of Freethought, JULIAS E. KRAFT.

HOOPESTON, ILL., Jan. 20, 1894.

MY DEAR AUNT SUSIE: Once more I take it upon myself to write to you; this time in behalf of the graduating class of Hoopeston's high school. Our professor has gotten deeply interested in politics, and consequently is neglecting his duties to our class. We are all very much worried in regard to the form of exercise for our commencement. Whenever the subject is mentioned, the principal says he is "looking out for something new." Now we are getting anxious. So I came to the conclusion that I would write to you before it was too late and ask if you could suggest appropriate exercises for a class of seven girls and two boys. We cannot hav orations, and one class has given selections from various noted authors and poets, so to get something new for so large a class is rather a difficult task. We usually hav about two months and a half to prepare our parts in, and it is fast nearing time we knew something about them. Now, if you can make any suggestion befitting the occasion you will greatly oblige the entire class and especially myself.

We hav just received our TRUTH SEEKER for this week, and as usual it is just grand. The young lady friend I spoke of in my last letter to the Corner has promised to write to you too. I think I hav succeeded in making a Freethinker of her. I do hope so, any way.

We are having miserable weather now. "The bottom has fallen out of the Lord's water tank," and we poor mortals are suffering the consequences. It has rained for nearly three days consecutivly, and is still raining to-night. We hav all been suffering with severe colds, but are getting better now.

I think your little poem entitled "A Wish" is splendid. We should all strive for the same end.

We all send love and best wishes to yourself and sister. If you cannot answer privately, answer the way that is most convenient, and you will greatly oblige your loving friend, IDA JOHNSTON.

[There is nothing better for such exercises than original essays, declamations, music, etc.—ED. C. C.]

ARGUMENT

IN THE

Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,

At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of his volume There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity. As a book of reference and aid to all truth seekers it is invaluable. Its classification of subjects makes it a hand-book. As Ingersoll said of Paine's "Age of Reason," it enables someody in every village to "corner the parson." Its wide variety of subjects include all the disputed points between Christianity and Freethought Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight. Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectively an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene. Mene. Tekel of Socialism Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B Wakeman,

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

BIBLE MYTHS,

AND THEIR PARALLELS IN OTHER RELIGIONS:

BEING A

Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity,

CONSIDERING ALSO THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

[Heathen Illustration of the Temptation.]

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

THE GIANT DELUSION. By Otto Wettstein. Price, 10 cents.

In my judgment, this is one of the best of all the excellent papers read before the Congress at Chicago. It may lack the pathos and poetry of an Ingersoll or a Putnam, but it is strong, radical, practical, honest, straightforward truth, told in a plain, simple, earnest style that unfailingly convinces the real searcher after light and knowledge. The firm, steady blows given to myth and falsehood, to theologies, gods, and ghosts, are effectiv and truth-compelling. Our Spiritual friends may think he hits their pet beliefs and delusions too heavily, but just so do their readers feel regarding their rejection of still older delusions, myths, and miracles. Mind, I do not deny that there is what is called spiritual manifestation; that much of it really occurs. But I think it is all in us—all in the living and not in the dead, who are gone forever and forever. Plato lived once, just as Tom, Dick, or Harry did—just as we all are doing. But no identity is or can be eternal. The idea that everlasting life might not be desirable is one that we, who so much enjoy this life, hardly like to accept, but, as Mr. Wettstein says, our likes or wishes do not create their fulfillment. We can readily understand that a monotonous eternity spent in a heaven of golden streets and pearly gates, where one must be everlastingly singing fulsome praises of a merciless, cruel, despotic, and unforgiving God, who creates nine-tenths of his children for eternal, never-ending torments, cannot be a haven of rest and joy to any thinking, reasoning, loving being. The spiritual heaven—the summer-land—is far preferable. It is a grand evolution out of the old Christian theological one, but it is so vague, misty, and intangible we don't feel any great degree of longing to spend ten thousand billion of years even in such a place. While I think Mr. Wettstein is right in enjoying all he can here in this life, I must object to the "wine and cigars." Perhaps this may be bigotry in me, but in my opinion they are an evil to the race, and each year becoming overwhelmingly more and more so. As a rule, I find nothing in any of Otto's writings that I object to. They coincide so entirely with my own opinions and ideas I am compelled to accept them as a part of my own better self—better put, more clearly enunciated, and more strongly hammered out than I could hav done. I wish this little ten-cent book could be scattered broadcast through the land, and every truth it contains could be made more manifest to every reader thereof.

"Divines but peep on undiscover'd worlds,
And draw the distant landscape as they please;
But who has e'er returned from those bright regions,
To tell their manners and relate their laws."—Dryden.

THE BIBLE INQUIRER. By A. Jacobson. Price, 25 cents.

This is No. 36 of the Truth Seeker Library and is the fourth edition of a most valuable little book, which in its new and revised edition, at the low price of ten cents, should be in the library of every Liberal. I hav had one of the old edition for half a lifetime, and very useful it has been to me, too. How much of my present radicalism I owe to the little volume "God only knows, and he won't tell." It's one of the handiest books for reference you could desire and one of the hardest for a Bible believer to get over. Buy it and try it and you will never "rue the bargain."

"God dooms us to Tophet,
Unless we do repent;
For Eve once stole an apple
When she had 'nary cent.'

"I wonder, oh, I wonder,
How these old Bible tales
Can ever find believers
Where common sense prevails."

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

"The Creation of God." 432 pages, by Dr. Jacob Hartmann. Published by the Truth Seeker Company, New York. It is beautifully printed and bound, and from its initial letter to its finis the learned doctor makes clear the strength and beauty of the closing sentence: "Be your own God, your own savior, and your own priest." Price, 50 cents.—Little Freethinker.

We hav received from the Truth Seeker Company, New York, a series of pamphlets, entitled "The Bible Inquirer," "The Giant Delusion," and "Woman: Four Centuries of Progress," dealing with matters of religious science and written from the extreme radical point of view. Followers of Colonel Ingersoll will be delighted at the array of arguments advanced in favor of the theories which they uphold. There is much in the style, if not in the matter, of these pamphlets to offend the earnest and sincere Christian, but we do not believe that the creeds which they attack hav much to fear from an opposition so vehement and inconsiderate of certain ordinary rules of courtesy which must be respected, even in religious or anti-religious controversy.—Boston Traveler.

[When the church was supreme it respected the "ordinary rules of courtesy" by means of the dungeon, rack, and stake.]

"Design Argument Fallacies; A Refutation of the Argument that Nature Exhibits Marks of Having Been Designed by an Intelligent Being." By the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Paper covers, pp. 59, price 15 cents, the Truth Seeker Company, 28 Lafayette place, New York City. This book meets, we believe, a want felt by many Freethinkers. It is much easier to convince people of the falseness of the Bible and the non-existence of the Christian God, than to persuade them that there is no god at all of any kind. At this latter step nine-tenths of them balk. The consideration which mainly influences them in holding on to this last tenet is that of design in nature. They declare it as plain as the nose on one's face that very many things about us, the animal frame in particular, bear unchallengeable traces of having been consciously adapted to a purpose. In the present work about every argument that bears against the design theory has been incorporated.—Secular Thought.

In his work, "Abraham Lincoln: Was He a Christian?" recently published by the Truth Seeker Company, John E. Remsburg has forever settled the controversy—definitly answered the question. Lincoln was not a Christian, and they who shall hereafter make the assertion will do so in the face of an array of facts that are simply incontrovertible. Mr. Remsburg has performed his work conscientiously. He has treated the subject exhaustivly, and, as is the case with his discussion of the Sunday question, he has left nothing to be said.

"Bible Morals" and "False Claims," by the same author, are unanswerable arraignments of Christianity, and to attempt to improve upon them by making a renewed attack would be to paint the rose red. In his new work Mr. Remsburg more than sustains his former efforts, and the easiest way to find an answer to the question, "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" will be to read his book. His facts are reliable, for Mr. Remsburg does not cite history that is not correct. In all his writings he is noted for exactness. This book of 336 pages is a biography of the great statesman, as well as a consideration of his religious belief.

We meet in its brilliantly fascinating pages, not only Lincoln, but his friends. We hear again his genial laugh, listen to his world-renowned stories—the book contains many not before published—and look into his kindly face. Mr. Remsburg has done well. This is not the draped dummy Christianity has attempted to palm off upon the world as Abraham Lincoln, but the man himself—the simple, the unique, the original, who, in the suddenness and bitterness of a tragic death, grandly "wrapped the drapery of his couch about him and lay down to pleasant dreams."—Mrs. M. A. Freeman, in Boston Investigator.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible: and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

BISHOP GULLEM: "My dear young lady, hav you started in this year to do unto others as you would hav them do unto you?" Dear Young Lady: "Yes. I've quit speaking to those Grigsby girls."—Life.

AFTER Deacon Smithers had finished his call on the pastor the latter's little daughter said: "Papa, didn't the deacon say he didn't believe in Santa Claus?" "That's what he said, love." "Then, papa, won't we hav to try him for heresy?"

A MAN who had buried seven wives thought he ought to do something in commemoration of the dear ones departed. He therefore had a large marble hand carved out with the index finger pointing upward. On the hand was engraved: "Seven up."—J. P.

THEY came to a sidewalk where the ice was well covered with ashes. Said the young lady, in grateful accents: "Thank goodness! there's one Christian on this street." "Yes," said her escort abstractedly, "Mr. Solomon Isaacstein livs here."—Boston Transcript.

GOING out hunting, a boy shot a bird, and another ran to secure the trophy. Coming near where it had fallen, he found a white owl, so sprawling in the grass as to present to his view only a head with staring eyes and a pair of wings attached. Instantly he shouted in dismay, "We're in for it now, Jack; we've shot a cherubim."—Boston Ideas.

DEACON HEAVYWEIGHT: "And so you are going to leave us, parson?" Rev. Mr. Thankful: "Yes. I hav had a call to another parish where, by the way, the salary is considerably larger. I am sorry to leave my flock, but I must obey the call." Deacon Heavyweight (dryly): "Wal, it may be what you call a call, but it seems to me a great deal more like a raise."—Life.

LITTLE Maggie B. (sitting on her grandfather's knee): "Tell me some stories from the Bible, grandpa—something about the Revelation." Maggie (with puzzled face): "But, grandpa, if the trump sounds loud enough to wake the dead, won't it kill the living?"—Literary Digest.

ST. PETER: "How beautifully those angels float in that orange-tinted cloud out yonder!" Recording Angel: "Yes, yes; but don't interrupt me please! I'm terribly busy. Millions of the most awful cuss words coming in every second." St. Peter: "What? Why, this is early Sunday morning and nearly all the people of Earth, wearied with the week's work, are asleep." Recording Angel: "They were asleep, but church bells hav begun to ring."—Puck.

WHILE Joe Jefferson was down at his Louisiana plantation last year, the wife of one of his neighbors died, and Mr. Jefferson called to express his sympathy and regrets. While he was at the house, the clergyman arrived to make arrangements for the funeral. Neither the man nor his wife had been a church-member. The husband was prostrated with grief, but he aroused himself as the clergyman entered. "Is there any particular portion of the scriptures you would like me to read at the funeral?" asked the clergyman. The husband sat up, mopped his eyes, and thought for a moment. "Well, you might try that bit about Samson and the foxes," he exclaimed finally. "I guess that's about as funny as any of 'em."—San Francisco Star.

THERE is a swift lunch resort near the post-office in Philadelphia the walls of which are covered with scriptural mottoes. This feature has made the place famous, but the managers are talking of abolishing it because of an incident which occurred the other night. A rather seedy individual walked in and sat down at one of the tables near the door. He got a substantial meal and started to walk out. He had nearly reached the door when the cashier recovered from his astonishment sufficiently to call after him: "Hold on! You havn't settled for your meal." The man calmly replied: "Why, I havn't any money." "What!" gasped the astonished cashier. "Did you take this for a free-lunch joint?" "Why," said the man, "you hav a sign out there which says, 'The Lord shall provide,' and another one yonder, 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver,' and another, 'Feed my lambs.' My name is Lamb." And he walked out.—Philadelphia Record.

THIS National Reform combination never had any other purpose, nor any other aim, than to commit the government of the United States, by whatever means possible, to the establishment and maintenance of "Christianity" as the national religion, and to the enforcement of "Christian laws, institutions, and usages," and Sunday above all, upon all the people. —American Sentinel.

IT is better to hav a physician for a confessor than a priest. You tell the priest that you detest mankind; he answers, "You are not a Christian." The physician givs you a dose of rhubarb, and you love your fellow-being. You tell the priest that you are tired of living. He answers, "Suicide is a crime." The physician givs you a stimulant, and immediately you feel life supportable—The Queen of Roumania.

ONE of the things we despise in public life in these United States is the amount that is spoken and written for effect. That is to say, men speak and write to suit the temper of the hour, regardless of the truth of their statements. The ignorance of the people is assumed, and it is considered legitimate to mislead them to gain a point. This failure to employ simple honesty and correctness in public discussion is a most lamentable neglect on the part of many of our public men. A man should be as honest in the giving of his opinions as in the most sacred private transactions of life.—Progressive Age.

YOU cannot make men all alike intelligent, but you can come near making them all alike ignorant; and a uniformity of ignorance is the only possible basis for a uniformity of faith and practice. When not one in fifty thousand could read or write, and when, as transpired occasionally at church councils, certain of the bishops could not sign their own names, there was a solid basis for the faith which has now fallen upon, for it, evil days, but upon better days for mankind. The church was clever in her way. With their eyes open men could not see alike; she blinded them (with ignorance), and then they saw alike—exactly. Not only was the laity blinded, but it was constantly assured of its utter blindness, and counter-assured that the church saw—saw not only all that was on earth, but much that was in heaven. The blind laity believed that the church saw, and it said: "For God's sake, lead us!"—Saladin.

IN the same year, 1859, appeared Darwin's "Origin of Species" and Mill's "Liberty." Darwin taught us that all developments of organic life, from the zoöphyte up to man, had resulted from the ability of some small variation to preserve itself against the majority of its species until a new species incorporating that variation is established. Mill proved that all social progress depended on the ability to develop mental and moral variations from the majority. In the two books we may trace evolution, from the sponge up to Shakspere, as an unbroken struggle for larger liberty, by differentiation; had it been permanently defeated even in a worm, man could not hav existed; had it been permanently defeated in the first human brain that differed from its fellows, in every race, civilized man could not hav existed. This is still the law: Freedom of individual difference to develop itself is the condition of all progress, social, moral, and physical. If today any moral or other differentiation in any mind can be silenced or repressed by authority, or by the fear of it, all advance of mankind is arrested.—Moncure D. Conway.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especailly in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Petition to Congress Asking It to Reject the Proposed God-in-the-Constitution Amendment.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress Assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, do hereby respectfully pray and memorialize your Honorable Body to reject the proposed Amendment to the Constitution prepared by the National Reform Association and offered in the Senate on Jan. 25th, 1894, by Senator Frye, and in the House on the same day by Representative Morse. The proposed Amendment would change the Preamble to the Constitution by the insertion of the sentences within quotation marks which follow the words "We, the people of the United States," in the paragraph below:

We, the people of the United States, "devoutly acknowledging the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and nations; grateful to him for our civil and religious liberty, and encouraged by the assurances of his Word to invoke his guidance, as a Christian nation, according to his appointed way, through Jesus Christ," etc.

We ask the rejection of this proposed amendment for the following reasons:

1. That the American principle of separation of church and state may be maintained.

2. That the rights of all classes of citizens may be conserved and perpetuated. It is manifest that the adoption of such an Amendment to the Constitution would be, in fact, the incorporation of certain religious and sectarian dogmas in the fundamental law of the land. Such recognition of religious dogmas in the civil law was very carefully guarded against by the wise founders of the Republic, both in the Constitution as originally adopted and in the First Amendment thereto.

3. As the Constitution now stands no discrimination, on the ground of heresy, can be legally made against any citizen. More than one hundred years of experience amply justifies this wide tolerance and forcibly pleads for its continuance. Men of all shades of religious, non-religious, and anti-religious belief can and do render allegiance to and acceptably serve the State, and this without hypocrisy or perjury. Should this proposed Amendment be adopted, it would at once shut out of public life candid and honest men, whose reason, for any cause, cannot accept one or more of the three creedal statements contained in said proposed Amendment, but unscrupulous doubters and rejecters of these creedal affirmations would have no difficulty in taking the oath of allegiance to the Amended Constitution. Hence said proposed Amendment offers a premium for hypocrisy and perjury, and is, consequently, in the highest degree immoral. It is also unjust, in that it deprives a part of our citizens of their equal rights, because of a difference of opinion. Again, it must be hurtful to the State, because, as already shown, it would admit pretenders and timorous men to positions of trust and responsibility, and bar out men of honesty and courage.

4. The experience of all times and nations has shown conclusively that every attempt to force from the citizen a direct or indirect acknowledgment of the truth of any of the dogmas of religion is disastrous. It creates new religious hatreds and intensifies the old; it demoralizes religion and corrupts the state; it tramples the equal rights and liberties of the deserving citizen, and puts into the hands of bad men a dangerous and terrible power over the property, persons, and lives of their fellow-citizens.

5. If Theistic, Trinitarian, and Christian majorities may to-day rightfully force upon Deistic, Atheistic, or Agnostic, and Unitarian and non-Christian minorities their distinctive creeds, what warrant have we that some other day the Catholics, the Methodists, or the Presbyterians will not Amend into the Constitution their distinguishing sectarian dogmas? That step would logically follow the one which your Honorable Body has been asked to take, and against which we respectfully but strongly and unalterably protest.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

					Heinzen.		Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,

Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed, will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

Defense or Offense?

Is the church on the defensiv or the offensiv in this country to-day? Is she striving to defend her equal rights in the republic or to force her doctrins upon the people who are not within her denominational folds? Is she being oppressed, or is she oppressing others? When and where is the freedom of worship of her devotees denied, except in the instances in which some strong denomination persecutes a weak one? Who or what interferes with her freedom in building churches, in furnishing them, in educating men for the ministry, in employing them, in listening to them, in raising means for the support of missions, in sending men and women abroad as missionaries, in proselyting at home, in meeting in council, presbytery, synod, and conference? In what state are they disfranchised, in what state denied the right to participate in political primaries and conventions? Where are they denied freedom of travel, of migration and settlement? What power has ventured to prescribe or proscribe their garb? What authority has limited by law their opportunities to write, to print, to circulate their Bibles and other books, their papers, magazines, and reviews? Hav their Sunday-schools and Bible-classes, their Societies of Christian Endeavor, and their Epworth Leagues been interfered with or constrained in any way?

Once for all, has the Christian church been abused by the state? Of course we know that she has not, that the only oppression of Christians has been by means of laws demanded and defended by the vast majority of Christians, and that the only Christians who hav been injured by these laws are the very ones who hav protested against them, but who were too few in numbers to successfully cope with the church militant and dominant.

What, then, means this cry from the camp of the Covenanters that Christians must organize for defense? Listening to it, one not familiar with the status of Christians and the Christian church in this country would suppose that they were being cruelly oppressed by some ruthless power. Here is R. M. Downie writing in the Christian Reformer. He says: "Self-defense is the first law of nature, and of grace as well. The church must defend itself. The Christian must defend himself." Defend itself, defend himself, from what—and how? Mr. Downie pictures Paul looking down the light-lines of time and over this generation; he sees sixty to sixty-five millions of people, eighty thousand to one hundred thousand churches, and as many ministers; he sees millions upon millions of printed pages of Christian doctrin and exhortation circulated weekly, but he perceives that in spite of all these evangelizing agencies the church "barely holds its own." Mr. Downie asks: "Why has the church lost her power with the masses?" He answers the question himself, although he denies the truth of the reply he givs. Hear him:

"It is safe to say that the masses are now more intelligent, but is not that itself a reason why they should be more ready to accept the gospel? In the days of Paul the gospel message was new, and doubts of its fitness for the world's needs might hav been entertained; but after eighteen hundred years this doubt should be dispelled."

Nevertheless the fact of the greater intelligence of the people of this age does explain the weakening hold of the church on their minds. And instead of the doubt of the fitness of the gospel message having been dispelled by the experience of eighteen centuries that doubt has become a demonstration, a truth self-evident to all able to reason and not blinded by the glamour of a name or led astray by the illusiv light of an ideal.

Now, what does Mr. Downie propose as a remedy for this confessed sickness of the church? How does he purpose to renew the vigor of her youth? Does he say that Christians must lead better lives, that the apologists of the church must bring forward stronger arguments in defense of the Bible and the actions of the church in the past and present? Not at all. Christians must defend themselvs and the church. How defend and against what? We will let the Covenanter tell:

"In self-defense the church must arise in her strength. She must show that as an agent of blessing she is capable of solving these public questions. If the question be of a political nature she must hav an arm long enough and strong enough for her purpose. Such an arm the church may hav in the National Reform Association. The very existence of such an association answers and banishes the devil's claim that the pulpit should hav nothing to do with politics.

"About a year ago Elliott F. Shepard, the lamented editor or the New York Mail and Express, spoke before that great convention at Harrisburg convened to protest against the repeal of the Sabbath laws. In substance he said that the time had arrived when the Christian citizens of this country must stand up for their rights, and insist that our laws shall be made Christian, and the sentiment was cheered to the echo by the representativs and delegates of fifteen or sixteen denominations, and a good number of other associations. Along this line the church needs and must hav a fortification and defense. The mass of church members is ready to follow. What is needed is fearless leadership and thorough and intelligent organization."

Yes, that is just what we thought the church champions meant by "self-defense." The church is to solve problems by the "long" and "strong" arm of the National Reform Association, precisely as the Roman church solved them in the old days by the long and strong arm of the Inquisition. The Inquisition was the intermediary between the church and the state, in its ecclesiastical character trying men for heresy against the church, and in its civil character punishing them or delivering them to the officers of the government as violaters of the state's laws. So to-day the church will use the National Reform Association and its affiliated societies to obtain laws for the punishment of those who doubt the wisdom and authority of the church. These associations are the intermediaries between the church and the state. The church will not persecute—oh, no! She is acting in "self-defense"! She will procure the enactment of laws in her interest; she will put her dogmas into the Constitution, and the state, her servant, will punish the heretics as "lawbreakers." It is the old, old scheme.

It is time for Christians to "stand up for their rights, and insist that our laws shall be made Christian"! The infinit audacity of that! Stand up for their right to deny the equal rights of all other citizens! Stand up for their right to convert the civil state into a religious tyranny! Stand up for their right to fine and imprison men for differing from them! Stand up for their right to force their beliefs concerning gods and saviors and heavens and hells, and holy books, and their ideas about morals, upon men and women who think for themselvs! Stand up for their right to pension the church upon the state and tear the Constitution into tatters that a priest's creed may become the charter of the nation! And they call this "self-defense"!

Stand up for the defense of their rights! Not a right of theirs has been denied, as we hav shown. The right to invade rights is not a corollary of the law of equal freedom, and this is the only "right" that the theocrats are demanding. They want an opportunity to commit crime; and this, they say, is a right which they must "defend"! They want to be given legal authority to punish American citizens for inability to agree with them about the unknown! This is the very sublimity of impudence.

The church is not oppressed by law. Christians are not persecuted by Freethinkers, nor do we ask that the laws discriminate against them in any way. The church is aggressing, not defending herself against aggression. Her rights are not denied, but she denies the rights of non-churchmen. Her rights are not threatened, but she continually and with increasing arrogance and ever augmenting demands threatens the remaining rights and liberties of every citizen who will not bend the knee in servil homage at her altars.

The church is on the offensiv. She denies to the citizen the right of private judgment, she tramples under foot the fundamental principles of religious equality. She does this by making the taking of the judicial oath compulsory in some states; by authorizing inquiry to be made concerning the religious opinions of witnesses; by forcing the taxpayers to support religious services in Congress, in state legislatures, in the army and navy, in penal, reformatory, and charitable institutions; by teaching her creeds to the Indians at the expense of the nation; by demanding and receiving from states and cities appropriations for the establishment and maintenance of various institutions under her control; by the exemption of her property from taxation; by vicious interference with the literature, arts, and amusements of the people; by meddling with the domestic concerns of men and women in a more or less successful attempt to substitute the sacramental for the civil-contract marriage law; by introducing into the common and normal schools, state universities, and agricultural colleges the Bible and theological exercises, such as prayer and the singing of religious songs; and by procuring the enactment and enforcement of Sunday laws, thus monopolizing in the interest of the priesthood one-seventh of the citizen's time.

Unsupported by a single fact is the claim of the Sabbatarians and Covenanters that Christians are denied their religious rights in America and must therefore organize under "fearless leadership" for defense. The assertion is preposterously absurd. It does not contain one element of truth. It is a deception and a snare. It must be denied and disproved whenever it is made, and its authors shamed into silence. It is the acrid dust of delusion and falsehood, thrown into the eyes of the people in order to blind them to the aggressions of the hierarchies.

The Erie and Sunday Work and Rest.

The fact that the Erie Railroad has discontinued most of its Sunday freight business and also cut down the number of its Sunday passenger trains is hailed by the Sabbatarians as a great victory. But their shouts of triumph seem somewhat out of harmony with the actual circumstances. The change was voluntary; no Sunday law compelled the partial cessation of traffic on the Erie, nor hav we heard that its officials are demanding that the state or nation compel the other roads to follow suit. Self-chosen suspension of trade on Sunday is one thing, law-enforced suspension quite another. We think, however, that the taking off of local passenger trains was a mistake, and all freight which the consignees wish to receive at the earliest possible date should also hav right of way seven days in the week. It should be easy, on any road managed on sound business principles, for the consignors to arrange for continuous transit. Under genuinly free competition, and in the absence of Sunday laws, that road which furnishes the people living along its lines and at and beyond its termini the best passenger service; which handles freight most carefully and expeditiously, and treats its employees the best, will be the most popular road, and the best paying one, other things being equal.

We wholly repudiate the notion that it is necessary to incommode either passengers or shippers in order to giv a day's rest each week to workmen. Suppose we take seven men, designating each with a letter of the alphabet, A to G, inclusiv. On Monday, A rests; on Tuesday, B; on Wednesday, C; on Thursday, D; on Friday, E; on Saturday, F; on Sunday, G. Thus we find that on each day six men work and one rests. There would naturally, with few exceptional cases, be a falling off in business on Sunday, for reasons that will suggest themselvs to the thoughtful reader, and so arrangements could be made allowing more than one man to take his day off on Sunday, should that be preferred as the rest day. The exceptions would occur during the summer, when resorts are open and more suburban trains are run on Sunday than on other days. Even here, however, it would not be difficult to secure a day of rest for all who desired it. In the case of the seven trainmen such arrangements could be made as would enable each to hav a different day of rest each week, if preferred. As a result of applying common sense to the solution of the Sunday-rest problem we hav secured a weekly day of rest for all who wish it, and this without extra expense to the company or loss to the men, and without subjecting passengers or business men to discomfort or loss of time and money.

Sabbatarians declare very emphatically that they are anxious for the welfare of the railway laborer; they want him to hav his day of rest each week. "Soulless capital" would grind the life out of him if it were not for them! Well, here is a sensible, practical plan for giving him his rest, and the unapproachable merit of it is that it does not interfere with the pleasure or the property rights of other people; it does not make a crime of innocent recreation or honest business. Will it be acceptable to the Sabbatarians? No. Why not? Because they are not one-hundredth part as solicitous about the workman's rest day as they are about the "sanctity of the Sabbath." They want Sunday laws to promote "worship," as Blair has boldly stated in his recently introduced District of Columbia bill.

The article upon church property which appears in this and succeeding issues of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be made into a pamphlet immediately upon completion. The book will be a vade mecum, as the pedants say, upon the subject, and is designed as a handbook for those who object to being held up by the tax gatherer and forced to pay other people's taxes.

This question will be brought before the New York Constitutional Convention, which meets in May, and every delegate shall be supplied with this pamphlet. We also desire to place it in the hands of every editor and legislator in the state—and in the country, if we can—with requests for notice and discussion. We also want to circulate it generally and generously. The price for single copies will be low (we will announce it as soon as the cost is determined) and in quantities still lower.

To distribute it as it should be we want help, particularly from the Liberals of New York state, though it will not be refused from anybody. It is a national question and work done in one state helps in others. Those who feel like helping can send such sums as they can spare and will receive pamphlets to the amount of their donation.

The more we receive the wider will be the circulation of the pamphlet. Every Liberal is interested in this question, and we hope will help us to distribute thousands.

The officers of the National Spiritualists' Association announce that the Hon. Omer M. Kem, of Nebraska, in the lower House, and Senator Jones, of Arkansas, in the upper House, will do all they can against the Morse-Frye joint resolution. President H. D. Barrett and Secretary Robt. A. Dimmick of the Association say that both Representativ Kem and Senator Jones are Spiritualists and therefore are awake to the necessity of work. Secretary Dimmick states that remonstrances against the amendment can be had at this office and at the headquarters of the National Spiritualists' Association, 510 E. street, N. W., Washington, D. C. We rejoice to see our Spiritualist friends up and doing. Quoting the proposed amendment, the Light of Truth says editorially: "This is enough to cause the shades of Jefferson, Franklin, Adams, Paine, and Washington to rise up and blast the insufferable ignoramuses who father the scheme with a paralysis that would forever stop another wag of their tongues or a lift of their fingers."

Mr. Putnam reports that at the hearing on the Christian amendment, on March 6th, but eight of the seventeen members of the House Committee on the Judiciary were present. The Christian Statesman says editorially that "nearly every member of the Committee was present." With nine members absent it is something of a stretch of language to say that "nearly every member" was at the meeting. The Christian Reformer, more careful, agrees with Mr. Putnam.

The Christian Statesman says mournfully that on Sunday, March 11th, seventy-five thousand people visited Schenley Park in Pittsburg. It of course calls this "Sabbath desecration." Such reckless pursuit of pleasure and health by those seventy-five thousand citizens of Covenanter Pittsburg is indescribably horrible. The wicked creatures will probably soon get the idea into their perverse minds that the trees and flowers may not, after all that has been preached, spend eternity in hell as a punishment for growing on the "Sawbath."

There was presented in Congress a few days ago a petition in favor of the Christian amendment. This fact is not remarkable, in itself considered, but when it is known that on this petition were the names of twenty-two senators of the Iowa legislature the reader will probably be set to thinking even more seriously than he has heretofore concerning the irrepressible conflict between theology and human liberty. We are informed that only twenty-four of the Iowa senators were seen, and all but two of these signed the petition.

"A so-called 'sacred' concert, for charity, was given in Ford's Opera House, Baltimore, Md., on Sabbath, February 11th, at which such 'sacred' compositions as Wagner's 'Tannhäuser,' 'Hungarian Fantasie,' 'Oriental Festival March,' 'Torchlight Dance,' etc., were rendered by one hundred Baltimore musicians. It is about time this thin disguise was torn from the open profanations of the Sabbath."—Christian Statesman.

Yes, it is, but it will not be while Sabbatarians hav the power to secure the enactment and enforcement of their contemptible Sunday laws. The worshipers of the Sunday fetich are responsible for all this hypocrisy.

At a Boston meeting, held to advance the Christian amendment propaganda, Joseph Cook said: "Our fathers voted God out of the Constitution Let us vote him in again." One would suppose that Mr. Cook's "God" is utterly helpless, and we presume that he is. What these men mean is, that the fathers voted the theocrat's ideas about God out of the Constitution, and now the theocrats want to vote them into that instrument. Mr. Cook also said: "It is necessary to exercise prudence and not drive the thick end of the wedge first." Ah! wants to catch the American people with "guile," presumably.

In a syndicate article Jeannette L. Gilder writes of Annie Besant:

"I hav always regarded Mrs. Besant as a woman who was not discussed in polite society. Her connection with the late Charles Bradlaugh, her Malthusian pamphlets, and her blatant unbelief made her a social outcast."

Dear Miss Gilder, do you suppose Jesus was "discussed in polite society"? It is reported in an old volume for which presumably you hav much respect that he mingled with "publicans and sinners," which would lead us to infer that he was a "social outcast." Do you not know that "polite society" has always turned the cold shoulder to the men and women whom later generations delighted to honor? You sneer at Charles Bradlaugh, but it would be well if "polite society" in England or America had produced in two generations a man so great in all the elements of true nobility and usefulness.

If you happen to be in Kansas City, Missouri, on Sunday and wish to be shaved you can be accommodated if you will sign this confession:

"For the purpose of obtaining the services of the barber shop in the Midland Hotel on Sunday, I state that the service of a barber shop is a necessity to me at this time, and that my omission to obtain such service on Saturday was not through any fault or neglect on my part."

This statement is in compliance with the ruling of Judge Wofford. Why should his ruling not also apply in the case of Sunday shoe polishing? And of clothes dusting? In short, is there logically any stopping-place in this dirty business of church-state interference with the private affairs of men and women? How much longer will the descendants of the men of the Revolution stand this insolent nonsense? Of what use is the ballot to them if they do not make these judicial tools of the clergy feel the force that they can wield?

The Pittsburg Times, reporting the proceedings at a mass meeting in that city called to indorse the Christian amendment, givs this brief summary of an address by Dr. F. S. Scovel, president of Wooster, Ohio, University:

"He affirmed that it was in no way revolutionary. He said that this is the only final method of settling the controversy and the questions which grow out of it. The amendment defines the limits of personal liberty as within the bounds of Christian morality, and affords a basis for proper legislation on gambling, marriage, divorce, and Sunday observance."

Settling what controversy? Who presumes to say that we are so sure of the truth of any concept of religion that we can once and for all settle the controversy over it by putting into the law the opinion of one faction? Has not the world already often and severely enough burned its fingers in that fire? Are we to keep on forever "settling" controversies about God and Jesus and the Bible by pounding other people's beliefs into men's heads with policemen's clubs? Who dares say that the "limits of personal liberty" lie "within the bounds of Christian morality"? Morality is a growth, not a revelation, and the ethical conceptions of to-day had their source in experiences through which man passed thousands of years before the birth of Christianity. Those early ideas of man's relations to his fellows hav been gradually developed through the ages and are still undergoing very slow modification. The law of equal liberty cannot be chained to a creed which modern science and critical scholarship hav bent and shaken and whittled, but for which divine paternity and authority are still claimed by those who wish to force their belief in it upon their indifferent or skeptical fellow citizens.

Editor Buckley of the Christian Advocate says that he cannot see the wisdom of attempting to amend the Constitution as the theocrats desire. He would be compelled to antagonize the movement if it had any prospect of success. He thinks Christians should be content with "In God We Trust" on the coins, the recognition of God in the Declaration of Independence and in more than thirty state constitutions, the obiter dictum of the Supreme court that this is a Christian nation, the judicial oath, and the law-enforced "Christian Sabbath." He declares that to introduce the name of "'Jesus Christ our Lord' into the Constitution of our country would be a step toward the union of church and state, which, so long as we wish liberty of conscience, we can never advocate." But are not all these existing Christian features, which Mr. Buckley favors, steps "in the direction of union of church and state"? Of course. Why, then, does he oppose the amendment? Because he is more crafty than the Covenanters. Hear him:

"An agitation such as this can simply arouse opposition where it is now slumbrous, and lead to the unrestrained utterance of sentiments provocativ of irreverence and irreligion."

Rev. Mr. Buckley is afraid of going too far by one forced march. He doesn't want the church army to get too far away from its base of supplies. It might be defeated and lose all the special privileges it now has. Therefore the reverend politician is in favor of one step at a time. He could easily help get a Sunday law for the District of Columbia, for instance. But it would not do to arouse the enemy by a premature revelation of his full plan of campaign. Mr. Buckley is very shrewd, but his game is perfectly well known to us. Samuel P. Putnam is right—we must watch the District Sunday law scheme and hav permanent headquarters in Washington.

Rev. J. M. Foster has an article in the Christian Statesman in which he givs many alleged reasons why the pending Christian amendment should be adopted. Here is one of them:

"Because these [Christian] forces are not operativ in the government unless they are recorded in the nation's Constitution. In 1808 President Jefferson was petitioned to proclaim a fast by the New England ministers. He refused by saying: 'I consider myself as interdicted by the Constitution from doing anything that pertains to religion.' In 1858 the Sabbath laws of California were tried in the Supreme Court. Judge Terry decided them unconstitutional, because they are a discrimination in favor of Christianity, and so against all other religions. Judge Burnet coincided with him. Since then California has had no Sabbath law. In 1869 the Bible was tried in the Supreme Court of Ohio for being in the public schools of Cincinnati. Judge Welch decided that, since the words 'Bible,' 'Christian,' and 'Christianity' do not occur in the Constitution of the United States, the word 'religion' in that instrument must mean 'man's religion.' And so the Bible, the exponent of the religion of Christ, has no right in the public schools. Ex-president Woolsey said, in the Evangelical Alliance, in New York, in 1873, 'Our Constitution would require no change to be adapted to a Mohammedan nation.'"

It will be seen that no decision above quoted sustaining the Constitution as it should be interpreted, and as secularists understand it, was written later than 1869. The tendency to read into the law in some way the assumption that "this is a Christian nation," has been growing stronger year by year since the close of the Civil war, and it is the purpose of the theocrats to complete the work of perversion by the adoption of the Morse-Frye amendment. Freethinkers cannot fail to realize the vital necessity of keeping the Constitution on the side of religious liberty, and we maintain that this is the most important issue before the people to-day. We must defend ourselvs. To this end judges must be watched and the votes of Freethinkers made effectiv.

Freethought Progress.

The Freethinkers of Spain are to erect a monument in honor of Ramon Chiés. Seven hundred and ninety pesetas were subscribed the first week.

The Truth Seeker and the London Freethinker are the two most prominent and widely circulated Freethought journals of the world, says Der Lichtfreund, of Vienna.

The Freethought Federation of Sweden is the recipient of a gift of one thousand crowns. Would that one of our wealthy Freethinkers would donate one thousand dollars to the American Freethought Federation.

Johannes Cyevski, the ex-Catholic priest, and for fifty years a Free Religious agitator and lecturer, is dead. His life was a continual battle, and like all reformers and apostles of liberty he died poor. He reached the age of eighty-one years. Honor to his memory.

The Turners of Milwaukee, Wis., held a rousing Paine celebration. There was music, singing, and speeches, the latter in both the German and English language. Mr. C. Hermann Boppe, editor of Der Freidenker, delivered the German oration, while Mr. I. Ulrich spoke in English.

We are the recipient of several numbers of La Razon, published at Caracas, Venezula, by our valiant contemporary, Luis P. Herrera, and judging from various articles we can but congratulate all friends of liberty in Venezula on the fact that they hav at least one periodical which is not merely willing, but also capable of defending liberty of conscience.

An International Freethought Congress will be held at Brussels, Belgium, during the fall of 1894. ∴∴∴ The Belgian Freethinkers are following in the wake of their French and Spanish brethren, and will publish an annual this year, which is to contain such statistical information as will be of interest to Belgian Freethinkers. ∴∴∴ The Belgian Freethinkers hav several schools, an orphan asylum, and an infirmary for aged and decrepit Freethinkers.

The London Freethinker says: "Chinon is a little town in old Touraine, now the department of Indre et Loire, France. It will ever be celebrated as the birthplace of the great Freethinking wit, François Rabelais. There is at present a Freethought society in the town. They call themselvs Les Enfants de Rabelais. A recent funeral of one of their members was attended by more than three hundred persons, and the proceedings gave great offense to the clericals."

New York labor unions hav passed this resolution: "We insist upon a return to fundamental principles of free speech, free press, and free mails, and an adherence to constitutional guarantees which assure those rights to the citizen, and we demand that the laws shall be enforced only by the duly authorized officers of the people. In view of the mischievous possibilities of the Comstock laws, we demand their repeal as being a source of confusion in the administration of justice and a practical denial of constitutional rights."

The German Freethinkers hav circulated a petition to the Reichstag, in which they ask for the abolition of the infamous section 166 of the criminal law, which provides for the punishment of those who poke fun at any church humbug. ∴∴∴ Delegates from societies for "Ethical Culture" met recently in congress at Eisenach, Germany. It was resolved to form an international union to insure a propagation of ethical principles. Dr. W. Förster, who lectures for the Berlin society, was elected president. ∴∴∴ We doubt whether the Christians hav made a bona fide sale of any of their manifold pamphlets exceeding that of the "Spaziergänge eines Atheisten" by Heigl, which has reached forty-five thousand copies, yet this number is less than that of "Dominee, Pastor of Rabbi," by J. G. ten Bokkel, which is about fifty thousand copies. ∴∴∴ The Independent says Catholic papers in Germany complain that the spirit of unbelief is gaining ground in the gymnasia and the high schools under control of the church. It quotes from one of these papers as follows: "The Catholic college student in Berlin is, as a rule, without faith. We do not recollect of a single case where one of these young men entered upon the study of theology. Among the older Catholic boys in Berlin there exists an unchurchly and even antichurchly spirit."

The Rev. Dr. Peake, of the Lord's Day Observance Society of England, having intimated that he was on the war path against Sunday "desecrators," George W. Foote, president of the National Secular Society, wrote a letter to the Star, closing with this challenge: "The London Hall of Science, the headquarters of the Secular party, has been open since 1869 and there has always been a charge for admission to the Sunday lectures, although of late we hav thrown a part of the hall open free. Why has Dr. Peake never molested us then? Is it simply because Freethinkers are an awkward lot to tackle? I invite this cocksure clerical fanatic to try his hand at a prosecution. He thinks he knows the law through and through. Well, I believe I know it better than he does; and if he chooses to play the game, I feel sure that he will learn two things—first, that the game itself is a pretty long one, and secondly, that his last card will be taken with the ace of trumps." ∴∴∴ There is progress even in Scotland, the birth-place of the Covenanter. A Scottish minister has ventured to ask that questions be handed to him on Sundays, and he will answer them from the pulpit. The Freethinker says that the first question asked was, "Who was David's mother?" He could not answer ∴∴∴ Lawson Tait, writing about the proposed memorial to Charles Darwin in Shrewsbury, says: "Now even parsons talk evolution in the pulpit without recognizing the fact that the words they use as everyday expressions and the views they promulgate are precisely those against which their predecessors fulminated so late as twenty years ago, and for which they condemned those of us who accepted them to all the penalties of 'infidels' in this world and condemned persons in the next." Mr. Tait had to leave his nativ city of Edinburgh in 1866 because of his acceptance of Darwin's principles. ∴∴∴ Sunday concerts hav spread as far north as Inverness, Scotland, to the great discomfiture of the clergy. ∴∴∴ A writer in the New Earth calls the attention of Sabbatarians to the commandment on which they base their doctrin. He says that the most important part of the command, and that which takes precedence over any other part, is that about working six days. It is strange that so many good people hav overlooked this most essential point. ∴∴∴ In London the income of the dispensaries, hospitals, and nursing institutions is increasing, and that of the missionary societies steadily decreasing.

Lectures and Meetings.

The Milwaukee Liberal Club meets at Severance Hall, 421 Milwaukee street, every Sunday at 7.30 P.M.

The Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia meets Sundays at 2.30 and 7.30 P.M. in Warner Hall, near Green and Broad streets.

The Women's Liberal League, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome.

March 27th—"Evolution vs. Revolution." Samuel H. Gordon.

The First Secular Church of Portland, Ore., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Katie Kehm Smith, lecturer. Sunday-school in same place at 12:30 P.M.

The Manhattan Liberal Club meets every Friday evening in German Masonic Hall, 220 East 15th street, New York, at 8 o'clock. Program for March.

March 23d—"Labor's Demands of the Constitutional Convention." Edward King.

March 30th—"The Truth about Hawaii." Clinton Furbish.

Franklin Steiner's lecture engagements are as follows:

Mar. 28, Greensburg, Pa.	April 8, Cincinnati. O.
" 25, Newark, N. J.	" 9, New Ross, Ind.
April 1, Alliance, O.	" 10, 11, West Point, Ind

" 8, Dayton, O.	" 15, Detroit, Mich.

"A Sermon to Liberals on Religion and Church" was the subject of Dr. J. H. Duren Ward last Sunday before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association. He began by remarking that man is by nature religious, and no matter how Liberals try they cannot get rid of religion and church, though they may destroy a religion and a church. He also remarked that Liberals do not organize as they should; that by their indifference in such matters they fail to do much good work that otherwise could be done. He said that if Liberals were consistent and worked together civilization might be advanced a thousand years further than it is. A very interesting debate followed the lecture. Mr. Rowley speaks next Sunday on "Moral Philosophy."

IS ROBBERY A RELIGIOUS VIRTUE?

THE GREAT MORAL AND PRACTICAL QUESTION.

THE CHURCH'S PROPERTY

Should It Be Exempt from Just and Impartial Taxation?

REASONS WHY IT SHOULD NOT.

An Argument for Eqnality of Taxation, and a Statement of Facts, Giving, from the Censns of 1890, the Valne, by Denominations, of Chnrch Property in the United States and in the Several States and Territories and in All Cities Having 25,000 or More Inhabitants; so Arranged as to Show at a Glance the Relative Standing as to Wealth of the Leading Denominations and Denominational Gronps.—Also, Mnch Other Matter of Especial Interest to Certain Cities, States, and Sections.—All Comparisons and Percentages Based Upon Official Figures.

If you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a tax upon the whole community.—James A. Garfield.

The property of church organizations is exempt from taxation. Why are these corporations granted such a great favor? Are there any good, or even plausible, reasons why they should be privileged above all other citizens and societies of citizens? "No taxation without representation" seems to demand a correlative, "no representation without taxation." So long as any kind of private property is subject to taxation, should not all kinds be equally subject? Each person invests his money where he believes it will yield him the largest dividend pecuniarily, or in mental and moral satisfaction. Because one man puts one thousand dollars into a church, and another the same amount into a Masonic hall, is no reason why the latter should be required to pay the taxes on both sums. It is plainly an injustice to compel him so to do. Could anything be more inequitable than the exemption from taxation of a million-dollar cathedral, built and patronized by wealthy people, while the small stores and shops of the men and women who can barely make a living, are taxed to the extreme limit of the rate?

Alleged Reasons for Exemption Examined.

What excuses are offered for this partialism? What arguments in its defense are advanced by its advocates? In the light of justice it is revealed as gross favoritism, in justification of which no valid argument can be put forward, no reasonable excuse devised. To the mind of the man who is familiar with the underlying principles of human justice and social ethics, it is self-evidently wrong. Yet it persists as a fact, and finds many apologists, both within the church and in the "world." Let us examine the less trivial of the pleas set up in extenuation or bold defense of this great evil of inequality of taxation.

Church property is non-productive, we are told. Admit that it is, what then? There is a vast amount of other property which is unproductiv. Shall it, also, be exempt from taxation? Many business investments turn out disastrously. Thousands of failures are recorded every year. Men put into various enterprises much more than they are able to get out of them. Shall this unproductive secular property be given a "free pass" by the state? Why should non-productive ecclesiastical property be exempt, while non-productive secular property is taxed? The homes of the people, from the laborer's cottage to the millionaire's mansion, are non-productive. From the hour they are completed, until they are destroyed by fire or flood or tempest, or become uninhabitable through the slow but sure processes of decay, they are constantly subject to deterioration, continually requiring repairs, alterations, and additions, which necessitate the expenditure of money that returns neither interest, profit, nor wages to him who spends it. Are these non-productive houses, with their plots of ground and outbuildings, exempt from taxation? It may be urged that these homes are in a manner productive, because, if their owners did not have them, they would be compelled to pay rent. And if the congregations did not build and own their churches, they would be under the necessity of hiring halls and paying rent therefor; so, viewed in that light, churches also are productive. Many of the halls and rooms owned by secret and fraternal societies are non-productive, and hence should be exempt from taxation if non-productivity is a legitimate cause for the exemption of churches.

But, as a matter of fact, are all churches wholly unproductive? In many of them pews are rented at prices which put them out of the reach of all but the more wealthy people of the society, making these churches practically Sunday club rooms for the rich. Why should they not pay taxes on these luxurious appointments of worship? People who own club rooms in which they worship probably just as sincerely on week days as they and others do in the fashionable churches on Sunday, must pay taxes on these places of resort, and there is no really sound reason why the owners of the churches should have more favors than they. They all freely choose their own methods and places of recreation or adoration, and should pay their own bills.

In another way the churches are productive. They are collection offices and workshops. In them are gathered most of the moneys which pay the salaries of one hundred and twelve thousand or more clergymen, and in them these clergymen do much of the work which entitles them to the pay. Here, also, are collected the enormous sums which maintain great missionary boards, thus furnishing remunerative employment to thousands more men and women. Why should the salaries of these resident clergymen, these organists, missionaries, and missionary society officials be augmented by the aggregate of taxes that church exemption saves to the ecclesiastical corporations which employ them? Or, if their salaries would be just as large without the exemption, why should the corporations be permitted to partly recoup themselves by forcing other classes of workmen to pay their taxes? To put it in another way, why should the people at large pay the taxes upon the workshops, offices, banks, and clearing houses of corporations having upon their pay rolls one hundred and fifty thousand or more men? In the buildings owned by these corporations millions of dollars are annually raised by means of pew rentals, fairs, raffles, meals, collections, and subscriptions. How can they be exempt from taxation on the ground of non-productivity?

In yet another way churches are money-making institutions. Every observant person knows that large numbers of business and professional men identify themselves with them because of the social, political, and pecuniary advantages to be obtained thereby. There are thousands of places in which one of the first and most frequently repeated questions concerning a new-comer is, "What church does he attend?" He finds it to his direct advantage to show himself immediately and often at one of the popular churches of the town. It is one of the ways in which he must advertise his business. Should he fail to present himself at some church door on Sunday mornings during the first few weeks of his sojourn in the place he will be more or less courteously informed by would-be friends that this, that, or the other is the church in Smithville. It is the largest, or the most respectable, or the wealthiest, or for some other reason the best society with which he can affiliate. It is delicately hinted that he cannot afford to hold aloof; that "nobody who is anybody" neglects the means of grace in that neighborhood. He soon finds—if he was previously unacquainted with the fact—that the church is popularly supposed to be a Bureau of Recommendation, and he perceives that a very large proportion of the merchants, doctors, lawyers, politicians, and many mechanics act as though they knew that one of her unwritten but unalterable laws was, "You patronize me and I will patronize you." In many places families are "out of society" if they do not belong to the church, and this is a very serious thing with most people who are ambitious and are not satisfied with the simple and pure triumphs of intellectual emulation and the sweet delights of nature. It is chiefly because of their business and social advantages that certain churches in every town so far outstrip others which are equally orthodox. It is a matter of value for value. The man of business insight pays what he thinks he can afford for church assistance. He realizes that the church is a social and political force which he must reckon with and whose friendship is more likely to help than to hinder him. He knows that it is merciless in its pursuit of doubt and nonbelief, or, at least, non-conformity. So he gives it money that he may get from its adherents more money in the near future. We have nothing to do here with the ethical bearing of these undeniable facts; they are mentioned only because they have a very direct connection with this question of church exemption. It is submitted to the candid judgment of every fair-minded citizen that when a man finds it to his pecuniary advantage to put his name on the membership roll of a church he should willingly pay his share of the taxes of that church. He should not shift any portion of the burden on to the shoulders of his rival who does not belong to any church. He should himself pay for his advertising. He has acted upon the assumption that the church is a productive factor in his business, and justice imperatively demands that, having invested his money at his own risk, he shall not force his neighbors to bear any portion of the expenses of collection of his dividends. The money which he put into the church was just as much a part of his active capital as that which he paid for his stock of goods, and it is certainly as clearly his duty to pay the taxes upon that as upon the goods.

Gifts make up the bulk of church property, we are sometimes informed; therefore it should not be taxed. If A leaves ten thousand dollars to the church instead of to his son, why should the son be compelled to pay more taxes on his farm or workshop because his father chose to give the ten thousand dollars to the church? This he must do under the present law, as his father has withdrawn that amount from the taxable property of the town and put it where it is a public charge. Why should not the church, having the benefit of the money, pay the taxes upon it? Why should the state fine the son for his father's failure to give him the property?

Who will argue that property which one individual has received by gift from another should not be taxed? Certainly such a claim would be preposterous. Why, then, make it in the interest of a church? A church is nothing but a society of individuals. This society may or may not make a better use of the gifts it receives than does the individual the gifts bestowed upon him. Whether it does or does not has nothing to do with the question of equal taxation. It has the property and can use it as it pleases, within the limits of the conditions imposed by the bestower; and the individual beneficiary can do no more. If fifty heads of families in a town each put two thousand dollars into a common fund and erect a church costing one hundred thousand dollars, what tenable reason is there for exempting that church from taxation which would not have been equally cogent for the exemption of the fifty sums of two thousand dollars each which were given to build it? It is always to be presumed when a man voluntarily gives another or others a sum of money that he follows the line of least resistance; that he derives more pleasure from the act of giving and the contemplation of the good which he imagines the money will do in the hands into which he has put it than he would have received had he kept the money in his own pocket. It is not at all necessary or just that some one else should be weighted with an additional tax because he gratified himself by making a present to a cause in which he is interested. That the present was made to a church, instead of to a Masonic society or a baseball club or a collector of botanical specimens or a relative, is only an incident which in no way affects the question of equitable taxation. Leaving to one side for a moment the fundamental idea of justice, it might indeed be argued with considerable force that those who are able to spare a portion of their wealth to the church are better prepared to pay the taxes on the church than are those outside of it who have a hard struggle to maintain their families and so are not in a position to make valuable gifts to any one. That is, the financial ability to support the church by gifts of land or money presupposes the possession of a like ability to pay all public dues upon the gift; for it is to be borne in mind that the giver is also, as a member of the church society, one of the receivers of his own benefaction. If he wishes to transfer a certain sum of money from one personal account to another he must be willing, or whether willing or not, must be made to pay the taxes on it after as he did before the transfer. He has no right to force his neighbors who are not members of the church to help him make his "free-will offerings." And if he is not a member or leaves the money at death the church receives the benefits and should pay the costs.

Churches exert a great moral influence, and therefore they should not be taxed, is another of the common objections urged by those who have not thoughtfully examined this problem. Perhaps no other "argument" against justice in taxation has so much influence on the average man as this, and yet no defense of church pauperism could be weaker. What can be said for the moral influence of an organization which deliberately refuses to pay its just dues? Fundamental to all morality is justice. The man who will not deal justly with his fellows is not moral in any practical way. He may cry aloud for morality and decency and purity until he is exhausted, but if he systematically defrauds his neighbors or denies to them equality of opportunity he is dishonest. It is a hollow mockery to claim that the church is a healthful moral influence while she each year puts her hand into the pockets of the people and steals millions of dollars. She owns the property and she should pay taxes upon it at the same rate that the individual citizen is assessed for his property. What an absurdity to try to excuse a man for refusing to pay his debts, on the ground that he is not under any obligation to pay them because he exerts a great moral influence! Why, under the universal application of this rule there would not be a knave in the country, the knaves being their own judges. All would be paragons of probity and purity, and exempt from taxation. Any organization which willingly receives from the state a tribute that the latter has taken by force from citizens not members of that organization by that acceptance throws itself under grave suspicion of extreme laxity of moral fiber. It has become a receiver of stolen goods. Every dollar that the church saves by the exemption of its property from taxation is a dollar inequitably acquired. The fact that the majority of church members honestly believe that the church is entitled to such exemption serves only to emphasize the truth that she is not entitled to it. An organization that can so blunt the moral sense of its adherents as to make them believe it is right to compel other people to pay their debts cannot be the mighty engine of righteousness that she is claimed to be. No amount of teaching of abstract principles of morals, Christian or any other kind, will neutralize the evil effects of immoral actions. When the church voluntarily declines to any longer accept tax-wrung appropriations for her schools and other institutions; when she demands that her property be taxed, and ceases to invade in other ways the equal rights of the people, she will rise very much in the estimation of right-thinking persons.

Advocates of exemption should bear in mind that no one wishes to tax the "moral influence" of the churches; it is their property that we affirm should bear its just proportion of the public burdens. It could quite as fairly be said that the "moral influence" of the honest merchant is lessened by the taxation of his property as that that of the church would be curtailed if she were compelled to depend upon her own resources instead of sponging her way as she is now permitted to do.

So much for the actual delinquencies of the church which have a direct bearing upon the issue of exemption, and about which there cannot be two opinions among intelligent lovers of justice, no matter what their religious beliefs may be. All such must admit after a fair investigation of the subject that the church cannot legitimately claim the exemption of her property from equal taxation with the homes of the people on the ground that she exerts a potent moral influence, for such exemption is itself immoral. Self-vaunted moralism is no warrant for the commission of an unjust act. The fact that a man does not swear or get drunk does not invest him with a right to appropriate his neighbor's property, not even though the latter is lacking in some of the moral graces.

Inasmuch as the exemption of church property necessitates the imposition of an additional tax upon the people at large, it follows that the nonbelief of a part of the tax-payers in the creeds of the churches must be taken into account in considering all pleas for exemption which are based on the theory that their good moral influence entitles the churches to this extraordinary privilege. No matter how excellent their influence in the community, the exemption of their property from taxation cannot be justified for a moment in any country which, as does ours, prohibits the union of church and state. As exemption of one is extra taxation of another the release of the churches from public burdens means the taxation of dissenters for the support of Christian ministers, and, consequently, the dissemination of Christian doctrines. No individual can be constitutionally or justly fined for the entertainment of opinions at variance with those promulgated by any church. He cannot be constitutionally or justly forced to pay even one cent of his earnings into the treasury of a church. The exemption of church wealth from taxation fines the dissenter by compelling him to pay a portion of the taxes of the churches, and this fine is a forced contribution for the maintenance of a religious system of which he does not approve, and which he would not voluntarily aid. It is not for others to determine what he shall give to or withhold from any Christian church. It is not for them to justify the alienation of his property by an appeal to the moral teachings and restraining influence of the churches. It is not what they think but what he thinks of religious precepts and church practices that will determine his decision as regards pecuniary support of the ecclesiastical organizations. What the minister calls moral he may consider decidedly immoral. He may say that the Bible is not a book which, upon the whole, will tend to produce a healthy moral development of the young mind. He may object, for instance, to the doctrine of vicarious atonement; to the idea that repentance will secure rewards which a good life would not; to the attitude of many of the Biblical writers toward slavery, witchcraft, wine drinking, and polygamy. He may aver that the great virtue of tolerance receives scant honor from any division of the church, and that the Bible also sanctions the intolerant and persecuting spirit; he may say that the narrative of wars waged by the Jews and the record of the massacres they committed, together with the very plain language of a large number of chapters and passages, make that volume an extremely risky one to use in Sunday schools, and otherwise put into the hands of children. Now, it is not material whether this critic is right or wrong in his animadversions upon the scriptures and his skepticism regarding the moral influence of the churches; it is sufficient that he does not accept the one as God's word, and does not ally himself with the other. Doubting the divinity of the Bible and questioning the healthfulness of clerical teaching and example, he has the undoubted right to withhold his support from any and all churches. When the church asks that he be compelled to give her financial aid, she trespasses in intent, and when she takes from the hands of the state the money that he has yielded only at the behest of irresistible power, she vindicates the wisdom of his doubts regarding her purity of purpose and her fitness to guide, instruct, and admonish the youth of the land. To tax men of one belief or opinion for the propagation of the belief or opinion of other men, is an outrage, and the plea that those in whose interest the mulct is paid should receive it because their influence tends to the diminution of immorality and crime, destroys itself.

If church property should be exempt from taxation because of the morally educative, protective influence of the pulpits and Sunday-schools, then, by a parity of reasoning, we should be forced to argue in favor of the same exemption for religious papers, tract societies, publishers of religious books, and the various organizations which claim to be entirely devoted to the work of moral education, rescue of the unfortunate, and prevention of divers acts not acceptable to the operators and backers of the societies in question, and perhaps not to the masses of the people. That this claim of "moral influence" put forward in defense of the privileges now granted to the churches would be equally applicable if urged in favor of a like favoritism to the societies and business houses named above, is self-evident.

But we need not stop here—nay, we cannot stop here. Every legitimate business enterprise, every place in which labor finds occupation that keeps hands from mischief and brains from atrophy, is a center of moral influence. Every farm which lies green and golden and brown under the sun of spring and summer and autumn; every workshop and mill and factory in which men and women fashion articles of utility and beauty; every home where knowledge and honor and love are enthroned; every man and every woman who eats bread honestly earned, and injures none through malice; every one who is kind and generous and just, and trespasses not—all these places and persons radiate moral influence as the sun sends forth light, and all should be exempt from taxation if it be right to exempt church property because of the alleged good effect of religious teaching and Christian practice.

The moral influence argument proves too much and hence proves nothing.

A fine church enhances the value of adjacent property, it is sometimes contended, therefore it is just to exempt ecclesiastical edifices and other such property from taxation. It is somewhat difficult to see why, granting that the church does increase the value of a few pieces of near-by property, the tax-payers in other parts of the town or county should be required to pay the church's taxes, unless we are supposed to assume that the increase of taxable property in the neighborhood of the church equals the taxable value of the church, which would not very frequently be the case, I judge.

It is not at all certain that the erection of a church would increase the value of property in its vicinity, even if the owners of the property were all devout Christians. Bell ringing, the collection of crowds in the evenings, funeral processions, and other like elements of the problem have to be taken into consideration by the residents. It is a fact that in some localities in the residence parts of the cities a church is considered a positive evil. All contracts for the transfer of property in a section of West Eighty-fifth street, New York, contain an ironclad stipulation that no livery stable or church shall be erected on the land described in the document. Livery stables are proverbially undesirable neighbors, almost universally looked upon as nuisances, and generally held to be extremely dangerous; and therefore when property owners find it necessary to include churches with them in a prohibitive contract, we must conclude that tenants think that the towering edifices of worship are also nuisances, if not actually sources of danger, for we may be sure that land holders would not make a rule against any class of business or buildings that acceptable tenants desire in their vicinage, for that would lessen their profits, and cent per cent is the fundamental law of trade and investment.

There is another fact that cannot be lost sight of when we inquire whether the value-elevating attribute of a church entitles it to exemption from taxation. There is no reason founded on the bedrock principles of religious freedom and equal justice, why a Freethinker should be compelled to pay a tax on an increased valuation estimated by a Christian assessor, while he himself holds that his property is worth less than it was before the erection of the church, and also be forced to help pay the tax of the church. The first is an unavoidable evil, but the latter is an injustice which need not be perpetrated. To avoid it it is only necessary to adopt the principle of uniform taxation herein advocated.

But a handsome residence would likewise increase the value of adjacent houses and lots. Should the residence be exempt from taxation on that account? The erection of a block of storerooms and offices would also increase the value of adjoining property. Should the new block therefore be put on the deadhead list? Or a citizen adorns his premises with a fountain, and statuary, and shrubbery, and flower gardens. These improvements will undeniably make the places on either side and across the street more desirable as homes, and will, consequently, raise their market value also. Is the man who has pleased himself by creating the conditions which have made the whole neighborhood more attractive, and its properties more salable, to be put on the free list by the city assessor?

Following this argument for church exemption to its ultimation, no property that in any way increases the value of other property would be taxed. So another so-called argument for the exemption of church property from equitable taxation reduces itself to an absurdity.

Why Church Property Should Be Taxed.

Because its exemption interferes with religious liberty. The right of the citizen to worship or not to worship, as he is impelled by his own conscience and directed by his own intellect, is inviolable and inalienable. Any forcible interference with the enjoyment of this right, by either church, society, or the state, is a crime. Therefore the exemption of church property from taxation is a crime, for it lessens the financial ability of the non-church-member to propagate his personal beliefs and compels him to contribute of his earnings for the propagation of beliefs which are abhorrent to his intellect or his moral sense or both.

There is no difference in principle between a direct and an indirect appropriation for the support of theology. It cannot truly be said that A is denied equal religious freedom less by an act of the legislature which compels him to pay a portion of the taxes upon B's place of worship than he would be by an appropriation bill which necessitated an extra tax upon his property for the payment of the salary of B's pastor. A church is an association formed for the purpose of teaching certain religious theories, or establishing certain religious facts, if you please, believed in or known to the men and women who compose this church. They have—or should have—perfect liberty to attach themselves to or withdraw from this religious society. This right of free association is derived from the right to worship. It is one of the means employed to secure enjoyment of the primary right. Each such voluntary combination (denomination) of persons of similar beliefs is naturally expected to be self-supporting. Of course whatever it receives by free gift from those outside its fold is a part of its legitimate assets. But it outrageously interferes with the equal right of association of men and women of a divergent belief if it takes by force even one cent from them, directly or indirectly. Not only does it trample the right of association, but it invades the equal religious liberty of the isolated citizen who does not care to ally himself with any society, if it takes from him, without his consent, by means direct or circuitous, any portion, no matter how small, of his labor fruits. If people are moved, by whatsoever cause, to be religious, non-religious, or anti-religious, they must be so at their own cost, else they disregard the fundamental principle of the right of private judgment. If they grow tired of contributing to the support of the ministry of their church let them withdraw from it. That is the only honorable course they can pursue. But to compel others to pay for their religion is dishonorable and downright dishonest, as it is destructive of religious liberty.

News and Notes from Washington.

The God-in-the-Constitution amendment, at the present date, is in a very demoralized condition. You might say it is in a comatose state. It is not dead, but sleepeth. It is tucked quietly away in the House Judiciary rooms, but it may be resurrected at any time and put on new life. It is one of those things that die hard. It won't do to cease watching.

In the Senate the amendment is dead. The subcommittee, to which the matter was referred, did not report favorably. It was punctured by some pertinent inquiries of Senator Vilas and collapsed. It does not seem possible to revive the question in the Senate committee.

The only hope now for the amendment is the House Judiciary committee; and the facts are about these: Only two of the House committee are in favor of the Amendment; but although such a great majority are opposed, still the amendment is held in abeyance—that is, its consideration is laid aside for the time being. It is not definitly disposed of, for or against, and for this purpose, as far as I can get at it: To giv the Christian sa chance to rally their forces throughout the country, and by meetings, resolutions, telegrams, and letters, to so inundate the committee that even against its own convictions it will report the amendment to the House for action, on the plea that as so many people demand it, it ought to pass through the committee and hav its chance before the country; and hence it may be possible that the committee with 15 to 2 against will still report the amendment; for the argument of the church party to the committee is this: "Your action will not amend the Constitution; but you can giv the people a chance to act on the matter, and that is all we want." It will be seen that such an argument weighs with a politician; and he will avoid all responsibility by saying: "Personally, I am not in favor of the amendment, but giv the people a chance to vote on it."

This is the only possible hope of the Christians ever getting the amendment before the country—the plea, Giv the people a chance to vote upon it. Of course this would hav no weight with men of sense, but men of sense do not always predominate in Congress.

It will easily be seen that the only way to meet these tactics of the church party is for every Freethinker in the country to write to the committee, and to get all others possible to write, so that this amendment can be killed where it ought to be killed, in the committee room. I am very sure that if every Freethinker will do his duty in this respect, this amendment will never be taken from its present pigeon-hole. Of course I am perfectly willing to appeal to the people, but no true lover of his country desires to see it for the next fifty years plunged into the fiercest religious controversy of the ages. Every good citizen will endeavor to crush this monster before it can rend and tear the nation. Hence we must put forth every possible effort to crush this conspiracy in its very inception.

If the matter assumes any such proportions as suggested, we shall hav our chance for reply before the committee. There will be a hot debate. The church party, therefore, are in a box. If they let the matter rest just where it is, the amendment is dead; and if there is any further action, then it will be our chance to talk and pour hot shot into the orthodox camp. The moderate Christians dread this controversy and would rather leave the matter where it is than thus let loose the fires of a religious warfare.

I am quite sure that the presence of A. T. Jones, Allen Moon, and myself, with the aid that others would giv if necessary, has blocked the game of the Christians, for if there had been no opposition apparent before the committee, then the Christians would hav appealed to the good will of the committee, and said, "Giv us a chance before the people." And the committee might hav said: "Well, perhaps the people do want it; and it won't do any harm to let them hav a chance to vote upon it." But when the Christians are confronted with stubborn resistance before the committee itself, their plea that the people want it is contradicted, the backbone of the committee is supported, and moderate Christians begin to cry for quarter. It s simply absolute nonsense to say this amendment would not hav passed the committee under any circumstances. The very fact that the committee, with a large majority against the amendment, still refuses definitly to repudiate it, shows that they do fear the bulldozing tactics of the church party, and that even against their better judgments they might at last report the bill to the House.

Whatever happens the fight will be long continued. We are dealing with a set of fanatics who hav fought the principles of this government since its foundation. Foiled on one point they resort to some other, and they will never giv up the contest. They are now concentrating forces on a District Sunday law. This is a most dangerous piece of legislation, and we must meet it in every possible way. I shall seek for a hearing before the committee. Write to every member of committee whose name has been given in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The passage of a bill like this would be a great triumph for the Christians. In addition to this they hav in readiness a National Sunday law, to be introduced at the first favorable opportunity. This is the long session of Congress. It may last until July or August, and it will not do for us to remit our exertions in the least. I shall hold myself in readiness for any action taken by the church party. They hav money; they hav members of Congress devoted to their interests; and they will use all sorts of subterfuges in order to bring their measures before the House. This Sunday legislation business is especially to be guarded against, for in it are all the bad features of the God-in-the-Constitution amendment. It is a practical declaration by Congress that we are a Christian government. I ask for the support of Liberals that I may continue this battle, even to the end of this present session of Congress, for during the whole session there is peril to the liberties of the people. The time has come, I believe, when we must make Washington a center of operations, and we must be prepared always to meet our enemies in the halls of Congress. Do not fail to send in contributions for this purpose to E. C. Reichwald, 165 South Water street, Chicago. There never was a time which demanded more decisiv and united action on the part of Liberals. Besides work in Congress we must distribute pamphlets, we must educate the people.

At the Front.

After my lecture in Chicago. I took the train for Delphos, O., where I received a warm welcome to the home of my friend B. A. Roloson, one of the most activ and enthusiastic Freethinkers of my acquaintance. He is the leader of our movement in Delphos, and I need not say that he is a banner of strength to our cause. Being a lawyer by profession, it chanced that, while I was in Delphos, he had a case in court. His legal opponent was a fanatical Methodist. A little girl, twelve years old, was placed upon the stand, and the pious lawyer tried to intimidate her by asking where she would go when she died if she told an untruth. Friend Roloson's sense of justice waxed warm, and he made the court ring with an appeal for fair play, and a denunciation of such contemptible tactics on the part of an attorney. It is needless to say that the question was overruled.

On Wednesday evening I lectured before the Delphos Freethought Society, upon the great conspiracy now in operation by the priesthood against religious liberty. A large audience was present, and I think that Delphos Liberals are alive to the situation. Roloson keeps things activ. Among the many other Liberals of Delphos, I can mention Joseph Roth, who was originally a Catholic. Mr. Roth is a solid Freethinker, and is ever ready to take a stand for Freethought principles. He is fearless and outspoken at all times. Among the others I may mention Mr. Smith and the Eisenbach family, and the Drs. Brundage. Surely our cause here is well sustained.

My next engagement was Alliance, O., where I was to giv two lectures. Mr. D. W. Smith met me at the train, and conducted me to his hospitable home. Soon I met his brother, R. G. Smith, and the Smith brothers are truly the vanguard of Liberalism in Alliance. The Freethinkers hav charge of a building called the Independent Church, where our lectures are given. It was once a Christian church, but now the religious features are no more. The communion pitcher and goblet are still in the pulpit, filled with water for the lecturer when he becomes thirsty. The Christians speak of this church as "the hell on the hill." It causes them a world of anxiety. They taunt Infidels because they own no more halls than they do, but they are very glad, in reality, that we hav so few of them. Through the energetic work of Mr. D. W. Smith two fine audiences greeted me, and it was decided that I giv two more lectures in Alliance on my return West.

On Tuesday I took the train for New York city over the Pennsylvania road, and Wednesday morning found me in THE TRUTH SEEKER office. The first for me to meet was the Editor, of whom the late Congress had left me many pleasant memories. Here I met for the first time his brother George, the delight of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER far and near. I also met with pleasure Mr. E. C. Walker, who has done valuable work for Freethought.

On Friday evening I took dinner with Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., after which we repaired to the German Masonic Temple, where the Liberal club was to hold its seven hundredth meeting. A large audience was present to hear my lecture on "The Great Religious Conspiracy." A discussion followed, Messrs. Wakeman, Oppenheimer, Rowley, McDonald, Weeks, and Dr. Foote, who presided, being the participants. The chief objection to the points of the lecture was that there is no danger to be feared from the God-in-the-Constitution movement. I took the position that if the American people wake up to the situation, there is no danger, but their apathy will result in a victory for priestcraft. Though nearly every idea conceived by the human brain has been ventilated at the Liberal Club, every one receives a warm welcome and respectful attention, no matter what he may hav to say.

The following Sunday I lectured in Brooklyn before the Philosophical Society, and a great pleasure it was. Nowhere could I hav had a more intelligent, appreciativ audience. Mr. Henry Rowley, the president, introduced me. I must here make mention of the splendid work done by this gentleman. His whole soul is in our movement. Besides being a man of wonderful information, he is a genuin orator—one of the best speakers I ever heard. He has organized a class of young men for the study of Logic, and it is gratifying to know that it is highly successful. A warm discussion followed the lecture, though good feeling prevailed throughout. The New York World gave a fair report of what I said. Mr. Thomas Duntze is secretary of the society, and Mr. Winham is treasurer. I hav also been to Ellenville, New York, and to Philadelphia, of which I shall tell in my next article. I return to the West the latter part of March, and wish to make an extended tour of Iowa, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and I hope that friends in those states will correspond with me at once, addressing Box 882, Des Moines, Iowa.

New York City. FRANKLIN STEINER.

The Cause in Oregon.

In point of numbers the Oregon State Secular Union is increasing rapidly. Every mail brings new members, and money enough has thus far been contributed to pay off the old debts, pay for new membership blanks and a year's supply of stationery. We hav been able to do this through the following contributions: From W. E. Jones, Portland; Mrs. A. DePeatt, Ashland; M. Manning, Forest Grove; Wm. Barlow, Barlow; F. J. Beaty, Chemawa; B. F. Hyland, Corvallis; Levi Oren, Corvallis; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Beaty, Chemawa; M. J. Olds, Dr. A. K. Olds, W. T. Booth, McMinnville; W. A. Gilmore, Marshfield; H West, Mrs. H. West, Scappoose, $1 each. From Thos. Bellingher, Bruce Huston, M. Bisbee, Forest Grove; W. W. Price, Scappoose, $2 each. From R. H. and Ann Scott, Woodburn, $10, and $3 from Mrs. Maria West, Scappoose, making a total of $35.

Two new circuits, with Secular Sunday-schools, hav been formed, one at Forest Grove, in charge of Mrs. A. E. Barker, and the other includes Ranier and surrounding country, in charge of Henry Addis.

At the last meeting of the executiv committee of the Oregon State Secular Union held in Portland, Sunday, March 3d, the following persons were licensed to lecture under the auspices of the Oregon State Secular Union: Mrs. A. E. Barker, Portland; Nettie A. Olds, McMinnville; Virgil S. Smith, Beaverton, and Katie Kehm Smith, Oregon City.

Miss Olds delivers her first lecture March 17th, at the Portland Secular church. Virgil S. Smith is a new worker in our cause. While a student at the Willamette University, where he was fitting himself to become a foreign Christian missionary, he became acquainted with W. E. Jones and his bookstore of reform literature and became a Liberal and is now preparing himself to be a home missionary in the cause of Freethought. He is young, earnest, and enthusiastic, and no doubt will do much good for the cause in Oregon.

Over three hundred people were present at the First Secular church of Portland when resolutions were unanimously adopted, protesting against the proposed amendment of the National Reform Association to the Constitution of the United States.

Copies of these resolutions, signed by President T. R. Kemp and Secretary H. E. Girard, were sent to the chairman of both the Senate and House committee on judiciary, and to Oregon's senators and representativs.

A number of copies of the resolutions were type-written by Superintendent Nettie A. Olds, of the Portland Secular Sunday-school, and sent to Oregon Liberals, urging them to take immediate action in their neighborhood. In addition to this, the members of the Secular church are circulating THE TRUTH SEEKER petitions and obtaining hundreds of signatures.

The executiv committee of the Oregon State Secular Union adopted similar resolutions at its regular quarterly meeting, March 3d, and the secretary has forwarded the same to Washington.

This is a copy of the circular letter which the executiv committee of the Oregon State Secular Union authorized sent to Liberals:

DEAR FRIEND: We want you to kindly giv this letter your personal and prompt attention. No one knows better than you that we advocate a just cause; no one wishes more than you for the success of that cause.

There are thousands of men and women in the state who feel about the cause just as you do.

Dr. Buckley, editor of the Christian Advocate, once sneeringly said of Freethinkers that "they hold mere annual conclaves for shouting maledictions at the ever-increasing millions of the Christian churches." No doubt there is some truth in this, and that is why Freethinkers become discouraged and apathetic.

They see "annual conclaves" held; the treasury emptied to pay for "maledictions," and the people go home and nothing more done until a year rolls round, when another "annual conclave" is called, more "maledictions" listened to and paid for and the treasury emptied again, and again the people go home to do nothing.

Of course these "conclaves" hav done some good, but most Liberals hav not been satisfied with the results.

In consequence of this dissatisfaction, the Oregon State Secular Union has incorporated to giv it a legal existence and laid down some more aggressiv lines to work by, chief among which are: (1) The forming of circuits in charge of stationed lecturers who must work up societies and Sunday-schools and deliver regular lectures, and (2) Organize our forces to make a determined fight for the taxation of church property. It is evident that we need to know the name and address of every Liberal in Oregon. It is evident, also, that we must show our legislature that the Oregon Secular Union is numerically very strong. (Politicians hav great respect for numbers.) We want to be able to publish to the world, and especially the politicians of Oregon, that the Oregon State Secular Union is fifteen thousand strong, and we can do it if every Liberal in the state will join it. We therefore want you to join the Union and get others to do so if you can. Be sure the money will be used for permanent work and not for the temporary "conclaves." Membership is free, but we must provide the Science-schools with lessons, songs, etc., and pay the expenses of the Union; so help financially, if you can.

Send for more blanks if you can use them.

By order of the executiv committee.

KATIE KEHM SMITH, Sec.

Every Liberal in the state who reads this letter—will you not consider it addressed to you and respond?

All of the circulars, the lessons, songs, poems, constitutions, and instructions to the local auxiliaries and Sunday-schools are type-written by Miss Olds and myself, as there is no money to hav them printed.

Liberals of Oregon, are you in favor of holding one annual mass-meeting, or do you wish to see permanent work all the year round in the form of Secular churches or Unions and Science Sunday-schools, equipped with paraphernalia so simple that any one who can read and who will take time to do so, can organize and conduct them?

If the latter, now is the time to let it be known.

Five hundred more membership blanks hav been printed.

KATIE KEHM SMITH,
Sec. Oregon State Secular Union.

Observations.

The Hon. Mr. Coxey is said to be massing troops in the vicinity of Massillon, O., to be called the Industrial Army, and to march on to Washington in the interests of certain economic measures advocated by the People's party. His first lieutenant is Carl Brown, of Los Angeles county, Cal. Perhaps Mr. Coxy is a harmless person, though impracticable, but his first lieutenant is recognized by the people of California as a picturesque old fraud.

A weekly journal claiming to be "the only prohibition paper published by a heathen" comes from Lexington, Ky., and is called the Blue Grass Blade. Charles C. Moore is the editor and keeps himself in the reader's mind by means of his picture and also by using the capital "I" instead of the editorial "we." He thinks Lexington a good place for a paper like his, because whisky and religion of the most popular brands are made there and shipped to the heathen in the same barrel. Brer Moore, who describes himself as a "durned old Infidel," has had a varied experience, having been in both the pulpit and the jail. All the ministers of Lexington who enjoy his acquaintance are his friends; and, says he, with great modesty, "there are other ministers here who would be my friends if they only had the pleasure and honor to know me." One of Editor Moore's unsatisfied yearnings is to see Mohammed recognized by an amendment to the federal Constitution, for the Prophet was the first prohibitionist, and his influence is still felt among his followers. He also desires to meet Colonel Ingersoll in a debate on prohibition, being certain that he can giv the great orator what David gave Goliah. The paper contains a short article on the sanctity of the Sabbath, in which Mr. Moore says: "My habit has been for years to work on my farm on Sunday just like any other day, and though under this disregard of religious sanitation I hav never been struck by lightning and enjoy such health that I can any day walk to Lexington and back—sixteen miles—and am fifty-six years old, I find that age and trouble are more and more inclining me to the consolations of religion, and I hav concluded hereafter to devote my Sundays to pious meditation and fishing." In this way he hopes to atone for errors of the past. The old man is a writer of remarkable continuity, and contributes about a dozen long columns to his paper. There are no birds of his feather to flock with him, as he belabors Infidels for not being prohibitionists, and he can't catch on to the prohibitionist procession because he is an Infidel. I am afraid the Blue Grass Blade will not do much to popularize unbelief, but it may accomplish something in the way of stimulating thought in Prohibition circles.

The crust of whose Hecker you cannot break even with a blacksmith's sledge.—Priest Seahill.

Now Father Seahill, a Romish priest,
Confessor of Pasco Hodges,
Says all Freethinkers are brain-diseased,
And he's onto their Infidel dodges.
And priest and doctor hav disagreed
Regarding a question serious;
The one affirming a change of creed,
The other a mind delirious.
Says one, before the man went hence
He ordered his books cremated;
The other, displaying a larger sense,
Denies what the priest has stated.
Disputes like this are often known
To life, which delusions checker;
But what in the name of the Great Horn Spoon
Is the crust of an Infidel's Hecker?

This is the season of the year when the vox Hibernorum is heard in the land, demanding that the emerald flag surmount the public buildings of cities on St. Patrick's day. March 17th is an important anniversary in this Greater Ireland known to an cient history as the United States of America. The pope's Celtic subject has possession of the town. He scorns to work, begins boozing early, and at nightfall is seen meandering homeward with his face flushed and his whiskers full of crumbs from the free lunch counter. His motto is the green above the red, and he therefore stores the red-stuff beneath his regalia; but it mounts to his head and gets on top after all.

There is no disguising the truth that St. Patrick's day is a Roman Catholic festival. Although all Roman Catholics do not celebrate it, neverthless all who do celebrate it are Roman Catholics. The St. Patrick mythology has no place in the political history of Ireland. Any recognition of him must be based on the church legend that he converted the Irish people to Romanism, and is an admission that such conversion was an event worth commemorating. Public officials ought to quit that sort of tomfoolery, and the action of Mayor Schieren of Brooklyn, who refused to run up the green flag on the city hall, is to be commended. Irishmen are good enough citizens as long as they behave themselvs. They are like the rest of us in that respect. They made excellent officers and soldiers in the late war, and when they parade there is no harm in flying the flag under which they fought as they pass a given point. But they ought to be satisfied with such recognition, which is all that Americans ask for. A flag that is good enough for an American is good enough for an Irishman, I think. Any way, the stars and stripes is the only standard that has any fitness on a public building in the United States. The private citizen undeniably may fly what piece of cloth he chooses—the green flag, the black bag, the red flag, the stars and bars, or the stars and stripes, singly, severally, or in patchwork designs. They are all of bunting, and bunting is an article of commerce the color of which is not of inherent significance. This as regards a private building, whose owner has not that form of prejudice which we distinguish as patriotism; but on public buildings a flag is in a certain sense official, and indicates that citizens generally indorse the sentiment of which it is an emblem. I hav just as much sympathy with the stars and bars as I hav with the banner of St. Patrick, but I object to being committed to the Lost Cause by having it raised over the fraction of a brick I own in the city hall. If Catholics desire special recognition, why don't they demand it where they hav most signally won it, and insist on raising the standard of St. Patrick over the penitentiary?

The manufacturing industry as related to the production of new forms of religion seems to flourish independent of tariff vicissitudes. The newest thing in this line of goods is the religion introduced at Portland, Or., by Mrs. "Landaulet" Williams, wife of the Hon. Geo. H. Williams of that city. Mrs. Williams acquired her soubriquet of "Landaulet" from an equipage formerly sported by her husband in Washington. She has some three or four hundred subscribers, which is rather a small number considering the absurdity of her doctrin and its consequent attractivness for all who are religiously inclined. The great truth which Mrs. Williams has sprung upon the world is that his satanic majesty, the devil, occupies a process of the human anatomy known to science as the vermiform appendix. There is reason to believe that the location of the evil spirit as above is suggested by the Gadarene swine story, there being some doubts among modern biblical critics as to the existence of devils elsewhere than in the part of the animal corresponding to that assigned them in the human system by Mrs. Williams. But the devil being so located, it is the object of the new worship to exorcise him; and to that end the devotees undertake a forty days' fast on crackers and claret. The two articles of diet represent the body and blood of Christ, and they cannot without sin be replaced by pretzels and beer, nor yet by doughnuts and cider. They are not, as in the Protestant denominations, an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace, but of malignant appendicitis. The theory is that the devil abhors claret and crackers and so starves to death. Incidentally, some of the children of devotees hav starved also, but that is explained on grounds of total depravity in the children. Reports say that the authorities are at a loss how to handle these lunatics, which shows that the doctors of Portland are not keeping abreast of progress in medical science further East. Appendicitis is of frequent occurrence hereabouts, and is treated by an operation to remove the affected part. The funeral is held at the residence or at the church where the deceased has been accustomed to worship. The emigration of a few New York physicians to the northwest might hav some effect in preventing the further spread of the new fanaticism.

Some of the features of the Pollard-Breckinridge breach of promis case are worth noting, as showing the difficulties which our legislators hav to contend with in framing laws to govern such matters. The companionship of Congressman Breckinridge and the plaintiff dates from 1885. Mrs. Breckinridge was then alive, and did not die until about 1892. It was understood, so Miss Pollard claims, that the Congressman was to marry her at the expiration of a year after his wife's decease, and in May, 1893, the engagement was announced before witnesses. Before going upon the stand to deny the engagement, the Kentucky orator and statesman produces, through his counsel, a certificate of his marriage with a Mrs. Wing; and the lawyers claim that the fact of his being already married at the time he agreed to marry Miss Pollard nullifies his promis to make her his wife, and that consequently the plaintiff cannot recover. Of course Mrs. Wing was ignorant of Breckinridge's engagement to Miss Pollard. So, according to the theory advanced by counsel, if it can be maintained that the defendant fooled two women instead of one, neither has cause for action. Furthermore, if it is shown by competent witnesses that Miss Pollard had other associates besides Breckinridge, her cause is lost; while the admitted fact that the Congressman had more than one at the same time does not weaken his defense.

Such rules as these may hav been laid down in all wisdom, but it strikes me that they establish a percentage in favor of the man.

GEO E. MACDONALD.

THE lecture engagements of John R. Charlesworth are as follows.

Apr. 25, Chicago, Ill.	May 1, 2, Mechanicsburg, O.
" 26, 27, 28, Delphos, O.	" 3, 4, 5, Massillon, O.
" 29, Cincinnati, O.	" 11, New York City.
" 30, Mechanicsburg, O.

Mr. Charlesworth expects to lecture at Correctionville and Manchester, Iowa, and several other places along the route, including the Cape Cod districts, towards the end of May. Friends desiring lectures are requested to address him at 165 S. Water street, Chicago, Ill.

Died Serenely.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., Feb. 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: My mother died on Sept. 3d, 1893. She was 82 years of age; she did not call on the Lord or God, but died a very quiet death. So did my father in 1880. CHARLES LAMBERT.

Scattering the Seeds of Liberty.

VERONA, PA., Mar. 5, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $3 for another year's subscription. I like the paper first-rate. I send my paper all over the country and get all I can to read it. I hope it will be the means of getting some one to take it. WILLIAM FRAY.

A Call for Currency Chat.

BELFAST, ME., Mar. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 for subscription. Let us hear more from John Peck and the "Man with the Badge-pin" on the financial question, notwithstanding Brother Roscoe declares them to be "away off" on the subject.

C. Y. COTTRELL.

Young, But a Power.

NORWALK, CONN., March 9, 294.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Franklin Steiner gave one of his "up to the times" lectures last night to a fair and attentiv audience. Mr. Steiner, although a young man, is a power on the Freethought platform. I hope he may meet with the cordial support he deserves from all lovers of mental liberty and justice. A. B. BENNETT.

Wants a Better Dress for Heston's Ideas.

AVERY, IA., March 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I will inclose a list of names I hav secured in this town. There are only a few Freethinkers in this place, but I feel that I ought to do something to help maintain the "few liberties" we hav, and the cause of Freethought.

I hav been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER now for one year and I think it is the grandest paper I ever read, and I hope the ime may come when the Editor will be able to engrave Watson Heston's cartoons in the finest style known to the art.

Yours for Freethought and Liberty,

Difference Between a Good Man and God.

BRACKETTSVILLE, TEX., Feb. 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith find $3 to pay for my subscription; it comes late, but times out here on the frontier are extremely hard. Between Del Rio, in Val Verdi county, and Eagle Pass, Maverick county, in the Rio Grande valley, no rain has fallen for the last ten months. The all-loving and all-supporting God failed in his role; he forgot to sustain his creatures. I pity him; we hav to try to do without him. And still our frontier population of the most superstitious kind of Mexicans, and some supposed to be reasonable white people too, cannot help believing in his all-loving faculty. When I make a child, and it is born, I love it, and do the best I know and can for his support and welfare, but—I am only a man; the all-wise, omnipotent, and all-loving God need not do that. When he made mankind he resolved that it should paddle its own canoe. Still the priesthood insists that we should be thankful to him, when, looking at it squarely, life is not worth living.

Yours, etc., A. TURPE.

Laid to Rest Without Clerical Help.

KIMBALL, S. D., Feb. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Another brave, outspoken soldier of liberty has fallen. Henry Cushing was born in South Royalton, Vt., sixty-one years and eight months ago. He spent most of his life as an artist and accumulated, by strict attendance to business and honesty and manliness, quite a competence.

In 1884 he came to Kimball and invested his means in lands and other securities, but dishonest professing Christians, who loved and served the Lord, took advantage of his confidence in humanity and he lost considerable of his capital.

Henry Cushing was a frank and fearless Freethinker; dealing justly with all his fellow-men. His word was as good as his bond. He had no use for sky-pilots and would hav none of their mummeries at his burial. He was followed to his grave by the business-men and his neighbors. This was the first burial in this place without the services of a clergyman.

He leaves four children to mourn his loss. He was a kind father and a noble citizen. JOHN M. MCKEE.

Brother Hacker Must Be Very Good.

Feb. 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The "good book" says, "The wicked shall not liv out half their days." How sad our old friend Hacker must feel to think he has, by rejecting the only true religion, done that which will cut him off in his prime. The fact that he is in his ninety-fourth year shows what a long life he would hav had before him if he had only accepted without question all that was told him about heaven, hell, and all the other beautiful stories contained in that most precious book.

As a boy I read Brother Hacker's paper, the Pleasure Boat, and to it was indebted for some of the ideas that started me on the road to Freethought. Long liv Brother Hacker!

A young lady recently asked her Sunday-school teacher where Cain got his wife, and the teacher had to say she could not tell if there was, as the Bible says, only Adam, Eve, and Cain in the world. She next asked her pastor and he admitted he could not answer the question, and now the young lady is skeptical about the writers being inspired. H. O. NORTON.

Write to Representativs and Senators.

PEASTER, TEX., Feb. 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the tab on my paper that my subscription expires March 1, 1894. I herewith inclose another year's subscription, as it is impossible for me to get along without the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. I like the way it handles the Sunday bigots and the "God-in-the-Constitution" advocates. I think such gigantic intellects should be wrapped in brown paper to prevent them from becoming musty. It's a great pity indeed that such bigots are not at home where they belong. We hav existed and done business as a nation for nearly a century and a quarter without the assistance of Gods, angels, or devils, and we hav succeeded remarkably well, all things considered; and I can see no good reason why we cannot continue indefinitly in the old way. I sincerely hope that all Liberals or Freethinkers will write to their repectiv representativs and senators, and urge them to vote against the amendment. Let us giv them such a flood of letters, and urge our demands with such firmness, that they will not dare to vote for it. Let us giv them to understaud that we are watching their every movement, and know something of what is being transacted in our legislativ halls, and that they are the people's representatives; and if they fail to do their bidding they will be replaced by men who will. We already hav to many superfinous and foolish laws which fetter the natural rights and liberties of mankind and hinder progress. Ingersoll says, The more liberty we giv away, the more we will have ourselvs; but it seems that all our law makers think of is to destroy what rights we hav remaining. If you will mail me some of those petitions against the proposed amendment, I will get all the signers I can. I hav tried to get a few new subscribers, but crops were very light here last season and money is scarce. With best wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Truth Seeker family, I remain, J. S. WHITE.

Open Letter to Senator Mitchell.

LONE ROCK, OR., Feb. 24, 1894.

HON. J. H. MITCHELL: By THE TRUTH SEEKER I see that you are on the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Being one of your constituents, and considerably worked up as to the union of church and state, I take the liberty of addressing you concerning some matters brought before your committee by the National Reform Association. I would ask you to remember the noble men by whom our government was founded. They were true and patriotic. They knew what they were doing and meant very much when they gave God no more recognition than they did when they framed our Constitution. I ask you to view the history of bloodshed, tyranny, and crime when church and state were married. I ask you to consider the hellish tyranny of the church party, its shameless denial and destruction of the rights of citizens of our country, regardless of the safeguard of our Constitution, when and where it has had power, its damnable interference in affairs that concern no one but the private individual. I ask you to remember that the object of law is to protect the weak, to restrain criminals, and not to further priestly, private ambitions or propagate creeds and prejudices, and that when used for the latter purposes law becomes tyranny unbearable. Please bear in mind that this is intended to be a free country wherein all citizens are equal regardless of belief or disbelief in any creed or superstition. One's belief, or another's unbelief, should not be allowed to gain importance by civil recognition. I hav just attended a political meeting, and the orators told me that you are a friend of the people against the classes. Please remember that the people consist of all kinds of religionists, and that their beliefs and unbeliefs are their own private affairs. You may think it would not be wrong to let the legislatures settle this God-in-the-Constitution question, but I respectfully ask your attention to the fact that the legislatures are composed largely of politicians who will do anything if the priesthood makes them think they will get votes by so doing. And again, it would pass the legislatures of the pious South without a thought, and thus establish a church tyranny in our country.

GEORGE W. CRAWFORD.

Letter to a Congressman.

NEW YORK, Mar. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The following is an extract from a letter addressed to Representativ Warner:

The people at the time of the Revolution were more intelligent in regard to religious disputes than are those of to-day, and many of them still felt the smart of persecution. They were familiar with the divine-right claim of kings, government paternalism, and church influence, and they had no intention, when free of British rule, of adopting any part of that system. They intended a government with specific powers only—the people to be free in the pursuit of happiness without federal interference or expense.

It now appears that a portion of the church is not satisfied with this freedom and is aiming for compulsory powers through an amendment of the Constitution indorsing and legalizing a portion of its theology. There can be no other motiv but the desire of constraining others.

I think it no sin to pick berries on Sunday. My neighbor may think it is. We are now free to pick or not to pick. Enable him by law to prosecute me for picking berries and he will then demand that I shall go to and support his church. Please don't set that ball a-rolling. This movement has an old aggressiv look. All church property is now exempt from taxation, which means that all other property is taxed more. Why is the church not satisfied?

But my principal object in addressing you is in reference to the character of church petitions. The churches and Sunday-schools are so organized that the name of every man, woman, and child will be duplicated on petitions praying for the passage of the amendment. The Liberal element has little or no organization, and never until now has such a thing been supposed needful. Therefore, although some petitions opposing the proposed amendment may be presented to the committee, they will by no means be a measure of the opposition. I hav not signed nor asked anyone to sign a petition.

There is a population of over sixty-five million. Now, should the Christians, through their different organizations, send to the committee petitions aggregating twenty million signatures, yet they would represent only a minority.

L. G. REED.

A Long Credit Mark for Steiner.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 7, 294.

MR. EDITOR: It givs me very great pleasure to report that Mr. Franklin Steiner's lecture last Sunday with us was a great success. We were more than surprised at the lecturer's literary ability, and the elegant manner in which he handled his subjects. It was a rare treat, indeed; coming as it did from such a young man in our Freethought movement. I predict a great future for him, for wherever he gets a hearing he will surely be wanted again. I would advise all Freethought societies that hav not heard him to engage him; they will be well paid intellectually, and it will be a great encouragement to the young man to be kept busy in such unpopular work. The subject of his afternoon discourse was, "The Great Religious Conspiracy Against the Republic." It is needless to say that he made out his case, for in the debate that followed, some one disputed the statement that Roman Catholic soldiers deserted the army during the Rebellion. The statement was corroborated by one of our members, who had served in the army. Dr. Westbrook at the close of the lecture paid a glowing tribute to the able manner in which the lecturer argued his subject, and complimented him by indorsing every statement he made. The evening's discourse was "Popular Evidences in Favor of Christianity Tested." The doctor not being there, he missed a rare treat indeed, for this was a masterpiece far exceeding the afternoon's discourse. The vast audience was en rapport, judging from the frequent applause during his delivery. There was not one stone left untouched, and everyone was completely demolished in its turn. The criticisms that followed proved that the lecturer was more than a match for his critics. I am pleased to report that the Freethought movement is booming at present in this City of Brotherly Love. We are going to move into our new quarters on Sunday, March 18th, and I am pleased to announce that B. F. Underwoad is going to lecture for us on the following Sunday, both afternoon and evening. There will be no golden stairs, three flights high, to reach this hall, as it is on the ground floor. We hav at last got completely tired of holding our meetings so near heaven that we hav resolved to get nearer the good folks below. Liberals. please take notice that Friendship Liberal League will meet in Warner Hall, near Green and Broad streets, at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M., every Sunday until further notice. The hall is fitted up with all the modern improvements, and has a capacity of one thousand. Heretofore we could not find seats for our people after they had climbed three flights of stairs. Now, brother Liberals, as we hav studied your comfort by securing this commodious hall for you, we trust you will appreciate our efforts and attend the meetings. In conclusion I will say that were I a Christian I would wind up in this way:

"Come all the world,
Come, sinner, thou;
All things in Christ
Are ready now."

GEORGE LONGFORD.

Need of Organized Freethonght in Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 22, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Ever since the reintroduction, on January 25th, of that infamous God-in-the-Constitution humbug I hav been thinking how best to bring to bear upon Congress the most effectual force to counteract the devilish doings in that body of these fanatical priests, and at this writing I am undecided as to what should be done. There may nothing at all come of it; and yet there may be much mischief done. As the Scotchmen say, "Keep your eye on the fuglemen."

If this religious legislation can be consummated and "Christian morality" (according to Blair) be incorporated into the organic law of the land, why Romanism would ask for no nicer thing when it shall hav obtained the power and control which it is as certain to obtain as that to-morrow's sun shall rise if the Protestant fanatics are permitted to prepare the way for it, as they hav thus far been proceeding to do. In the name and by the mediumship of Protestantism Catholicism has won its grandest achievements in America over freedom and republicanism. Once the fanatical Protestants shall hav sandwiched God and the Bible into the Constitution and Christianity into the schools and other secular affairs, all Rome need do when the proper time arrives is to say that the organic God and the authorized Bible and the recognized Christ are those of the Catholic church, and the outwitted Protestant simpletons will stand aghast, gazing at each other in dumb-stricken awe, wondering why they didn't think of that before.

But, seriously, what had best and quickest be done? Better send a strong delegation of our best Freethinkers here at once and await events. Come to my house (667 F street, N.E.), or let me know where I can see and coöperate with them.

There should be a permanent society of Freethinkers at the capital. Such a body is constantly needed here. Every other interest is strongly represented here but that of the Secularists—the all-important interest, involving not the existence or propagation of a body of religious doctrins, but the underlying principles of the government itself. To me the signs of the hour look ominous and dark. The seat of government is evironed by a huge theological reptil whose virus is poisoning every artery and fiber of the nation from this center. At some future day I will giv the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER an inside glance at some of the diabolical doings of the churchites at Washington. For the present I want the Freethinkers of the land, and especially the officers of the Freethinkers' federations and the Secular unions throughout the country, to put themselvs in communication with me with the view of centralizing a force at the capital and concentrating our efforts to counteract the infernalism going on here.

Please, Mr. Editor, call attention to the above, that the Liberals of the land may be aroused to immediate action where action is most needed.

Hastily but earnestly yours,

A. J. BOYER.

Don't Want to Go to Heaven.

HESPERIA, CAL., March 4, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Standing up here just below the portals of heaven, and without a doubt in the immediate presence of Moses, Noah, and Abraham, I take this fleeting opportunity to inform you that times were so tough in Los Angeles I could not raise the wherewith to pay up my subscription, so I came up here and hav succeeded in doing so. As you probably never heard of this place, I will inform you it is the one Colonel Ingersoll has long been seeking—where good health is catching instead of disease. At the present time there is not much here but good health, or the conditions to produce it, and though a graveyard has been started, I am credibly informed that the necessary material was imported from Los Angeles, where people do occasionally die. I hav seen and talked with a man who had the dyspepsia so bad when he came here that he could not tell the truth, but now he is so healthy and hungry he finds it a difficult matter to get enough to eat. The ozone in the air renews old and worn-out lungs, and consumption is as impossible here as the presence of ice in our future home. Being so near the throne of grace, of course it gets pretty cold at times, but the purity of the air and its freedom from fog and moisture make it less noticeable than the same temperature lower down. It will, some day, be a noted sanitarium, but, at present, only thirty or forty families reside in the city proper; and one reason for this small number of residents is the scarcity of water, and the fact that a syndicate of Christians, who don't believe in laying up treasures on earth, hav got control of all the land—thirty-six thousand acres—which they are waiting and willing to dispose of for $100 per acre, more or less. Which leads me to inquire, where, oh, where, is Henry George with his single tax to compel them to yield their grip on so much terra firma?

Although but few people reside here, there are two of the "110,000" in their midst; but if they lived by preaching alone, they would hardly be able to remain. I hav gazed upon them both, and I tell you, confidentially, that if appearances indicate anything, neither one of them has much influence with the Lord. One of them is built to enjoy the good things of this world, and judging from the rotundity of his abdomen, he could readily dispose of two full-grown chickens at one sitting, and still hav plenty of room for inward grace. I hear he is compelled to labor outside the Lord's vinyard to provide for his bodily wants, not having faith enough to supply them with prayer, while the other servant of the most high is fortunate in having monied friends back east, or the struggle to exist might dispel his confidence in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And yet, in spite of the presence of these two preachers, and the close proximity of this place to heaven, it cannot be called an orthodox community, and Sunday laws to restrict personal liberty are not found until you descend the other side of the mountain and get into San Bernardino, where they hav lately passed some that would gladden the heart of a Puritan. Over there they hav been stricken with a streak of piety, and lately had a mania for salvation by immersion, which, in the cold water and cold weather that has prevailed this winter, resulted in giving two of the victims the pneumonia, and sending them to heaven much sooner than they expected. While speaking of heaven, I wish to refer to the fact that a daily paper in Los Angeles lately had many people interviewed as to their preferences in dying, and I want to call particular attention to what one of the sky-pilots said, for it substantiates what Putnam has so many times affirmed—that the preachers would not willingly go to heaven, that beautiful home and splendid place to talk about, unless they could get a return ticket. Said the Rev. Mr. Smithers: "Well, to be candid with you, I would rather not die at all. It is a kind of experience that I havn't any hankering after, anyway." Brethren, let us unite in singing, "Oh, That Home Over There!"

But, as I started to remark in language plain and clear, that $3 I hav owed you so long is here. I am, was, and always shall be, Yours very truly,

C. SEVERANCE.

Many Pleasant Personalities.

FABIUS, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER continuously since its first issue by D. M. Bennett, at Paris, Ill. Hav met many of our Freethought speakers in New York State Freethinkers' Associations, including yourself (at Rochester in 1883). I should feel very lonely now without the paper, having taken it so many years. I hav gathered many bright ideas from both Materialistic and Spiritualistic correspondents. I am glad that all sides are granted a hearing in your columns. My motto is "Hear all sides" and then decide for myself. Infinit diversity in nature precludes the possibility of all thinking just alike. I believe in free discussion of all subjects when conducted in a friendly spirit and personalities avoided. My wife, Helen Mar, also daughter, Elda S., are both stanch Freethinkers. They are now visiting relativs at Harper, Kas., having been absent several months. During their visits Miss Elda, our only child, sketches and pencils portraits and givs public entertainments in elocution. Prior to their leaving home a cousin of ours, Miss Cordelia L. Frost, arrived at our house, the home of her childhood in Pompey, N. Y., from San Francisco, Cal., and kindly proffered to giv wife and daughter a respit for a few months, which they improve in visiting, etc. Miss Frost is a radical Freethinker, and was quite a prominent leader in San Francisco, as friends Putnam and George Macdonald perhaps can attest. Glad to learn that my friend Watson Heston has moved a little further north. He and his wife will never forget the good visit we had together near Carthage, Mo. Hope they may soon regain health. I wish I could now help them, for they are worthy. Present necessity precludes the idea just at present, but hope for the future. Don't fail to hav him well represented in Putnam's forthcoming book. St. Anthony arrested a news vender in Syracuse a short time ago; same old story: "Obscenity and tons of obscene literature." Inclosed find $6.50 for renewal to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Wish I could send more, so please accept the will for the deed. I like to hear all sides of subjects, therefore be as liberal as possible. John Peck, the learned blacksmith, is more than a peck. He is a good bushel if not more. Lots of others I'd like to mention, but space forbids.

Friends Gene and George, stick to your work,
Our paper keeps improving;
Unpleasant duties ye'll not shirk,
So push along, keep moving.

The Pasco Hodges Case.

ST. LOUIS, MO., March 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Being a Roman Catholic Infidel, I thought I would see what the Rev. Fr. Cahill (he has it M. P. Seahill) would himself say about that Pasco Hodges Infidel death-bed conversion. I asked him for the information in a letter with the clipping which I cut out of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and am glad to inclose you the same with his reply to my inquiry. It speaks for itself, and as the whole thing seems to be a public affair, I do not think it wrong for me to send it to you. Use it as you deem fit. J. E. BLAKE.

ST. THOMAS' PRO-CATHEDRAL.
WILMINGTON, N. C., Feb. 27, 1894.

MR. J. E. BLAKE, My Dear Sir: You are the first to ask me a statement on the Hodge's case. I advise you not to bother about such things. All that I know is the man never belonged to any religion, and when he saw himself dying he saw also the necessity of a priest. No Catholic could die a holier death than Pasco Herbert Hodges did. I baptized him on Thursday and he died on Saturday. I visited him the night before he died at 9 P.M., and about the same time several of his Infidel companions entered; seeing them he arose in his bed leaning on my arm and consciously and emphatically affirmed there was a heaven and a hell and a God and a Savior. He expressed externally his inner conviction and saw, by the light of reason, there was a heaven and a hell. The sincere, good man ordered his books to be burned, and they were burned. I hav never expressed any opinion; am unwilling and unable to giv any on this case. Everything about his conversion and death was extraordinary. Who is Mr. Ball and the newspaper the clipping is taken from? You must remember that a Catholic priest is above noticing the grinning and snarling and Balling of such cowardly, malignant liars, and their big knowledge of medicin. I'm astonished at you noticing the sneers of brain-diseased, opium sots, the crust of whose Hecker you cannot break even with a blacksmith's sledge. Why, most of those crazy Infidel "mechanics" are foreign Anarchists. Our country knows how to treat them. Americans are a people of deep religious conviction. The death bed scene of Mr. Hodges ought be a warning to anyone. And everybody was edified without distinction of denomination.

"Those who had professed unbelief trembled and wept bitterly;" if so, no wonder. One of these afterward wrote a piece in a Wilmington journal, which was more amusing than anything that could appear in Puck.

I take no further notice of matters, and hope I remain, Your faithful friend,

M. P. SEAHILL.

[It will be perceived that Father Seahill disposes at once of all the alleged supernaturalism of Hodge's dying testimony. The newspaper story had it that he told his wife that he had died, but she had brought him to life by her distress, and that he informed his former Atheistic associates that there was a heaven and a hell, for he had seen both. The priest is rationalist enough to say that he merely expressed "his inner conviction," having seen, "by the light of reason," that there were such places. This is a good explanation of all death-bed visions, if we amend it to the effect that the dying see these subjectiv pictures by the light of imagination, the impressions received in youth being much more strongly fixed in the brain than those received in later years, these early registrations acting automatically after disease has lessened or destroyed the reasoning powers of the instruments of thought.

At the risk of again arousing the anger of Mr. Seahill, we must ask him something more about the books Mr. Hodges is said to hav directed to be burned. We hav a general statement that Pasco Hodges was an Infidel and an Atheist, and that his books were Infidel and Atheistic books. But we know that even good Christians and Theists hav been called Atheists by their fellow Theists and Christians of different sects who could not understand or had an object in mirepresenting their views. It is not impossible that if we had the titles and the names of the writers of the books owned by the late Mr. Hodges we should find that they, in themselvs, giv no evidence that that "sincere, good man" was an Atheist. Can Mr. Seahill throw any light on this subject? Does he know the titles, and names of the writers, of any of the books which were destroyed?

The reverend gentleman objects to the alleged mendacity of those who hav called in question the accuracy of the Pasco Hodges story, but he does not hesitate to say that they are "opium sots." How did he come to stumble upon that somewhat unusual epithet? And does he think it is fair and in consonance with the dignity of a priest to hurl it at persons of whose personal habits he knows absolutely nothing? What he means by accusing us of being "mechanics" we cannot even guess. But all this abuse of Freethinkers is entirely foreign to the issue. While "conversions" of dying Atheists to Christianity is nothing "extraordinary," any more than the return of "converted Jews" to the religion of their ancestors at the approach of death, there were many things reported in connection with the asserted conversion of Pasco Hodges which called for doubt. The miraculous color given to it threw suspicion on the whole story. Father Seahill has now reduced the tale to its merely human terms, and it may be substantially true, yet the fact, as stated by the priest, that one of the former "unbelieving" friends of the dead man wrote a letter to a Wilmington paper about the affair excites our curiosity again, especially as Mr. Seahill says that the article was very "amusing." We shall be under obligations to whoever can get us into communication with a real Freethinker of Wilmington or vicinity, or whoever will send us a copy of the paper containing the letter in question. Perhaps Rev. Mr. Seahill will kindly forward us the paper.

Since the preceding paragraphs were written we hav found the following excerpt from the Wilmington Star in the Boston Investigator. Now, we ask the Rev. Mr. Seahill: Who has told the truth, you or the physician who attended Mr. Hodges? Will you answer?

Mr. P. H. Hodges, who came here some three months ago with his wife and child, and opened a boarding-house on Market street between Front and Second, died yesterday morning, after an illness of several days with pneumonia. He was from Norfolk, Va.; was a member of the Catholic church, and made many friends during his brief residence here. His funeral will take place this afternoon from St. Thomas' Catholic church. Some sensational reports were current yesterday to the effect that Mr. Hodges after death had come to life again, and spoken to the attendants at his bedside and then had expired. But the physician who attended him says there is no truth in the report. Mr. Hodges was delirious some time before his death, and in his ravings said that he had died twice before. It was this remark, probably, that gave rise to the report that he had died, and then came to life again.

By this we learn that Mr. Hodges was a Catholic instead of an Atheist, consequently he was not converted from the former to the latter on his death-bed. Rev. Mr. Seahill said he was. Furthermore, he did not hav any Atheistic books to be burned. Rev. Mr. Seahill said he had. The man was simply delirious. Behold what a big smoke a little fire sends up when it is needed to conceal a fact.—ED. T. S.]

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Lincoln.

The dogs of war are loosed. To battle's fore
The heroes march to fight, to suffer, die.
The mill is stopped, the stream crawls listless by;
The wife is weeping at her sunny door;
The anxious mother's head is bowed and hoar;
The children mimic war with pompous cry;
The maiden walks apart and heaves a sigh
For lover groaning 'mid the battle's roar.
Above the ruined home and fiercest fight
A figure glorified, all clothed in cloud—
A noble, gentle soul, but firm for right,
Supreme in wit, sublime, but never proud—
In benediction stretches forth his hand—
Four million fetters fall at his command.

—WALTER W. CLARK.

George Washington.

George Washington, like me, was once
A little boy at school;
He studied hard and was no dunce,
And kept the Golden Rule;
And by his noble, manly ways
A diadem has won,
With honors and a fame that blaze
Like noonday's brightest sun.

And why may I not hav a name,
When I grow up a man,
As great and good in noted fame
As other heroes can?
I think I may—will do my best,
And set my standard high—
Work for my country's weal with zest
And naughty things decry.

—HOMER L. MINNICK

Correspondence.

ATCHISON, KAN., Feb. 5, 1894.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON — Esteemed Frien l: It has been some time since I last wrote to you and my Corner friends. I don't believe I hav written since I returned from the Fair. I did not get to the Fair during the Freethinkers' Congress, and I was very much disappointed. I was rejoiced to hear that the Congress was such a grand success. I read your splendid address with pleasure, and I desire to congratulate you upon it. Your poem on Robert Burns in a late issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER was a beautiful production. The birthday of Burns is generally celebrated by the Scotch-American citizens of Atchison, but they did not celebrate this year on account of dull times. I celebrated the event by paying a tribute to him in one of our local papers.

I hav been having a little leisure of late and hav devoted a portion of it to Freethought missionary work. Atchison is a good field for missionary work, as a large portion of her citizens are skeptical concerning the Bible and Christianity. The city has about fifteen churches, however, when one-third as many are all, and really more than the town needs. It often requires much exertion on the part of the church people to get out a crowd when a revival is in progress, and they often resort to deceptiv plans in order to draw a crowd. As an instance I might mention that two noted (?) evangelists recently held a series of what they called "Union Gospel Meetings" here, and in order to attract the people they advertised on a certain evening that two meetings, one at each church, would be held—one for "women only," and the other for "men only." Naturally enough it had the desired effect. The people, out of curiosity, thronged both churches, as is generally the case when such meetings are announced. But they were deceived. They heard nothing more than the ordinary droll religious sermon. There was nothing in either sermon that could giv reason for the sex distinction thus made. Yet it is ever so. Nine times out of ten a preacher will deceive the people if he thinks it will add to his congregation, for the larger the congregation the more money will be placed in the contribution-box.

I venture to say that our citizens would rather listen to the gifted and eloquent Colonel Ingersoll than all these traveling "wind-bags" known as evangelists who ever visited Atchison. This was evinced by the hearty greeting they gave Colonel Ingersoll when he lectured here on "Myth and Miracle" recently. The best and most intelligent people of the city turned out to listen to the man who has made the pulpits all over the land tremble by his thunderbolts of eloquence and logic. This was one instance when the people did not go away deceived, but rather went away doubting the myths and miracles of the so-called Christian religion. As the strains of eloquence fell from the lips of the speaker, the people sat almost charmed and motionless. The drop of a pin could hav been distinctly heard. A well-known lawyer, who has always entertained views somewhat adverse to those of Colonel Ingersoll, sat near the writer. After the lecture he was heard to remark that it was the finest discourse he ever heard.

Colonel Ingersoll's lecture has started the ball to rolling here, and it is to be hoped that it will continue to roll, until some of these towering God houses will be converted into institutions of learning or of charity. The public school rears its head above several churches which stand near by and seems to look down with a reproachful countenance upon the structures where, instead of reason, truth, justice, charity, and education, only ignorance, piety, and credulity prevail. Every time I see the glorious stars and stripes kissing the breeze above our public schools I look into the future and see a brighter day dawning—a day when that flag, the emblem of the free, will wave proudly and triumphantly above the cross; a day when our public institutions will no longer be throttled by the clutches of sectarian bigots; a day when humanity will be the only religion, and every human being can giv utterance to that sublime sentiment of Thomas Paine: "The world is my country; to do, good my religion."

GEO. J. REMSBURG.

[Atchison cannot remain long in priestly domination with such a fearless expounder of the truth as our friend George within its limits. He is right in regard to the public school. It is the most potent influence in America, but it will be still more effectiv when made entirely secular, as by right it should be. No Bible reading or prayers should come into these nurseries of the young. Thanks for appreciation of our efforts.—ED. C. C.]

OSKALOOSA, IA., Feb. 11, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Pardon me for the liberty I think I take in addressing you, since it is stimulated through the interest my little boys manifest in the Children's Corner of THE TRUTH SEEKER of which you are editor. I am a very poor man, misfortune seeming to hav ever marked me for a special victim; hence hav never been able to furnish proper reading for my family and thus a great luxury has been denied them as well as myself. I was long ignorant of the status of my ideas of Bibles, gods, devils, etc., or the proper names applied to such belief; however, now, thanks to generous and kind friends, who hav sent me books and papers, I begin to find out who and what I am. THE TRUTH SEEKER is sent to us by an old friend in California and my children as well as myself take a great interest in it, and they (the children) importuned me to write for their Corner in the paper, and you cannot realize the actual joy or pride I realize to note the drift of their young hearts and minds. I feel it the highest duty I owe to assist, guide, counsel, and direct these jewels of my life, and when I was made aware of their desire in this direction, I not only gave them my consent, but proposed to assist them; and would write to you also, and tell you about them, and it is to fulfil that promis to them that this letter is written. Hoping you may not think me discourteous, and wishing you a jovous and happy sojourn through your worthy and useful life, I remain,

Your grateful friend,
W. H. MINNICK.

[Thanks, brother, for your kind letter. You are not poor, but rich in the possession of those splendid children, inestimable jewels, worth more than millions. You hav reason to be a proud and happy man.—ED. C. C.]

OSCEOLA, S. D., Feb. 1, 1894.

MISS WIXON, Kind Friend: As it has been a long time since I last wrote to the Corner, I thought I would write again and occupy a small space in its columns.

There are not many Freethinkers out here, although very few profess religion. There are two churches quite near us; neither has a very large attendance. They are holding revival meetings in one of the churches and are trying to catch hold of the sinners, but hav not caught many yet, and I guess they never will, for the world is getting too far advanced to believe everything that comes along.

I think Hest n's pictures sometimes look very cruel; but just turn to the Bible and read the chapters and then look at the pictures and it all seems real. I hope that in the future religion will be banished from the earth forever, and education and common sense take its place. The people would be better for it, although it will take many years to do it.

I correspond with a young lady in Bundysburg, O.—Miss Lura Fenton. It is very interesting and pleasant. We write long letters. My uncle used to liv near Bundysburg, and so when I saw one of Miss Fenton's letters in the Corner I thought I would write to her, and I would like to correspond with some of the other Cornerites about my age, which is fifteen.

As my letter is getting tiresome I will close by giving three cheers for the grand old TRUTH SEEKER and all of the noble workers who are making progress with good words and hard labor. Many kind regards and good wishes for yourself.

I remain, as ever,
Your Liberal friend,
GRACE A. MILLER.

[Very glad to hear from Grace once more.—ED. C. C.]

WORCESTER, MASS., Feb. 21, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav not written to you for quite a long while, but take the pleasure now, and inclose a short poem.

The old TRUTH SEEKER is getting better and better. Geo. Macdonald is doing some clever work. I see a Correspondence Club is to be formed. I like the idea, and hope it will succeed. All the Cornerites should get right in and lift, and make the scheme a "go."

To-morrow is the birthday of "the father of his country." I don't suppose that Washington was a perfect man, but he was great. He was strong where other great men hav been weak. He conquered on the field of battle. But other men won greater fields. He bore up in adversity. But others hav shown fortitude as great. Great generals hav conquered the nations—hav brought the world under their will. But Washington did what they could not do, he conquered himself and brought his fiery nature under his control. With those who can conquer others, the great battle, the greatest conquest is with and of themselvs. Yours for thought, and lots of it,

WALTER W. CLARK.

[We are glad to get a letter from you, Walter, and hope you never will forget the Corner, never. We agree with all you hav written above.—ED. C. C.]

HUTCHINSON, KAN., Feb. 5, 1894.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON—Dear Friend: Southern Kansas is seldom heard from through the columns of your enlightened Corner.

We were greatly favored on December 12th and 13th by two lectures from Prof. J. E. Remsburg, which were highly appreciated by those present. There are a great many Liberals here, but few outspoken.

The Methodist Episcopal church held revivals here for three months in succession, and as much harm was done as good. It led to stealing, for several parties lost their horses and buggies. I went several times, and I don't think I was enlightened on the subject called religion—it only disgusted me more.

This being my first attempt I will not tire the readers with a long letter.

I should hav written sooner in reply to Miss McCoy's, of St. Joseph, Mo., letter. My time is very much occupied. I assist in my father's office (county treasurer).

Your friend, CLARA COOTER.

[To assist your father in business is much more creditable than to be helping the cause of ignorance and superstition. We are glad to number Clara among our friends.—ED. C. C.]

OSKALOOSA, IA., Feb. 12, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Papa says you like the Freethinkers' children to write to you for the Corner. I am one, and this is my first letter. I go to the Lincoln school here. There are eight rooms. I am in the fifth B class. I am eleven years old. I hav a sister and brother older than I at home, and two younger brothers. Two of my little brothers, and one sister, died last year.

I hav sent you some verses papa made up for me to speak in school, when the teacher wanted us to speak something about Washington. Papa makes most of our pieces. If this is good enough for the Corner, I will write more next time. Kind regards to you and all Corner writers.

HOMER D. MINNICK.

[If Homer's good ideas are carried into practice, and no doubt they will be, he will become one of the smartest and bravest of men—perhaps be president of the United States—who knows?—ED. C. C.]

MECHANICSBURG, O., Feb. 5, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I am a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER and take a great interest in the Corner, I hav a clipping from the Meigs County Tribune which I thought would be very appropriate for it.

You will remember me as one of your number at the Chicago Convention. With best wishes I am sincerely yours,

G. B. VAN NESS.

[Thanks for clipping—very good. Yes, we recollect you very well.—ED. C. C.]

CALEDONIA, N. D., Jan. 25, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I will now take the liberty of writing you a few lines. I am twelve years old, and am not going to school for a few months, through the cold weather, as you know Dakota is a cold state. Papa went to the World's Fair the first part of October. Mamma went with him. She came back in about three weeks. Papa went to California for his health, and is not back yet. He used to take THE TRUTH SEEKER most of the time, but now he sends home a few once in a while. I guess he will be glad to hear from me. If papa had been home my sister and I would hav gone to school in Hillsboro or Caledonia this winter, but we expect him home soon, and then we can go to school the latter part of the winter. A week ago it was fine weather. But now it is cold again. I will stop for this time.

Yours truly, HELEN MUNTER.

[Will Helen tell the Corner about the town she livs in when she writes again?—ED. C. C.]

OSKALOOSA, IA., Feb. 12, 1894.

MISS WIXON: Brother Homer wrote you a letter for the Children's Corner to-day, and I thought I would do so too. I go to school and am in the fourth room, B class. We never saw THE TRUTH SEEKER until Mr. N. C. Creede, of Los Angeles, Cal., sent us some. He is an old schoolmate of papa's, and pa and he were lost to each other for nearly thirty years. Pa thinks much of him, so do all of us, for he has sent us lots of reading, books and papers, and sent us his photograph too. We all like kind, good people; don't you? Pa does not let us go to Sunday-school or church, but tells us to wait until we get older and hav more knowledge. Will write again perhaps if this is suitable for the Corner.

Your little Agnostic friend,
FREDDIE MINNICK (9 years old).

[Lovely boy—yes, we like all kind, good people, and hence the Minnick family has a warm place in our heart.—ED. C. C.]

PULLMAN, WASH., Jan. 25, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I am twelve years old; I go to school; I study reading, arithmetic, spelling, history, geography, and writing. My teacher's name is Wallace Savage, and he belongs to the Catholic church, but he does not say anything to the school about it. My father is a farmer; he livs four miles from Pullman, Wash. I like to go to church and hear what the preachers say, but I do not believe their big stories. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for many years; I like to read the Children's Corner very much, and to look at the pictures. My father and mother are both Infidels. My little sister has a dog by the name of Dom Pedro; he was named after the emperor of Brazil. I would like to hav some of the children of the Corner correspond with me. Your friend,

ALICE V. HUBBARD.

OSCEOLA, S. D., Feb. 1, 1894.

MISS WIXON: This is my first attempt to write to the Corner. My uncle takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and I think we could not do without it.

I go to school, and study reading, history, arithmetic, geography, and spelling. We hav a good teacher; his name is Mr. Foss. We liv nearly two and a half miles from school. I hav some nice story books, and one is "Little Lessons for Little Folks," and my sister has "The Story Hour," which I like to read very much. I hav two pet lambs that are cute; I can hav lots of fun with them. I think I hav written enough for this time, and if this escapes the waste-basket I will chat with you again. I am thirteen years old and proud to say, a Freethinker.

JAMES B. MILLER.

ANDOVER, KAN., March 1, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I will write you my first letter to the Children's Corner. I am ten years old. I go to school. I study reading, geography, arithmetic, spelling, and grammar. My teacher's name is Miss Hattie Weeks; she is a religious lady. My papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. In it he saw two letters from Mr. Jacob Saltsman's small girls. Papa says he was well acquainted with Mr. Saltsman when he lived in Indiana, sixteen years ago. My papa was at the World's Fair and also back in Mr. Saltsman's town (Waterloo), and he says he inquired about him. They hav Sunday-school here, but we do not attend.

From your friend, TINA WOLF.

CENTER WARD, Jan. 22, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav never written to the Corner, so I thought I would write a few lines. I am eight years old. I go to school and read in the Second Reader. I study reading, writing, spelling, grammar, counting, and geography. Well, I guess this letter is long enough. Hoping to see this in print, I remain,

Your little friend,
CHRISTEENA LINDSAY.

[Describe the town you liv in, next time you write.—ED. C. C.]

ABRAHAM LINCOLN: WAS HE A CHRISTIAN? By John E. Remsburg. Cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Whether Abraham Lincoln was a Christian or not is of no importance as a test of the truth or falsity of the Christian religion. Men of greater intellectual attainments than he hav been Christians, and equally good men hav been unbelievers.

But the question is a most important one as affecting the public estimation of the evidences of Christianity. The masses of mankind are influenced by authority rather than by private judgment, and the power of names is still potent.

As Christianity has no case against Freethought it invariably adopts the maxim, "When you hav no case abuse the plaintiff's attorney." Confronted by the arguments of Evolution and the Higher Criticism, the defender of Christianity finds himself without logical reply and is reduced to shouting: "Rousseau was immoral, Voltaire died in distress, and Paine was a drunkard. Show me an Infidel who was a good man, or who ever did anything for the world!" If it can be shown that the Great Emancipator was an Infidel, it would do more to affect three-fourths of the American people favorably in their estimate of the merits of Rationalism than would be done by any number of volumes of doctrinal argument.

For this reason Mr. Remsburg's book is one of the most important works that the Liberal press has ever issued, and right well has the task proposed been performed. No more thorough analysis of testimony has ever been made, and no more exhaustiv search for evidence has been pursued. As an example of critical examination of witnesses, the book will interest every reader and secure commendation irrespectiv of personal opinions. Its perusal carries one along with the interest of a detectiv story, and the incidental glimpses that are given of the great president's life and characteristics throw a charm over the whole volume.

The result of the investigation leaves no room to doubt that Lincoln lived and died an Infidel. Of twenty witnesses to his Christian belief ten were clergymen, who, from the nature of their profession, might be susceptible to bias; whereas one hundred witnesses testify to the contrary. All the stories of his conversion prior to 1862 are disposed of by his letter in that year to Judge Wakefield, in which Mr. Lincoln says: "My earlier views of the unsoundness of the Christian scheme of salvation, and the human origin of the scriptures, hav become clearer and stronger with advancing years, and I see no reason for thinking I shall ever change them." The statements that he was converted after 1862 are met by the fact that the change was unknown to his wife, private secretary, law partner, executor, and most intimate friends. Surely their testimony is better than that of those who would gain glorification for themselvs, or honor to their cause, by claiming the president as their convert or associate. Mr. Lincoln's honesty and sincerity were so great that concealment of such a charge would hav been an inconsistency less probable than the mistake or even falsehood of witnesses.

While, to the logician, Mr. Lincoln's religious belief is not to be counted as an argument in favor of its truth, it is certain that when the fact becomes known that he was a Freethinker, a vast deal of prejudice will be dispelled. To those who would claim for Christians a monopoly of humanitarian virtues, there can be no more powerful reply than the picture of the Infidel president as drawn by Mr. Remsburg: "In the darkness of night, on a bloody field of the Peninsula, he bent beside the prostrate form of a dying soldier of the South, and while the hot tears rolled down his furrowed cheeks, soothed him with words of tenderest sympathy, and, by the dim rays of a lantern, took down from his lips a message to his mother, and sent it by a flag of truce into the enemy's lines to be transmitted to his home." By such examples Christians will learn in time that men can be tender hearted even if they do not believe in hell.

The only criticism against the work from a Christian standpoint would be that it is the argument of an advocate, rather than the impartial examination of a judge. Mr. Remsburg's zeal and fervor, as an apostle of Freethought, of course, are manifest, and he sometimes gives utterance to impetuous denunciation, or withering sarcasm, that will not be pleasant reading to a Christian. Yet it is hard to see how a fairer analysis of evidence, or a more conclusiv summary of its results, could be made by the most judicial mind; while to the Freethinker the author's comments and enthusiastic outbursts are most refreshing, and increase the already high estimation in which Mr. Remsburg is held as one of the most serviceable workers for progressiv thought in this progressiv age.

The publishers deserve great credit for the get-up of the book, which is as satisfactory in its making as in its matter. It is a book that every Liberal must own, read, and lend. ROBERT C. ADAMS.

A CHORUS OF FAITH, AS HEARD IN THE PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS HELD IN CHICAGO, September 10-27, 1893. Compiled and with an Introduction by Jenkin Lloyd Jones. Chicago: The Unity Publishing Company. Price, 50 cents.

Mr. Jones dedicates this work "To the laborers who are making the great prophecy history; the believers in the universal religion of character, the church of humanity." The "compilation contains one hundred and sixty-seven extracts from one hundred and fifteen different authors, all of them taken from the utterances of the main Parliament." The book has a purpose; the passages hav been selected to show "the essential unity of all religious faiths at their best," the "fundamental harmony in human nature made apparent by the noblest utterances of its representativs." Mr. Jones thinks that the spirit of the Parliament was broadening, liberating, elevating. He says that here "the Brahmin forgot his caste and the Catholic was chiefly conscious of his catholicity. Here the Presbyterian laid aside his creed, the Baptist rose above his close communion tenet, the Methodist tunneled under his disciplin." "The Parliament demonstrated the essential piety of Terrence, when he said, 'I deem nothing foreign that is human.'"

But, generally speaking, only the broadest minds went into the Parliament, and so we cannot be too sure that the tolerant utterances of the speakers are indices of the best religious thought of the age. We are inclined to think that they came more often from the brains of men who cling to nothing in religion but the name and a vague faith in a God of some kind. Any definition of religion that makes it chiefly something other than a theory of man's relation to supernatural persons, places, and conditions is a definition that does violence to truth and deceives the masses of the people. The Archbishop of Canterbury and the hot-headed politician, Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe, refused to attend the Parliament. They certainly are not nearly so lovable, as men, as many who did attend, but as theologians and Christians they are far more logical and consistent. Christianity has been in the world for eighteen centuries, and during that period it has preached the gospel of exclusiv salvation. When it givs up that dogma it ceases to be Christianity. This the Archbishop of Canterbury perceived clearly when he wrote to Rev. John H. Barrows:

"The difficulties which I myself feel are not distance and convenience, but rest on the fact that the Christian religion is the one religion. I do not understand how that religion can be regarded as a member of a Parliament of religions without assuming the equality of the other intended members and the parity of their position and claims."

Bishop Coxe wrote:

"My master says of Confucius and of Buddha—'they are thieves and robbers;' that is, however conscientious and virtuous they may hav been as poor benighted gentiles, they hav robbed him of millions of souls who should hav been sheep of his pasture. They hav robbed those souls of the only light that is the light of truth; the only true light that is the 'life of man,' the only true 'Light of the World.'"

There spoke genuin, logical, historical Christianity. What our kind-hearted, genial, justice-loving friend, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, and others of his school are working for and illustrating is humanism partially instructed by science and touched with supernaturalism.

THE LAST SONG OF JEREMIAH HACKER. Price, 15 cents.

The author of these sensible reflections is ninety-four years of age. He was a stalwart worker for religious liberty when most of us were boys and girls at play. The father of the writer of this took Mr. Hacker's paper, the Portland Pleasure Boat, thirty-five or more years ago, and we hav always had kindly thoughts for the old "Friend" who so many decades ago spoke often of his loved "mate" Mary, who helped him sail the Boat on the stormy waters of theological hate. We hope he will sell at least ten thousand copies of his "Last Song," for he needs the money. Jeremiah Hacker livs at Vineland, New Jersey, and is still engaged in the fight for Freethought.

A NOVEL PROPOSITION. Revolutionizing the Distribution of Wealth. Farm Products Moved as Mail Matter at a Uniform Rate for All Distances. By David Lubin. Sacramento: D. Johnston & Co.

RELIGION NOT HISTORY.

Examination of the Morals and History of the New Testament.

By PROF. F. W. NEWMAN. Price 25 cents.

Just Out.—25 Cents—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about

of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's 'Men, Women, and Gods,' and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes the intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets, Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town, the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portuguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America. Materials of Human History

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History, Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love.

Price reduced from $1.75 to $1.00. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

PROSE-POEMS AND SELECTIONS.
Fifth edition, enlarged and revised. A handsome quarto, containing 338 pages. This is, beyond question, the cheapest and most elegant volume in Liberal literature. Its mechanical finish is worthy of its intrinsic excellence. No expense has been spared to make it the thing of beauty it is. The type is large and clear, the paper heavy, highly calendered, and richly tinted, the presswork faultless, and the binding as perfect as the best materials and skill can make it.
As to the contents, it is enough to say that they include all of the choicest utterances of the greatest writer on the topics treated that has ever lived.
Those who have not the good fortune to own all of Mr. Ingersoll's published works, will have in this book of selections many bright samples of his lofty thought, his matchless eloquence, his wonderful imagery, and his epigrammatic and poetic power. The collection includes all of the "Tributes" that have become famous in literature—notably those to his brother, C. Ingersoll, Lincoln, Grant, Beecher, Conkling, Courtlandt M. Palmer, Mary Fiske, Elizur Wright; his peerless monographs on "The Vision of War," Love, Liberty, Art and Morality, Science, Nature, The Imagination, Decoration Day Oration, What is Poetry, Music of Wagner, Origin and Destiny, "Leaves of Grass," and on the great heroes of intellectual Liberty. Besides these are innumerable gems taken here and there from the orations, speeches, arguments, toasts, lectures, letters, interviews, and day by day conversations of the author.
The book is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac-simile, has been prepared especially for it. In the more elegant styles of binding it is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.
PRICES.—In cloth, beveled boards, gilt edges, $2.50; in half morocco, gilt edges, $5; in half calf, mottled edges, library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible finish, $9.

Any of the above sent to any address, by express, prepaid, or mail, post free, on receipt of price. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knee.

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt beveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

IT is said that a well-known bishop of the Episcopal church in a Western town was introduced to a man who said that he was a 'Piscopal. The bishop was evidently not much impressed by the man's manners, and said to him, "How shall I know whether you are an Episcopalian or not?" "Why," said the other, "'cause I do the things that I ought not to hav done and leave undone the things that I ought to hav done, and there is no health in me." "You'll do," said the bishop.—Troy Times.

A VENERABLE and pompous English bishop was having his portrait painted by an eminent artist. After sitting steady for an hour in silence, the churchman thought he would break the monotony with a remark: "How are you getting along?" he inquired. To the astonishment of the bishop the knight of the palette, absorbed in his work, replied: "Move your head a little to the right and shut your mouth." Not being accustomed to such a form of address, his lordship said: "May I ask why you address me in this manner?" The artist, still absorbed in his work, said: "I want to take off a little of your cheek." The bishop collapsed.—St. Louis Republic.

SAID the wise man, "A soft answer turneth away wrath." A lady who believed in this precept said to her four-year-old Nellie, who is somewhat quick tempered, "If one of your playmates speaks rudely to you, return a soft answer." "Soft?" "Yes. Now run along and play; mamma is busy." The child went out on the lawn where a neighbor's boy was mending a kite. She accidentally broke the kite still more, whereby the boy was made angry. "I don't like you; you're a horrid thing!" he said. Little Nellie's eyes flashed, and she was about to reply with a very unkind remark, when suddenly recalling her mother's advice about a soft answer, she looked the boy right in the eye, and said meekly and soberly, "Mush."

A CLEAR CASE OF DESIGN.

Oh! I am a jolly Tape-worm
And I liv in a gallant man,
Who labors every day, for me,
As hard as ever he can.

I gnaw his bowels every day,
And fill him full of pain,
Till with the agony he writhes,
And the sweat runs down like rain.

Oh! I lie inside him and laugh
To see him work, and eat
Till he starves his wife and children,
To giv a Tape-worm meat.

The jaws of my man make music
That sets me wild with glee,
And I chuckle with joy whene'er I think
How the good God cares for me.

I am only a worm, I know,
And a worm of low degree,
And I bless the Lord with all my might
For making a man for me.

MEN hav no more right to choose the amusements for other men than they hav to choose their religion for them.—Investigator.

MANKIND, in the gross, is a gaping monster who loves to be deceived, and is seldom disappointed.—Mackenzie, in "Man of Feeling."

ALL lynchers, rioters, "political assassins," are tyrants; they are the worst enemies of liberty, for they compel governments to relaps from civil order into the barbarism of military rule.—Moncure D. Conway.

HE who has been faulty in the management of his own concerns will not be able to advise well with reference to those of others. Those who are especially careless of their own welfare are seldom remarkably attentiv to that of others.—Socrates.

PERHAPS the most valuable result of all education is the ability to make yourself do the thing you hav to do when it ought to be done, whether you like it or not; it is the first lesson which ought to be learned, and, however early a man's training begins, it is probably the last lesson he learns thoroughly. — Professor Huxley.

REFERRING to the time and place of the first Christians, Renan says: There never was an age so naïvely credulous, and this was exactly the age of the great outburst of faith. The faculty in the human spirit which reasons seemed extinct; infantine folly was the common atmosphere. It is in this kind of milieu that religions are founded. People lie, and then believe their lie.

SURELY, if anyone is persuaded, whether rightly or wrongly, that his fellows are expending the best part of their imaginations and feelings on a dream and a delusion, and that by so doing moreover they are retarding to an indefinit degree the wider spread of light and happiness, then nothing he can tell them about chemistry or phychology or history can in his eyes be comparable in importance to the duty of telling them this.—John Morley.

IT was to cancel the fall of man through the first Adam that the second Adam had to agonize in Gethsemane and bleed on Calvary. Do away with the Fall, and you do away with the Rise. Call Adam a myth, and Jesus does not require to be a reality. If, through Adam, we did not incur the wrath of God, we did not require the atonement by Jesus to restore us to his favor. If the Adam who got us into hell never existed, why should a Jesus exist to get us out of it?—Saladin.

THE growth of letters has been like that of art, from the marvelous and mythical to the natural and true. The tales and legends of the ancient past were not of common men and common scenes. These could not impress the undeveloped intellects of long ago. A man of letters could not deify a serf or tell the simple story of the poor. He must write to maintain the status of the world, and please the prince who gave him food. So he told of kings and queens, of knights and ladies, of strife and conquest, and the coloring he used was human blood.—C. S. Darrow.

FOR twenty-four years the National Reform Association of professed Protestants worked steadily alone to hav "the Christian religion" named and legalized as the religion of this nation. In its twenty-fifth year, 1887, it secured the alliance of the National Prohibition party and the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and with this additional power continued its efforts for the legal recognition of the Christian religion as the national religion. In 1888 this National Reform combination secured the alliance of the American Sabbath Union representing the great "evangelical" churches of the country, and with increased power the whole combination plied their efforts upon the national government to secure the legal recognition of the Christian religion and the setting up of Sunday as the national holy day. In 1889, the National Reform Association, through the leadership of the American Sabbath Union, secured the long-desired "coöperation" of the Catholic church for national Sunday observance. And in 1892 they were gratified with the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, declaring that "this is a Christian nation," thus giving national, legal recognition to the Christian religion, and this was swiftly followed by the action of Congress in which Sunday was set up as he Sabbath of the fourth commandment and of this nation.—American Sentinel.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especially in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

BOOKS

BY

SALADIN

(W. STEWART ROSS),

Editor of the

LONDON AGNOSTIC JOURNAL.

GOD AND HIS BOOK:

When he had read this book Colonel Ingersoll wrote to the author: "You have earned the thanks of all who really think." It is a work of vast research, of sound criticism, of caustic humor, of sledgehammer vehemence, of scathing satire, of pathos and eloquence. It is one of the heaviest iconoclastic broadsides ever fired at the Jewish God and the Bible.
Cloth, gold letters, $1.25.

WOMAN: HER GLORY, HER SHAME, AND HER GOD.

The Rev. Archdeacon Farrar said that "Christianity elevated the woman; it shrouded as with a halo of sacred innocence the tender years of the child." The object of Saladin's work is to show the archdeacon his error, and he has succeeded. An English writer said of it: "This certainly is one of the most marvelous books ever issued from the press. The authorities cited are unquestionable, and the result is convincing."
In two volumes, cloth. gilt lettered, $2.50.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE SLAVE TRADE.

A condensation of the known facts upon this subject, proving that Christianity did not abolish but aided this infamous traffic in human beings. To which are added such comments as only Saladin can make. In paper, 30 cents.

THE TRANSITION.

A consideration of the antagonism of the Bible and science, and of the question whether the veiled or allegorical portions of the Christian Bible can be interpreted by modern science.
In paper, 20 cents.

ROSES AND RUE.

Being Random Notes and Sketches. Some of its subjects are: A Last Interview with a Man of Genius; An Essay on Stirpiculture; Asceticism and Superstition; Capital Punishment; Poverty; God in the Constitution; Bruno; Gods; Witchcraft, etc. This may be called Saladin's own book, for it is poetry in prose, and is one of the books that lovers of strong literature like to read again and again. In cloth, gold- and silver-lettered, $1.50.

LAYS OF ROMANCE.

This book reminds one of Sir Walter Scott, being romantic, historic, ... aglow in every page with the energy of a true and high poetic genius.
Cloth, gold-lettered, 75 cents

ISAURE and OTHER POEMS.

The title poem is a story of intense passion, touchingly told. The other twenty poems are fresh, fragrant, thoughtful, and every verse reveals the thinker, observer, and reformer. Every page glows with passion and throbs with life.
Cloth, gold-lettered, 75 cents.

A FEARFUL FLOGGING.

By one who endured it. Based upon a manuscript in the possession of Saladin.
In paper, 10 cents.

THE AGONIES OF HANGING.

Studies in Psychology. By one who was cut down from the gallows. Printed from manuscript in the hands of Saladin. In paper, 10 cents.

WHIRLWIND SOWN and REAPED.

A short story of clerical crime and villainy founded on fact. Of this book the Open Court said: "This novel will command the same, or more, interest than Helen Gardener's story, 'Is This Your Son, My Lord?'" In paper, 25 cents.

THE CONFESSIONAL.

Being an exposure of that infamous religious rite. Contents: Li... tiousness of the Pre-Reformation Church; Lechery of the Confessional; The Priest in Abso...tion; Confessions of the Escaped Nun; Extracts from Dens and Liguori; Examination of th... Church's Claim to have Fostered Learning; Her Atte...pts at Continency even more Ruinous than Her Self-Indulgence; The Relative Criminal Statistics of Catholicism and Protestantism
In paper, 25 cents.

News of the Week.

THE Senate has passed the Bland Seignorage bill by a vote of 44 to 31.

MR. JEAN PAUL CEE, president of Comité d'Etudes Morales, is seriously ill.

Tänk Sjelo, the Swedish Freethought paper Fritänkaren under a new name, is dead.

SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN, jurist and author, is dead. His most notable book is "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity."

THE New York Times has begun another of its thorough exposures. This time it has turned its search light on the pension frauds.

THE ambulance surgeons of New York hospitals continue to diognose fatal illness as alcoholism. Some removals are badly needed.

THERE was a serious riot in Harlem on Sunday, March 18th, in which the police and the Italians participated. The police were the aggressors.

AT Paterson, New Jersey, the silk dyers and ribbon weavers struck, attacking and driving out workmen who refused to quit, and destroying much property.

STILL the Senate does nothing, except make money out of the rise and fall of stocks, which owe their fluctuations to its manipulations of the tariff schedules.

THE Cataract General Electric Company has received a fifty year permit to operate boats on the New York canals. Cost of propulsion will be reduced at least fifty per cent.

WALTER WELLMAN, the syndicate newspaper man, is going to make "a dash for the North Pole" with a party of American and Norwegian scientists. The expedition will return in the fall.

KING BEHANZIN, of Dahomey, just previous to his submission to the French, called his mother into his presence, and, telling her he wished to send a message to his father (who is dead), had her beheaded.

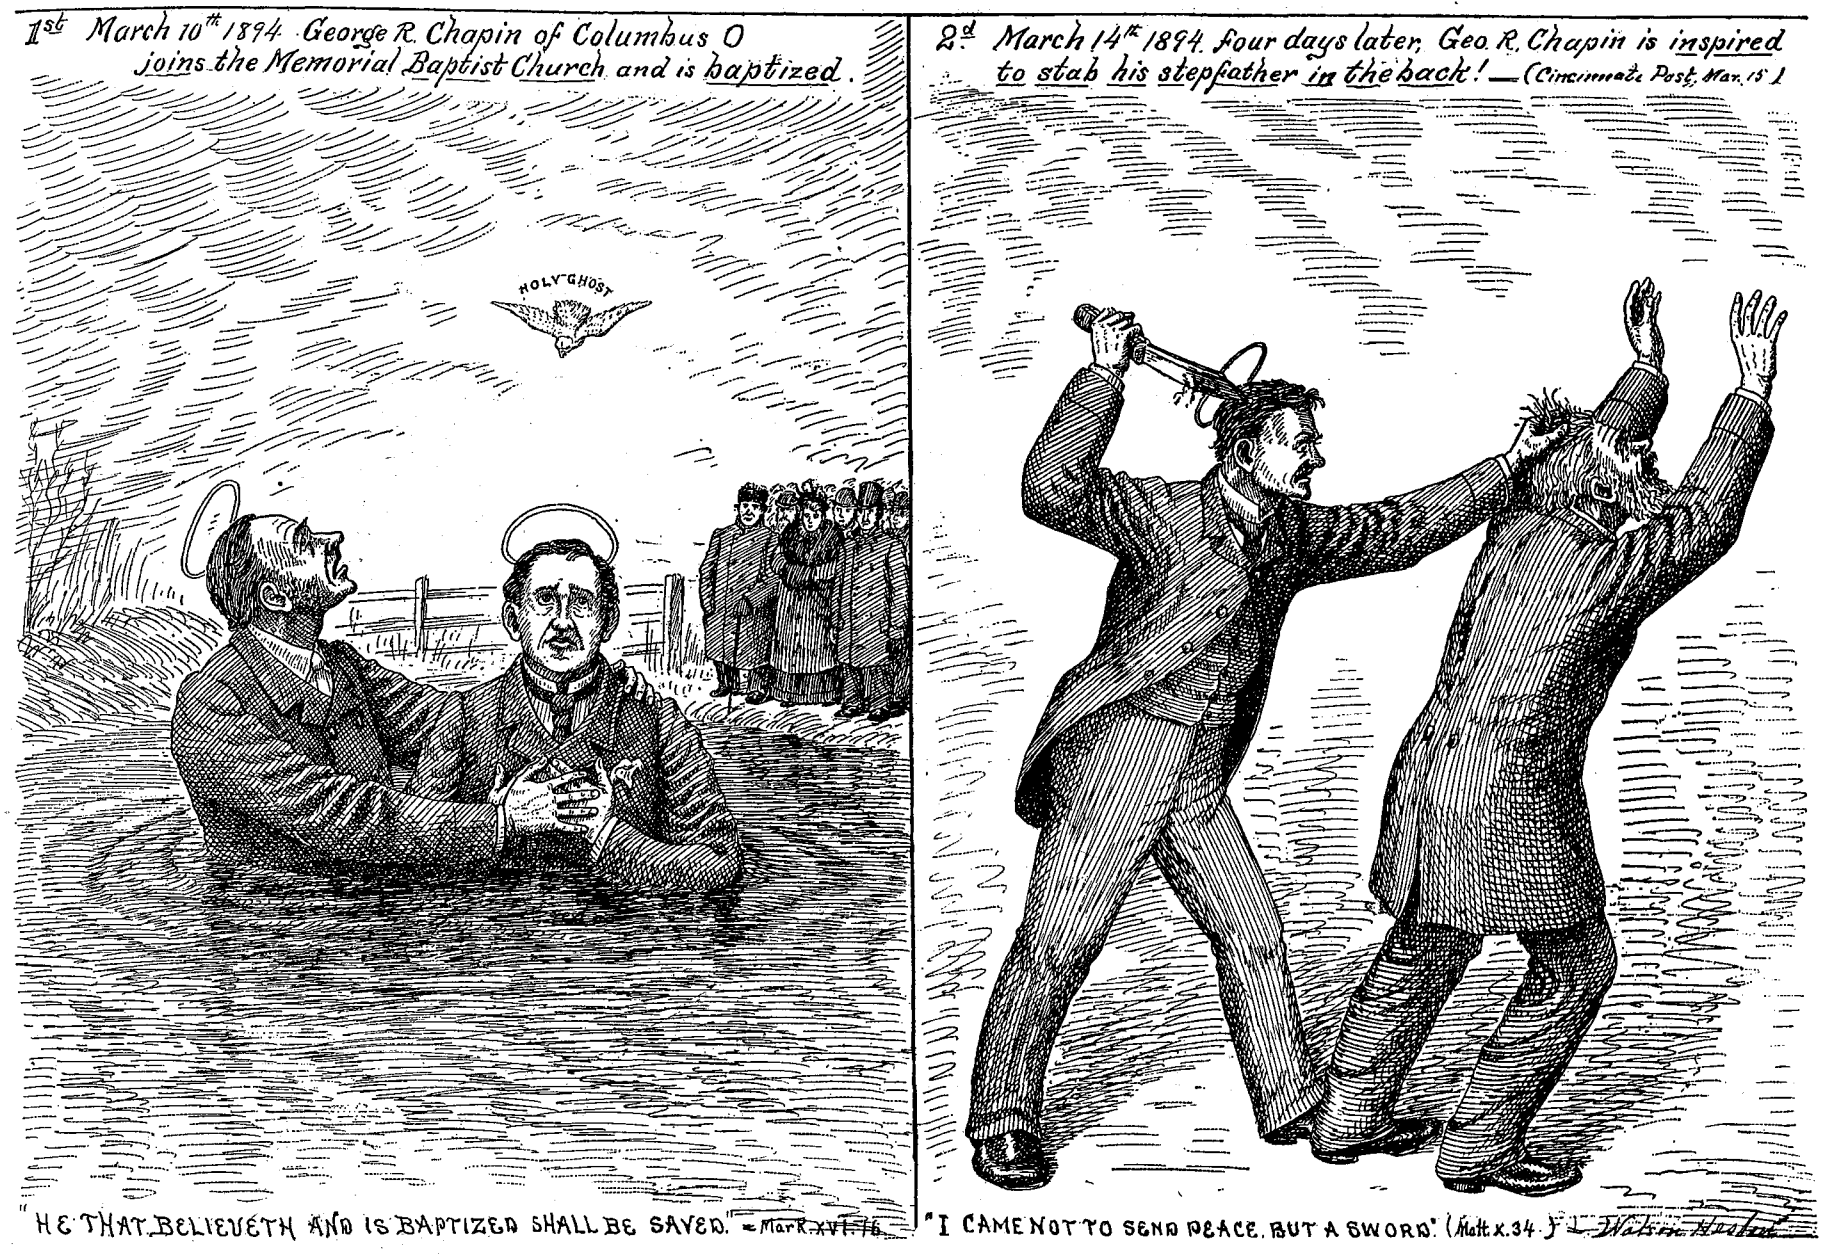
DESIRÉ JOSEPH PAUWELS was blown to pieces in the vestibule of the Madeleine church, Paris, on March 15th, by a bomb concealed on his person. It is supposed he intended to explode the bomb in the congregation.

THE prominent Belgian Freethinker, Victor Arnauld, died Jan. 17, 1894. He was a delegate to the International Freethought Congresss at Naples, 1869, and London, 1887. He was twice elected president of the Belgian Freethought Federation.

A DIVISION of the army of the unemployed, which is to march upon Washington, will come from California. The San Francisco Star (Single Tax paper) says that the leaders, one of whom is Redstone, are rascals and should be promptly arrested.

A SOCIALIST deputy in the French Chamber of Deputies in a recent speech showed that protection ends in Socialism. He said that the government should import as much wheat as is needed each year beyond the amount raised by French farmers, and sell all at a price fixed by law.

LABOUCHERE offered an amendment to the Queen's address that the power now enjoyed by the House of Lords to prevent the passage of bills shall cease. It was adopted by a vote of 147 to 145. Half of the members were absent at lunch and the government will not consider it a mandate to resign.



PRESIDENT PEIXOTO'S fleet and the forts attacked Admiral da Gama's insurgent vessels in Rio Janeiro harbor on March 13th. The rebels did not return the fire and soon surrendered, Da Gama taking refuge on a French man-of-war. Most of the insurgent officers were subsequently taken off a Portuguese vessel as it attempted to leave the harbor. Admiral Mello, with several of the insurgent ships, is still helping the land forces of the rebellion in the southern states of the republic.

GOVERNOR WAITE, of Colorado, has the authority to remove members of the fire and police boards of Denver. Several of his removals hav been sustained by the Supreme Court. Recently he removed two police commissioners. They refused to giv up their offices, and a subordinate court enjoined the governor from further action. He called out the militia, and the police armed and held the city hall against the state troops. General McCook ordered United States soldiers from Fort Logan to preserve the peace. The contending parties hav now submitted the dispute to the arbitration of the Supreme Court.

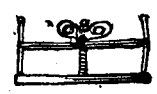
Miss Wixon has taken as her mottoes in writing this beautiful book of 292 pages—which she has dedicated to the memory of her father and mother—these sentences from the works of a great synthetic philosopher and a gifted liberal minister:



As with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not.—Herbert Spencer.

Living is an Art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the Arts.—Thomas Starr King.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite,	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT

FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNORED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

SOME HANDSOME PREMIUMS.

To induce new subscriptions and prompt renewals on the part of our friends we make the following handsome premium offers:

For $6.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and S. P. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" ($5). By taking advantage of this or our Free offer of the book (see opposit page) there is no reason why every Freethinker in the country should not possess this splendid work.

For $5 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Paine's Great Works Complete" ($3). This edition of Paine's works contains a picture of Paine, of the statue proposed to be erected in Chicago, and of his monument in New Rochelle.

For $5 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers" ($3). By D. M. Bennett.

For $4.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and James B. Alexander's Dynamic Theory ($2.75). This is a splendid offer, for every one wants this book. It has over a thousand large pages and more than four hundred illustrations. It is a digest of Science, and every one who studies it cannot help but be well-informed in all scientific matters.

For $4.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" in cloth ($2.50).

For $4 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" in boards ($2).

For $4 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and a copy of "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in cloth covers ($1.50).

For $3.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers ($1).

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

What Weapons Shall We Use?

No doctrin, principle, theory, hypothesis, relation, book, or institution is "sacred," in the sense that it may not be or should not be freely examined and criticised. No man or woman should be required to accept a dogma on trust. All progress depends on fearless investigation. All advance results from dissatisfaction with what is, from hope or knowledge of something better. These are axioms with the Freethinker. If he sometimes fails to apply them it cannot legitimately be assumed that they are therefore untrue; the weakness is in the man. He has not fully grasped the meaning of Freethought. Old prejudices and defectiv methods of reasoning, inherited from generations of mental slaves or instilled into his mind in childhood, incapacitate him for logical thinking and fair treatment of opponents. He forgets that Freethought is, as Samuel P. Putnam well says, a method and not a result. He does not realize that the fundamental demand of Freethought is for liberty to grow. This does not mean that the developing mind should hav liberty to grow in some particular direction, but it means that it should hav liberty to grow in any direction. It means that the brain which grows into Methodism has as many rights as the brain which grows out of Methodism. And vice versa. It means that civil law should respect the freedom of choice alike of Catholic, Presbyterian, Adventist, Universalist, and Atheist.

As Freethinkers we necessarily war on intellectual errors—that is, of course, on what we conceive to be intellectual errors. We would enlighten the people. We would show them that, historically considered, the Bible and the Christian church are not what they hav been taught by their parents, teachers, and pastors to consider them. We would induce them to study religions comparativly. We would urge an investigation of the claims and facts of material science. We would ask all to search for truth, regardless of the effect of new-found truth on old beliefs. We would insist that every man has the indefeasible right to form and promulgate his own conclusions regarding the credibility of any statement in history, "sacred" or "profane," and any hypothesis advanced by men of science. Claiming this right for ourselvs, we are forever debarred from denying it to others. It makes no difference how credulous they are; they may not hav a single event of the past ages straight in their minds, and they may be as ignorant of the facts of modern science as the babe in arms. Their civil rights remain the same and equal with those of the student and philosopher. So long as the acts of government are restricted to the defense of personal and property rights, the ignorance of the elector is only a transitory evil, and one which affects himself chiefly. The most humble or ignorant citizen has precisely the same right to protection from aggression as has the most exalted or learned. And no class has the right to pass upon the intellectual qualifications of another class when it comes to the exercise of civil rights. If the voter's ignorance of the primary elements of education shut him out of the polling booth through his inability to read and properly mark a ballot, we may or may not think the result desirable, although justice demands that it be said in passing that such educated men as the leaders of the theocratic party are, at least, as dangerous to civil and religious liberty as are any would-be voters who do not know A from Z. But the disfranchisment that results from inability to read a list of names on a ticket is something wholly different from the proscription of a class of citizens whose knowledge is not up to the standard set by their religious enemies. Their disfranchisment would be theological persecution pure and simple. As Freethinkers, as Liberals, we could not for a moment countenance such intolerance, directly or indirectly. Only as a punishment for grave crime is disfranchisment allowable, and as such it can be visited only upon the individual offenders.

It is an essential part of the work of Freethinkers to weaken and destroy belief in the ridiculous and immoral dogmas of the churches. We know that the belief in witchcraft, for example, has been an unmitigated curse to the race. The dogma of vicarious atonement is demoralizing. The idea that a book or a man is infallible is opposed to all experience and has been productiv of suffering beyond the power of pen to describe. Both forms of this delusion still torment millions of our fellows. The dogma of exclusiv salvation makes men selfish, intolerant, and cruel. Prayer, as an appeal to a power beyond ourselvs, is a waste of time and energy. The attempt to reconcile the evil that unquestionably pervades the universe with the existence of a God at once all-powerful and all-good is a hopeless task and can result only in the stultification of our ethical natures. It forces us to commend in God what we condemn and punish in man, thus holding the finite, helpless creature to a rigid accountability from which we release the infinit, supreme creator. All these and many other tenets of the religion which is dominant in this country, and much of the narrativ part of the Bible, hav, upon the whole, a positivly bad influence. The sooner they are nullified by the rationalistic view of religious evolution and the turning of the people's thoughts in other directions, through the discoveries of scientific explorers and the improvement of our economic and social conditions, the better it will be for humanity. In striving to bring about this desirable change we must remember that Freethought is a method which we cannot afford to disregard. We can guide and instruct, but we cannot compel. And we should not compel if we could. What we can do by the presentation of facts, by the use of argument, by appeals to the moral impulses and fraternal sympathies of men and women, and by ridicule of absurdities and the satirizing of hypocrits, it is rightfully ours to do. All such sowing will, sooner or later, help replace tares with wheat. It will assist, albeit imperceptibly, in the slow but grand uplifting of our race.

But it is no part of our mission to go out into the highways and bypaths of ignorance, prejudice, hate, and vice and force those who would not to come in to the marriage feast of reason and love. Leave the business of compulsion to the church. Liberalism is a protest against that method of evangelization, and cannot engage in it without committing moral suicide. We must not attempt to limit the civil rights of citizens because they cling to doctrins which we reject as absurd or immoral. Before all else in importance is the right of choice in matters of belief. Even if it were justifiable from a moral point of view to disfranchise citizens or to debar them from office because of their church affiliations, it would be the hight of folly to attempt to do so; for, while legal persecution causes great individual suffering, it inevitably strengthens the belief which is assailed, and this chiefly for the reason that it does inflict losses and pain upon the accepters of the creed that is discriminated against by the law. No matter how intensely you loathe the tenets of any church or how bitterly you hate its leaders, never do so indiscreet a thing as to invoke against them the laws of the state. If you do you confess your own weakness, you trample the principles of Freethought, and you do more in one hour to strengthen the position of your enemy than he could do in twenty years of unmolested propaganda. Critical scholarship, the steadily onward march of science, and the evolution of ethics are disintegrating the religions of Christendom. Even the Roman Catholic church feels and is moved by the spirit of the age. Education advances. The light is spreading. Hope smiles. But such assaults as are being made in some quarters on Rome are mischievous, because they are foolish and savor of persecution. They hav done much in a very few years to stir up the worst of passions, and also to array against the crusaders thousands of believers in fair play who yet agree with them that Rome represents, as perhaps no other church except the Covenanter does, superstition and reaction. These intemperate attacks are doing a great deal to consolidate the forces of the very organization we are anxious to weaken by the spread of intelligence and the complete separation of church and state. Leaving to one side all questions of equity and religious freedom, we could do no more unwise thing than attempt the disfranchisment of any class of citizens because of their membership in a particular church.

Freethinkers can giv no quarter to doctrins which affirm the right of the church to interfere with or control the state. All such meddling, all such dominance, is, by the testimony of universal history, sure to lead to the oppression of dissenters. But the right of Christians to teach such doctrins must be conceded and defended. Even when they claim allegiance to spiritual powers beyond or above the nation they do not lose their citizen rights. They can still propagate their opinions. The rights of conscience are inalienable. We do not war on their religious beliefs, nor can we punish them for fear they will sometime commit a crime against the equal rights of the citizen. Being subject to the laws, they cannot be denied a voice in the enactment of the laws. The franchise cannot be touched in the name of either heresy or religion. No kind of belief or disbelief can constitutionally or rightfully be made a test of citizenship.

Officials are, or should be, merely the agents of those who select them. They are not authorized, or should not be authorized, to enact, interpret, or administer laws prejudicial to the equal rights of any citizen. In the absence of any such statutes, and in the case of offices which do not require their incumbents to hav anything to do with laws of that class no true Freethinker would concern himself with the religious opinions of a candidate, especially if that candidate held by the principles of equal religious liberty, as many Christians do. Whenever possible differences upon religious questions should be kept out of politics, and above all else no man should be voted against in caucus, convention, or at the polls simply because he does not agree in religion with the voter.

On the other hand, we must not permit ourselvs to be stripped of our civil rights. We must see to it that those who in office vote for measures which are in contravention of the fundamental principles of social justice do not in future receive our support or the support of any others who think as we do, but who may not be conversant with the record of these recreant office-holders. They are actual as well as potential offenders and must take the consequences of their acts. Politically, we war on all schemes which would deny freedom of expression of thought. Politically, in self-defense, we war on men who support schemes that deny religious and mental liberty. Less we cannot do. Religious liberty does not involve the right to destroy religious liberty. As it is unconstitutional and unjust to legislate in favor of or against any form of religious or non-religious belief it is our unquestionable right, as defenders of equal religious liberty, to antagonize at the polls all who favor that kind of legislation. What Freethinker could vote for a friend of the Christian amendment to fill any legislativ office? Or for an advocate of Sunday laws? What one among us could support for a judicial position a awyer who, as a member of the legislature or of Congress, had voted for a Sunday statute or for the retention of the Bible in the schools?

Freethinkers would use only mental and moral weapons, save in self-defense. They would destroy by supplanting. As has been said, they would remove an evil "by the absorbent substitution of the opposit good." They do not wish to compel Christians to accept their principles, and they could not if they did. No one can do that, although almost all religionists hav attempted it, and many of them hav not yet profited by the experience of their predecessors. Freethinkers would not discriminate in the slightest degree against Christians because of their beliefs nor because of their spiritual allegiance to the heads of their churches. It would not disfranchise them, it would not prevent them from holding office. But when any among them attempt to subvert the Constitution, to unite church and state, to deny equal freedom in the name of God or Jesus or Bible or Vicegerent, then those individual offenders must bear the responsibility of their own acts. In self-defense we will strike them as hard as we can. And we will strike all lawmakers who assist them in their plots against the liberty and peace of the people. In the case of the American Sabbath Union, the National Reform Association, and other similar bodies which are founded for the avowed purpose of securing religious legislation, our antagonism is directed against them collectivly; they are all offenders and no member of any of them should ever be helped into a position of authority by our votes. They are pledged to cut the throat of Liberty at the first opportunity and we are crazy if we assist them in the least to obtain that opportunity. With the churches, however, it is different. Against them we shall use all mental and moral weapons and we shall strive to strip them of the privileges with which custom and law hav invested them. But not all of their members are in favor of religious legislation; in some of them very few are, and hence we can in justice deal at the polls only with those who array themselvs in the ranks of the deniers of equal rights. They hav taken the sword of aggression, and they who take the sword shall perish by the sword. But their fellow church members who do not favor laws in the interest of Christianity hav not offended against the Constitution and the law of equal liberty in religion, and therefore we wage no political warfare against them.

Wanted—More Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two splendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

Is the Fight Against Superstition Won?

Many of our friends who are devoting their attention chiefly to political and economic reforms are fond of telling us that it is a waste of time to fight religion, for religion is practically dead. These optimistic utterances come from men and women representing all schools of modern sociological thought. Such sentiments frequently find expression on the platform of the Manhattan Liberal Club. Freethought lecturers are there told that they are assaulting a cripple, that the church is powerless to harm science and Freethought or to limit liberty of expression and action. It is foolish, we are informed, to concern ourselvs about the movements of the National Reform Association and its congeners. All will come out right if only we will leave the intellectual emancipation of the world to "evolution." It apparently does not occur to these good people that "evolution" is just as competent to attend to the economic as to the mental liberation of the people and that therefore Populist, Single-Taxer, Socialist, and Anarchist can lay down their pens and close their mouths in the sweet assurance that "evolution" will do their work for them. Once people looked to "God" to win their battles and now some of their descendants are inclined to substitute "evolution" for God. As a matter of fact, however, at this stage of the game the human brain is one of the most potent factors in evolution, and religious no more than economic disenthrallment will be achieved by blind trust in the forces of growth, conceived of as something apart from human activities.

Freethought workers in Australia meet the same objections that we do here. A writer signing himself "Socialist" says in the Melbourne Liberator that it does not help the cause of labor any to get the people out of the church, and he makes the surprising assertion that nearly all the workers are Atheists. "Scrutator," one of Mr. Symes's assistants, replies to "Socialist" very effectivly, and as his arguments are not limited in their application by their local allusions we subjoin them in full:

"We certainly are surprised to hear that most of the workers are Atheists. If that can be made clear our work is pretty well done; and we promis to change our policy and drop forever our Antichristian crusade, as soon as it shall be made apparent that ninety per cent—ay, eighty per cent—of the working classes are Atheists.

"If religion and religious bigotry are so very dead as 'Socialist' asserts, we beg to ask an explanation of the following facts: 1. How is it Mr. Symes cannot get a hall in Ballarat and many other colonial cities for a lecture, even upon neutral subjects? 2. How is it halls are still refused him after being hired and paid for? 3. How is it the very newspapers are rigidly closed against him, except they hav a chance to slander or misrepresent him? 4. How is it that the poor by hundreds and thousands wallow in poverty and giv their pence to support priests and build God houses and palaces for religious purposes? 5. How is it that about $200,000,000 per annum are devoted, in Great Britain, one way and another, yearly, to religious objects, if religion is so very dead? And how is it a probably proportionate sum is expended in the same way in the colonies? We find it extremely difficult to believe all this money is wasted by unbelievers upon things their faith no longer embraces. 'Socialist' may hav lost all his own faith, and falls therefore into the error of supposing other people are like him in that respect.

"We, however, know better. We know that still religious bribery and intimidation sway the world to an enormous extent; we know that thousands of poor workers and struggling tradesmen are positivly afraid to declare their opinions or be seen attending a Freethought lecture. We know that the railway bookstalls in England refused even to sell the National Reformer, though filled with first-class political matter; and we know that to this very day most of our agents are afraid to let it be known that they sell the Liberator; and even Mr. Cole in the Book Arcade would not offer for sale a work bearing Mr. Symes's name on any condition whatsoever. We know worse still, and that is that Mr. Symes has no chance whatever of getting common justice from most of the judges, because religious bigotry and rancor forbid. These facts, being plain and undeniable, demonstrate the necessity of further vigorous fighting to kill the serpent theology. As for the parsons and priests, they order and drive the people as long as they possibly can; then they lead, cajole, and amuse; when this is no longer possible, they follow them, or pretend to do so; anything to catch prey. 'All things to all men,' is their motto."

Substantially the same state of things prevails in America, except that in some parts of the country the lecture platform is more free than it appears to be in Australia. Yet, even Colonel Ingersoll was denied admission to Music Hall, Philadelphia, only a few years ago. We know what religious class laws are here, what the press is, how the masses as well as the classes fill the coffers of the churches. There is still plenty to do. The battle for knowledge and liberty is not yet won. A greater educativ and political conflict than any we hav yet passed through impends.

"None but empty hands can grasp a full Christ," remarks Thomas Cook, the evangelist. This is certainly bad news for the owners of untaxed churches, whose hands clutch greedily the people's money.

Those of our subscribers who hav asked for copies of Saladin's "God and His Book" will please take notice that we hav just received a small consignment from England and we shall be pleased to fill all orders while the supply lasts.

What will likely prove to be a murder was committed in Columbus, Ohio, March 14th. The probable slayer is George R. Chapin and the victim is his stepfather, Henry Gardner. Chapin ordered Gardner away from his mother's and when she said that if anyone went it would be George he seized a knife and stabbed Gardner twice in the back. The murderer had joined the Memorial Baptist church the previous Sunday and been immersed. Mr. Heston thinks this crime has a moral, as the reader will see by his cartoon on the first page.

Our readers will see by the letter from Thos. Burk that Mr. A. D. Swan is requested to find out some facts so far unknown to Mr. Burk, who kindly givs the champion of mediums the full name of his brother. This should be a valuable clue.

A movement is on foot in Massachusetts to outlaw Sunday concerts. Ex-Lieut.-Governor Barrett's morning paper, the Boston Advertiser, places the seal of its approval upon the proposed law. It says that the rendition of "sacred music by choral societies on Sunday evening" is allowable, but people who wish to hear other kinds of music should be denied the opportunity to do so. This is characteristic. The religionist is to hav what he wants, because he puts up the claim that he is better than his neighbor and legislators generally admit without investigation the validity of the assumption. The well-known philosophical author, Frederick May Holland, writes to the Investigator that the proposed statute "seems to call for sharp comment and prompt action. The most important of all the demands of Liberalism, in my opinion, is that all our citizens should be permitted to spend Sunday in any way they please which is permitted by law on other days and does not disturb public worship." Mr. Holland is clearly right in this, as he is in the further observation that "it is not a question whether sermons do more good than concerts, but simply whether those who prefer to go to concerts are to be at liberty to do so."

We hav quoted above some comments of F. M. Holland upon the pending anti-Sunday concert law in Massachusetts, and we wish now to call particular attention to another point which he makes. It is this: "If Sunday concerts are forbidden by this legislature, it may prove very difficult to get the law repealed. Many citizens prefer to keep every law as it is, on general principles; and that class can now be asked to support the liberal side." The importance of prevention cannot be over-estimated. We can kill ten bad bills in committee or on the Representativ and Senate floors much more easily than we can secure the repeal of one iniquitous law. We hope that Massachusetts Freethinkers will act at once. THE TRUTH SEEKER suggests that they communicate immediately with Mr. Holland at Concord. Remonstrances should be prepared without delay and sent to the legislature.

The United Brethren church aligns itself with the Christian amendment people. At its last general conference this declaration was adopted:

"We believe that God is the source of all authority and has appointed our Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations. The Bible contains his revealed will for nations as well as for individuals, and it is the standard by which all moral issues in political life are to be decided. This nation will not be a Christian nation in the highest sense until this authority is nationally accepted and obedience rendered thereto."

According to the census of 1890 the United Brethren churches hav 225,281 communicants and untaxed property to the value $4,937,583. They are next to the Free Methodists as regards ignorance and fanaticism.

We are informed by a paper representing a certain self-styled reform faction that the American people are reckless in "allowing any such press to operate in its limits as will publish any sentiment in favor of the Romish church." Does not this Protestant bigot and would-be inquisitor hav sense enough to see that because Rome in times past acted upon the principle he advocates she made herself the scourge of humanity? That is why she is mistrusted to-day. Can not this candidate for the editorship of a Protestant Index Expurgatorius grasp the fact that in demanding the suppression of Roman Catholic literature he is himself inculcating the fundamental political ideas of that church? She did what he wants to do and for that he curses her! Poor, deluded sectarian! Before and above all else is the freedom of the press.

The article upon church property which appears in this and succeeding issues of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be made into a pamphlet immediately upon completion. The book will be a vade mecum, as the pedants say, upon the subject, and is designed as a handbook for those who object to being held up by the tax gatherer and forced to pay other people's taxes.

This question will be brought before the New York Constitutional Convention, which meets in May, and every delegate shall be supplied with this pamphlet. We also desire to place it in the hands of every editor and legislator in the state—and in the country, if we can—with requests for notice and discussion. We also want to circulate it generally and generously. The price for single copies will be low (we will announce it as soon as the cost is determined) and in quantities still lower.

To distribute it as it should be we want help, particularly from the Liberals of New York state, though it will not be refused from anybody. It is a national question and work done in one state helps in others. Those who feel like helping can send such sums as they can spare and will receive pamphlets to the amount of their donation.

The more we receive the wider will be the circulation of the pamphlet. Every Liberal is interested in this question, and we hope will help us to distribute thousands.

Last Monday's New York papers reported portions of a sermon preached the day before by Rev. John F. Carson, of the Central Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, on "The McKanes and the Breckinridges of the Church." Here are some sentences from the sermon:

"The two men whose audacious crimes hav appalled the country were prominent in the church. I hav only one hypothesis on which to explain their church relationship—they are hypocrits, having stolen the livery of heaven that they might better serve the devil. Their church membership is only one more item in their life of deception and hypocrisy and fraud. The McKanes and the Breckinridges are prominent representativs of other men in the church who are false to their vows, hypocritical in their profession, corrupt in their lives. · · · The McKanes and Breckinridges of the church are living in direct antagonism to the clear teaching of the church, the essence of whose doctrin is purity and uprightness."

How does Mr. Carson know that McKane and Breckinridge are hypocrits? Would he say the same if they had professed to be Buddhists or Freethinkers or followers of Mohammed? We are told that the essence of the doctrin of the church "is purity and uprightness." It is not. What distinguishes the Christian from the devotee of the other religions and from the Freethinker is the acceptance of certain dogmas concerning persons, places, and conditions which are without the range of human experience. In its moral cult Christianity differs only in unimportant details from the other great religions and from the unchurched world. Eliminate its doctrinal tenets and nothing distinctiv is left of Mr. Carson's religion. That a man is vicious or criminal does not even tend to prove that his profession of Christianity is hypocritical. "The devils believe and tremble." A visit to any prison will prove this, translating "devil" into evil. Belief is the test of Christian sincerity. Belief is the test of all religious sincerity. It is a very poor proof, do you say? That may be, but it is the only one you hav, for morality is something distinct from religion, although often subordinated to it. This has been the curse of the world. The greatest enemies of their race hav been devout believers, and the same is true to-day. It is not to be denied, of course, that there are multitudes of men in the church who do not believe in her dogmas, but they are no more likely to be her criminals than are the real disciples. She is responsible for their hypocrisy, for she makes a profession of belief instead of moral conduct the open sesame to good society and business and political preferment. As regards McKane and Breckinridge there is every reason to believe that they hav not rejected a single fundamental doctrin of their respectiv churches. A man's belief makes him careful of his duties Godward. That is what devoutness is for, but it does not necessarily induce him to do his duty toward man. Some it does effect that way, though it is still more likely to make them persecute their neighbor for his soul's health. Mr. Carson should remember that the Bible knows but one "unpardonable sin," and that is neither political conspiracy, perjury, betrayal, nor hypocrisy. Why, then, does he say that the essence of Christian doctrin is purity and uprightness? It is belief.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

Should It Be Exempt from Just and Impartial Taxation?

REASONS WHY IT SHOULD NOT.

An Argument for Equality of Taxation, and a Statement of Facts, Giving, from the Censns of 1890, the Valne, by Denominations, of Chnrch Property in the United States and in the Several States and Territories and in All Cities Having 25,000 or More Inhabitants; so Arranged as to Show at a Glance the Relative Standing as to Wealth of the Leading Denominations and Denominational Gronps.—Also, Much Other Matter of Especial Interest to Certain Cities, States, and Sections.—All Comparisons and Percentages Based Upon Official Figures.

II.

It is wonderful how custom and prejudice, saying nothing of supposed self-interest, will blind people to the most glaring inconsistencies and flagrant wrongs. Nearly all representative Protestants declaim against the granting of appropriations to sectarian institutions, and yet we find that according to a report published in 1880 by Dexter A. Hawkins, a lawyer of New York city, Protestant institutions in this metropolis had received from the state and city donations of real estate to the value of three million dollars, and, from 1869 to 1880, five million six hundred thousand dollars in appropriations from the treasury. During the last eight years the Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, and Lutherans have divided with the Catholics nearly four million dollars given by the national government for Indian schools under sectarian control. And yet Protestants say there is no union of church and state in this country, or, if there is, it is only to the extent that Roman Catholic institutions receive gifts from the states and cities in which that church is a great power. If Protestants really do not believe in taxing one man for the support of his neighbor's religion, why do they insist upon having chaplains in Congress, in the army and navy, in state legislatures, and in charitable, reformatory, and penal institutions, and upon having these chaplains paid out of national, state, or municipal funds? Why do they persist in continuing religious exercises in the public schools, these schools being wholly supported by taxation? Why do they, with a few honorable exceptions, defend the exemption of church property from taxation? In all these cases, except the last, public money is directly appropriated for the support of ministers and therefore for the propagation of religion, and in the matter of church exemption the end reached is the same, only the route taken is slightly tortuous.

Manifestly, then, the exemption of church property from taxation directly traverses the law of religious liberty, being, in effect, the voting of a certain sum out of the public treasury for the support of a particular form of belief concerning matters about which it is impossible that all the people of the state can agree. In this connection I quote from Rev. Dr. Wayland, who, in his "Political Economy," has said:

"All that religious societies have a right to ask of the civil government is the same privileges for transacting their own affairs which societies of every other sort possess. This they have a right to demand, not because they are religious societies, but because the exercise of religion is an innocent mode of pursuing happiness. If it happens accidentally that others are benefited, it does not follow that they are obliged to pay for this benefit. It cannot be proved that the Christian religion needs the support of the civil government, since it has existed and flourished when entirely deprived of this support."

America's first great philosopher, Benjamin Franklin, wrote:

"When a religion is good, I conceive that it will support itself, and when it cannot support itself and God does not take care to support it, so its professors are obliged to call for help from the civil power, it is a sign, I apprehend, of its being a bad one."

It certainly is bad to the extent that it denies the vital principle of religious freedom by imposing itself upon non-believing or differently believing taxpayers.

President James A. Garfield, himself once a clergyman and president of a religious college, said:

"The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute. It ought to be so absolute that no church property anywhere, in any state, or in the nation, should be exempt from equal taxation; for if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a tax upon the whole community."

How quickly this nation-wide denial of the rights of conscience would cease if all Protestant ministers—saying nothing of Catholic clergymen—had as clear a sense of justice in this matter, as intense a love of the absolutely secular republic, as the murdered Garfield has, in the foregoing sentences, given evidences that he possessed!

Even the New York Independent has allowed this to go out to the Christian world in its columns:

"The time has come when all religious denominations must affirm that no public moneys shall be used for sectarian instruction; the time-honored principle of the separation of church and state must be again emphasized. If a church is not willing to support its own schools, it cannot come to the state for aid. I would go so far in the application of this principle as to be willing to see all our churches taxed as is other property. We hav no right to tax unbelievers that churches may be maintained; no more right than they would hav to tax churches for the support of Infidel clubs."

It is much to be regretted that so influential a paper as the Independent cannot see its way clear to carry to its logical conclusion the principle so well illustrated in the quotation I have made. "No more right to tax unbelievers that the churches may be maintained" than unbelievers "would have to tax churches for the support of Infidel clubs." That is the truth in a nutshell. Whole pages of argument are concentrated in those few words.

The San Antonio Express uses this vigorous language:

"The Express is not antagonistic to the churches. It believes that many of them are doing a great and noble work; but it does not believe in exempting sectarian property from taxation in a land of alleged religious liberty at the expense of men who regard the church as a brake on the wheels of progress, an incubus on civilization, the preservator of antique ignorance, the storehouse of foolish superstition. It does not approve of the church posing as an almoner while the thin purse of labor is annually mulct to make it a present of several millions. Let it be just before it attempts to be generous. Let it assume its due proportion of the public burdens and perchance there will not be so much need of its dole. The church should not profit at the expense of the poor; it certainly should not fatten at the cost of those who despise it."

This question is pertinent: Do church people who talk of "Christian liberty" mean the liberty of Christians to take by legal force the property of other people? It certainly would seem so when they denounce the taxation of ecclesiastical property as an interference with the rights of the church.

When William Cullen Bryant was at the editorial helm of the New York Evening Post that paper reasoned logically upon the question of church exemption, as witness this:

"The Evening Post has long been of the opinion that the American theory of a self-supporting church ought to be carried out to its full and legitimate conclusion, and that the separation of the church and state ought to be complete. It should include the total discontinuance of contributions of public money, direct or indirect, to the support of any religious establishment. We have never been able to see the slightest difference in principle between the appropriation of a certain sum of money raised by tax to a particular church, and a release of that church from a tax on its property to the same amount. The cost of the act in either case falls upon the taxpayers generally."

Religious believers will surely feel the force of the arguments contained in this memorial addressed to the general court of Massachusetts in 1775:

"For a civil legislature to impose religious tax is, we conceive, a power which their constituents never had to give, and therefore going entirely out of their jurisdiction. We are persuaded that an entire freedom from being taxed by civil rulers to religious worship is not a mere favor from any man or men in the world; but a right and property granted us by God, who commands us to stand fast to it. We should wrong our consciences by allowing that power to men which we believe belongs only to God."

The exemption of church property from taxation denies religious liberty because it enables the wealthier societies to secure and retain large properties in the most desirable locations in the great cities, where they wield a social and political influence out of all proportion to their numbers and moral beneficence as compared with the weaker societies of the same denominations. If they had to pay taxes upon their estates they would not be so avaricious of land, their edifices would not be so gorgeous, and there is a probability that their disease-breeding cemeteries would be removed from the heart of the city to locations where they would be less detrimental to the health of the people. Tax exemption also enables these wealthy church corporations to hold property in the older parts of the cities until the general rise in the value of real estate has greatly augmented its selling price, when they move out into more fashionable districts, having made snug profits out of the downtown property, and this largely because it was exempt from taxation. They often resist street extensions and other improvements and in general comport themselves in such a manner as to show that they are unworthy to receive special privileges from the city and state, even were the granting of such privileges not on general principles unjust and violative of religious liberty.

Exemption of Church Property from Taxation is Unjnst.

Taxation should be equal and uniform. No class of citizens should be compelled to pay a higher rate of taxation than any other class. Property, not persons or beliefs, should be taxed. No special privileges should be granted, no monopolies created or protected. Inequalities in condition there will be, but these inequalities should not owe their existence to governmental interference and favoritism. To exempt church property from taxation is to grant to church organizations favors which are denied to other societies and to individuals. It makes taxation unequal and unjust. It takes burdens off shoulders that should bear them and puts them on those that should not bear them. Those who possess and enjoy should pay. Those who have money to build churches should pay the taxes upon them. Those who are rich enough to rent or buy pews in churches are rich enough to pay the state for protecting them in the use of those pews. It is scandalously unjust that a two-million-dollar cathedral should compel the city to pay for sewering, paving, and lighting the street in its front. What right has it to call upon the city fire department to save it from the flames or the police department to protect it against rioters? If it is insured have not the other policyholders in the companies which carry the risk just cause of complaint in the fact that they are forced to draw from their tax-depleted purses to pay losses upon property which is free from all tax assessments?

All church exemption is wrong in principle, but the injustice is greatly aggravated, practically, in the case of edifices costing up into the hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars. It is positively shameful that the hard-working people of the city should be compelled to help pay the taxes upon such palaces of fashionable worship, palaces into which they could not get admission if their supposedly immortal souls depended upon the entrance therein of their poorly-clad bodies. It is generally understood that the Protestant Episcopal church organizations in the city of New York are contemplating the erection of a cathedral to cost $10,000,000. Think of it! Ten millions of dollars locked up in one building or buried in its site! One hundred thousand dollars wrung annually from the tax-payers of New York, on the supposition that property in the city is assessed for taxation at one-half its cost. Talk of a "free" gospel preached in a ten-million-dollar cathedral, whose owners are so poor in common honesty that they ask exemption from taxation in the names of justice and morality!

When costs of street improvement, sewers, etc., are assesssd against the abutting property, owners of lots in the same block with a church may be robbed of nearly all they possess by the operation of the law of church exemption. So much of the block being tax-free throws a relatively greater burden upon that which is taxed, and the unfortunate owner finds the savings of years confiscated that the church palace may escape the payment of its obligations. Could injustice be more rank? The carriages of its patrons are driven to its doors over pavements for which an Infidel living under the shadow of its steeple has paid!

Touching the injustice of church exemption from taxation, the San Antonio Express, previously quoted comments:

"We have in America several single church properties whose value mounts up into the millions, yet they are exempt from governmental burdens, while the laborer's cottage, the widow's cow, and the orphan's patrimony must pay a heavier tax in consequence. In order to exempt church property whose value would make Dives feel like a beggar we impose a heavier burden upon the man who believes with his whole heart that the Christian religion is but a tissue of sacerdotal falsehoods, inimical to all that makes for the betterment of the human race. This opinion may be, and doubtless is, erroneous; but in a 'free country,' in a land of 'religious liberty,' the Agnostic and the Atheist should stand on an equality before the law with the most devout 'evangelist.' But such is not the case. Being in the majority, the 'believers' tyrannize over the dissenters, ignore their rights, and actually 'tithe' them that costly church property may be exempt from public burdens."

A writer in the Christian Inquirer, of New York, thinks that the equal taxation of all property would be a positive benefit to religion. This is his argument:

"As things are it might be hard on some of our churches to tax them, but the principle of exemption is wrong; if churches were taxed we should have fewer temples of pride, less extravagance in church building, and more convenient houses of worship. Meeting-houses three-fourths steeple and one-fourth edifice would disappear. Churches would be built without debt. Steeples and mortgages would alike be left off, and economy, instead of extravagance, would be the rule. We think that in the end the taxation of church property would be a blessing to the churches. Only churches able to pay taxes would dare be extravagant. Architects would study economy, and not pile on the useless ornamentation to increase their own percentage. Building committees would not build to ornament the town, and bring up real estate, but to convenience the people. We should have less imposing church edifices, but we should have more free from debt. The gain would be great, and there would be a return to former simplicity. A church costing $250.000 is worth no more as a place of worship than one costing but $60,000. The interest of $190,000 saved would build one country meeting-house every year. Now and then the erection of a costly church may be justified, but general taxation would make the number of such very small. There is something in a very costly church edifice that is subversive of the best ideas of spiritual worship."

Such reasons are good in themselves, but the one argument that should move Christians to demand the taxation of church property is the fact that its exemption is unjust because it is a denial of the pricelessly valuable principle of religious liberty and refuses equal civil justice to all citizens of the republic.

Exemption of Church Property from Taxation is Dangerous.

The granting of special privileges to ecclesiastical corporations is in the highest degree dangerous. Tending inevitably to the building up of monopolies, it affects the well-being of every citizen who is engaged in a legitimate vocation. It enables the churches to hold in every city and town the most desirable properties, compelling the taxpayers to bear the public burdens of which the theological societies are relieved by the unjust discrimination of the state. Business and industry are handicapped; genteel pauperism is encouraged and rewarded; great wealth, without accompanying responsibility, makes the priesthood arrogant, dictatorial, and corrupt; such a large proportion of the property of the country being exempt from taxation, the real supporters of the state are crippled in resources and oftentimes impoverished by the excessively high rate of taxation imposed on them, and the mendicancy created or aggravated by this state of affairs gives to the ecclesiastical monopolists a new opportunity to exploit the people on the plea that their great "charities" alone keep multitudes from starvation and crime. No matter what the condition of the people, these favored societies continue to accumulate wealth. All that they get is clear gain. After the absorption of the earnings of labor has reached a certain ratio of increase men of energy and foresight, who object to being defrauded in the name of "religion" or "morality" or "charity," make up their minds that they will escape while they can from a city or state or country which denies them equal opportunities. They put their property upon the market. A certain proportion of it goes into the hands of the church societies and is added to the non-tax-paying list, and thus the evil of unequal taxation is augmented, and the march toward confiscation and revolution is hastened. Right here in America we find to-day a startling illustration of the truth of these observations. The province of Quebec, in the dominion of Canada, is in a state of torpor. The congestion of wealth in the hands of the church has checked the flow of the currents of healthful industrial life, paralyzed enterprise, and demoralized alike the spoilers and the despoiled. Animadverting upon the evil effects of church exemption in Montreal, the Franco-Americain Citoyen says:

"The city of Montreal is feeling more the burden of taxation. The largest owners of real estate are Protestant. Their taxes increase in the ratio of the increase of Roman Catholic institutions. Property which paid taxes is being sold to religious orders, and thus becomes exempt from taxes, and the burden of the city expenditure falls upon the few.

"There is a strong feeling among the liberal Roman Catholics that all these rich institutions should pay taxes. We allow an intelligent Catholic gentleman to express his views on the question of clerical greed. He says an answer to the questions which follow is called for:

"'What and where are the religious institutions which sheltered the people in the day of need? It will do much to dispel misunderstandings. That there are several institutions which claim to be purely charitable, everybody admits. But what the public would like to learn are facts and figures showing the extent of charitable work performed, the number of people sheltered, and the amount of money expended. As matters now stand the public sees only an enormous growth of the wealth of religious institutions in the land and buildings. Where does all the money come from? And why, with the existence of so much poverty and want in the community, is the physical, mental, and moral destitution of the people allowed to continue and increase, while magnificent, massive buildings for religious and alleged charitable purposes are crowning the finest and most valuable sites in the city? Both wisdom and justice are in the making of these inquiries, for may we not see in this abnormal development of the wealth of religious institutions a likeness to the process which took place in England at one time, and in France, Italy, Spain, and South Germany? In these countries, as every student of history knows, corporated religious wealth became so great that it crippled their resources, paralyzed industry, and produced political and social ambitions, which were only alleviated by wholesale confiscation. History is said to repeat itself, and this province seems in a fair way of reaching a condition analogous to that of France before the Revolution, when the church owned one-fifth of the soil or to that of Italy before the advent of Garibaldi, when one-half the population was composed of monks, nuns, beggars, and brigands.'"

A Mr. Sutton, of Montreal, writing in the London Times, avers:

"Outside Montreal the whole province is desolate. The rule of the priest has made Quebec a city of the dead. Its streets echo only to the tread of the monks and nuns. The English have left Quebec. They are leaving Montreal. All cannot go, because capital is invested.

. . . . . .

"The country is covered with convents, monasteries, and cathedrals. There are over one hundred million dollars' worth of exempted ecclesiastical property. The English have to pay for these exemptions by increased taxation. There is no power in the province which dare propose their abolition."

How a church which has grown rich through exemption from taxation, direct appropriations from the public treasury, donations of land, and by means of other special privileges, will continue to bleed the people in divers ways is shown by a third writer, who puts on record these facts about this same province of Quebec:

"The exemptions from taxes on clerical account are a heavy load. There are municipalities where fifty per cent of the whole assessed value is exempt, others where the value of the property exempt actually exceeds that of the property taxed. Then the people have to support the religious orders. · · · From a hasty examination of the statistical information furnished by the official hand book, 'Le Canada Ecclesiastique,' for 1893, I should say that their aggregate membership exceeds 4,500. The most numerous order is the Congregation of Notre Dame, which has 750 members in Quebec and 70 in Ontario. There is no law by which the people can be compelled to maintain this army; all the same it is by their sweat and toil that it is maintained. · · · Adding the 'religious' to the secular or parish clergy, and counting the clerical professors and teachers in colleges, there are over 6.590 ecclesiastical persons to be supported by 1,300,000 Roman Catholics, or one ecclesiastic for every two hundred men, women, and children. At this rate, Ontario, with a population exceeding two millions, would require 10.000 ecclesiastics, and the United States a host of 300,000.

"I have not space to speak of the miscellaneous ways and means reported to provide food, clothing, buildings, and traveling expenses, etc., for our 'religious'—the bazars, concerts, collections, house to house begging, etc. The provincial treasury is drawn on to provide for a great many of them. Directly or indirectly, the church, with her orders, handles a very considerable portion of the yearly expenditure. Here are some of the larger items (public accounts, year ending June 30, 1893) which she controls in whole or in part:

Education	$371.000
Reformatories and prisons	88 000
Asylums	300 000
Charities	56,000
	$815.000

I might say that the church spends, or oversees the spending of one-third of the whole provincial revenues, less the subsidies from Ottawa. Last year the gross revenues were $5,600,000, but of this $1,150,000 was money borrowed from the bankrupt treasury, and $1,300.000 Dominion subsidies. The revenue, excluding the subsidies and loans, was $3,150,000, and I am quite sure the church had to do, one way or another, with $200,000 more than the sum of the foregoing items.

"From the nun who comes to your door for a quarter toward the erection or maintenance of her convent, from the parish priest who collects his tithes and sacramental dues, from the bland Sulpician, with $50.000,000 in the coffers of his order, who insists on this piece of land or the other being exempt from taxation—from these and others like them, to the ecclesiasticals who put their hands into the provincial treasury for the immense sums enumerated, the church and her vast revenue is flattening out the dumb toilers of this province. · · · In no other country of the modern world has clericalism such a carcase for its vultures."

Think of a city where one-half of the assessed value of property is exempt from taxation! And yet it is only a question of time in any country which exempts church property when an approximately as deplorable condition of affairs will be brought into existence. It cannot, probably, become quite as bad as that in the United States or in other countries where the people are fairly intelligent; the breaking-point would be reached before half of the taxable property had been ruled off the assessors' books. But it would be foolish and criminal as well to permit matters to drift from bad to worse, as they are now doing, until the breaking-point is reached. If we are wise we shall remove the cause at once, instead of allowing it to operate unchecked until we or our successors are compelled to deal as best may be done in the stress and storm of political or military conflict with the baleful effects, as other nations have had to do because they did not awake in time. It is better to prevent injustice than to wait until we are compelled in self-defense to destroy the institutions which it has fattened at the expense of the weak. We can learn some very salutary lessons from the experience of other countries. If we are alive to our own interests we shall be content to be taught by observation of the mistakes and sufferings of the people of France, Italy, Germany, Mexico, and the South American republics. We ought not to need any burning of our own fingers to warn us to keep them out of the fire.

The people of France were, before the Revolution, robbed by three powers—the monarchy, the nobility, the priesthood. The royal family and its favorites and the nobles and the church were rich and well-fed; the people were poor and starving. Justice and liberty had been denied by and in the name of this trinity. The storm came, and in it these privileged classes were shattered and scattered; they reaped what they had sown. Innocent individuals suffered with the guilty. What else could have been expected? The people had agonized for centuries; that they felt, but their masters had never taught them what justice was; they did not themselves know. How then should the untaught peasants practice it when at last they, in the drunken joy of vengeance, felt their power as they saw beneath their feet the representatives of the orders that had robbed them of food and clothing and shelter and love? The wonder is not that the Revolution was stained with innocent blood but that it was stained with so little, comparatively. Injustice is never barren; she never fails to bring forth her myriad-numbered broods of hideous and cruel children. Had the French people not been robbed of property and liberty there would have been no revolution. The church was one of their robbers; she took from them the fruit of toil and she held it exempt from the exactions of the state, while the people were compelled to pay, out of what was left to them, all that nobles and king demanded. There inevitably came an hour of revendication and vengeance, for human nature will not bear everything without an attempt to better its condition. The French Revolution was an object-lesson to the world. Will the United States heed it? This is a republic and there are but two serious obstacles in its way to the goal of liberty, justice, honor, and glory. These are the ignorance of a part of the people and the indifference of another part. The masses must think and act or no republic can long remain free. When a nation permits the church to hold vast properties exempt from taxation it invites the awakening that came to France.

In Italy the church had in her possession at the beginning of the seventh decade of the present century property valued, by a low estimate, at $400,000,000. The people were poor, the necessities of the government urgent, and in 1867 the state took for her use $116,000,000 of this wealth; and it was also deemed necessary to abolish the convents and monasteries. Whether this latter act was in harmony with the principle of religious liberty or in violation thereof the scope of this inquiry does not require us to ask; it is sufficient to say that the closing of the Catholic institutions named was done by a Catholic government acting for a people overwhelmingly Catholic.

Mexico passed through a long and fiercely-waged "war of reform," which began in the early fifties and cannot be said to have ended until the overthrow of Maximilian and the permanent establishment of the republic under the presidency of Benito Juarez. Formerly the church owned nearly one-third of the soil of Mexico. By the laws of reform of 1856 and 1859 the landed property of the church was nationalized, convents abolished, and all superfluous church buildings sold or converted to public use. When Napoleon III. landed troops in Mexico and made the Archduke Maximilian titular emperor the church threw all its influence into the scales in behalf of the inchoate empire, and had Napoleon succeeded in his designs the confiscated estates of the church would have been restored to her and the struggles and sacrifices of Jaurez and his compatriots would have been in vain, all their splendid work for justice, education, and peace rendered nugatory. When a church owns one-third of the real estate of any country, a conflict is inevitable if the people have left in them a spark of the spirit of independence. To prevent "wars of reform" it is absolutely essential that the law of justice shall rule; the relation of the church to the state must be that of complete independence, and this is impossible so long as the people are taxed, directly or indirectly, to support the church.

The rapid augmentation of church values which President Grant foresaw, and which he computed upon the basis of the ratios of increase from 1850 to 1860 and from 1860 to 1870, should be a cause of most serious apprehension to all who are familiar with the history of the similar growth of ecclesiastical wealth in other countries. All values were greatly lessened by the forces which produced the panic of 1873 and the subsequent readjustment of prices and wages, but the relative increase of church property values has not been affected thereby. The present comparative numbers of church organizations and church buildings are such that, in the absence of a great financial crash, the construction of edifices must continue for many years to greatly exceed the increase of population. Rev. W. A. Spencer, D.D., who is corresponding secretary of the Methodist Church Extension Society, writes in the Independent that in 1893 his society aided in the building of six hundred and eighty-three churches. So much for one denomination. Mr. Spencer quotes figures from the United States census of 1890 to show that the Roman Catholics have fifteen hundred more organizations than churches; the Presbyterians need a thousand more churches; the Baptists could use three thousand six hundred more buildings than they have; the Congregationalists show a shortage of one hundred and more edifices; the Methodist Church South needs two thousand four hundred additional buildings, and the Northern Methodists could use three thousand more. And so on through the denominations. In some of the older states these sects have a surplus of meeting-places, but their necessities in the South and West are greater even than the above figures indicate, for those figures represent only the net difference between the number of organizations and the number of churches.

All of this is additional evidence that the ratio of increase of church wealth will be greater in the future than it has been in the past. The different denominations must not only strive to keep up with the increase of church population, but must provide shelter for that which they now have which has as yet no buildings of its own. Should church property continue to be untaxed until 1950 the conditions of many parts of this country will bear a striking resemblance to that of Italy and Mexico prior to the confiscation of the wealth of the church in those countries.

I cannot, perhaps, more fittingly bring to a close my argument under this head than by reproducing a well-known passage in a message which President Grant sent to Congress in 1875:

"In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States which paid no tax, municipal or state, amounted to $87,000,000. In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1870 it was $354,483,587. In 1900, without a check, it is safe to say, this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to, without taxation, may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally."

Sunday Work and Damages for Injury.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of February 17th Brother Putnam asks for a certain authority on a point of law as expounded by the learned judges in Massachusetts in relation to whether an engineer on a railroad, if injured while working on Sunday, or the Lord's Day, as they call it there, could recover damages or not. I send you a little "brief" on the subject, which you will please hand Brother Putnam. If he ever gets in need of any such thing again let us know through THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I, for one, will try to help him out.

An engineer of a locomotiv engin, who is performing the ordinary duties of his employment on Sunday, is laboring in violation of the public statutes, chapter 98, section 2, unless the running of the train on which he is employed is a work of necessity or charity; and if it is not, and, while so laboring, he is injured by a defect in the railroad track, his illegal act necessarily contributes to cause his injury, and precludes his maintaining an action therefor. (Read vs. Boston & Albany R. R. Co., 140 Mass. 199.)

Under the authority of Day vs. Highland street Railway, 135 Mass. 113, the ruling that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover was correct, unless the running of the railroad freight train on which he was employed was a work of necessity or charity. The statute of 1884, chapter 37, was passed after the injury complained of, and does not apply to this action. (Read vs. R. R. Co., supra, citing Bucher vs. Fitchburg R. R., 131 Mass. 156.)

Section I. of the statute of 1884, chapter 37, which took effect on Feb. 27, 1884, is as follows: "The provisions of chapter 98 of the public statutes relating to the observance of the Lord's Day shall not constitute a defense to an action for a tort or injury suffered by a person on that day." Read, in the above cited case, was injured on Sunday, October 8, 1882.

So Massachusetts took one step forward in 1884.

THE Woman's Press Club of New York announces a lecture by Helen H. Gardener. It is for the benefit of the Club and will be given at the Holland House, Fifth avenue and Thirtieth street, on Friday, April 6th, at 3 P.M. Subject: "Woman as an Annex." Tickets, one dollar. No reserved seats. Tickets may be obtained from members of the Club, or from the treasurer, F. T. Low, Low's Exchange, 949 Broadway.

Campaign Notes.

It is now understood that the House Judiciary Committee will report the Christian amendment unfavorably. For this reason the committee do not think it necessary to giv a hearing to the opposition. This is manifestly unfair, for the supporters of the amendment hav not only had an opportunity to present their arguments to the committee, but to hav them printed as a government document, and certainly the arguments upon the other side should hav the same advantage. This shows how much prejudice we hav to work against. Even the New York Sun, which is opposed to the amendment, is also opposed to the Freethinkers having any say before the committee. The impression seems to be that some dreadful things will be said, that blasphemous words will be indulged in, etc., which is an entirely unnecessary fear, for Freethinkers hav plenty of solid argument and do not need to resort to polemical methods. However, I understand that the arguments of the Christian party were presented in such a manner that they tended against the amendment rather than for it, and convinced the wavering that this theological tampering with the Constitution was a bad policy.

The only chance now for the amendment is to secure a consideration of it in Committee of the Whole, if its friends think there is sentiment enough in its favor. I suppose they are determined to perish in the last ditch, and will use every chance to bring the matter to vote. On this point a legal gentleman of northern Michigan offers some valuable suggestions to these "reformers." It must be admitted that if there ever is a union of church and state in this country, the Roman Catholic church will hav all the advantage. I print what my friend sends me:

TO THE FRIENDS OF CHURCH UNION WITH THE STATE: In working to secure recognition of God and Christ in the Constitution and laws of the United States and make this a Christian nation, with written Christian Constitution and Christian laws, teaching and enforcing Christian morality, does not your earnest desire for a universal brotherhood blind your eyes to the fact that a movement of this kind—to make the state enforce religious beliefs—could verv well hav originated with the Roman Catholic church, to enable it to decide which and what is the Christian religion and to establish for itself again temporal power?

Do you forget the lessons of history? With a union of church and state vour persons and propertv will not be safe, small sects will be wiped out, and all will be at the mercy of the strongest religious organization at any time ruling the nation.

Hav you become tired of freedom of speech and of the press that you would make it thus a dream of the past? Religious and political freedom were the watchwords of the fathers of our country. Think you they were fools?

Know you not that you put a premium on hypocrisy when you make the nation's prisons and militia the censors of opinion? The weak, the venal, and those of worldly policy will never be martyrs. They will wreck your Christian state with lies for private gain.

Shall we hav religious instead of political parties, with occasional civil wars? You can make men hypocritical, but never good, bv law.

If you believe in a free country and wish to be protected in your opinions, religious or political, work and vote against any sort of union of church with the state. Elect no person to a convention or a legislature who is in favor of such union unless you belong to the Roman Catholic church.

The District Sunday bill has been sent to the district directors for their approval before being acted upon by committee, and it will be some weeks before action is taken. We shall watch the matter.

What is wanted at the present stage of affairs is to pour documents and petitions upon Congress. I find that Congressmen do read our literature after all, and are getting posted in our principles. This is one good result of the agitation. The pertinacious efforts of the Christians to disseminate their dogmas has aroused an interest in the other side of the question, and our documents are now more read than they ever were before.

I desire, therefore, to publish at the earliest possible moment "The Rights of Man" and distribute it widely. People are interested in this question as never before, and now is the time for education. We must prepare material for future work. If one thinks the contest is ended, he is greatly mistaken. There are established abuses which we must correct. We must not only keep God out of the Constitution, but we must abolish the chaplaincies, which is a practical recognition of God in the state. I hope that friends will not fail to see the necessity of continued effort. We must not only repel new attacks, but overthrow ancient wrongs. I hope the generous contributions to our treasury will not cease because we hav won one victory. There are many more yet to win before we are a free people.

S. P. PUTNAM.

A SECULAR UNION was organized at Forest Grove, Or., on Sunday, March 11th; D. C. Stewart, president; Dr. Hines, secretary; Mrs. Dilley, treasurer. Regular meetings will be held Sunday evenings; Sunday school, 3 P.M.

Observations.

Congressman Breckinridge, the defendant in Miss Pollard's breach-of-promis suit, admits his meretricious relations with the plaintiff previous to the death of his wife and afterwards, but he declines to face the responsibility and pleads that the woman led him astray. This shows that the religious habit is strong in Kentucky's senior Congressman, and I am surprised that some of the leaders in his church should suggest his expulsion from membership. As David, save in the matter of Mrs. Uriah, was a man after God's own kidney, so is Breckinridge save in the matter of Miss Pollard and perhaps a miscellaneous lot of other obscure females; and even here his conduct is strictly ministerial and his defense orthodox, for it will be recalled that Adam accused the woman of being first in the transgression. If these things are not sufficient to establish Colonel Breckinridge's orthodoxy, let his enemies remember that he is a pillar of the Young Men's Christian Association and its silver-tonguedest orator; that he is the author of the Breckinridge Sunday bill; that he championed the closing of the World's fair on Sunday; and that he was counsel for the prosecution in the Briggs heresy trial. There is not a man of more unmitigated piety on the two hemispheres. Still, if the Presbyterians are determined to inquire into his conduct and expel or whitewash him I suppose there is no way to stop them. It might be suggested, though, in the interests of thoroughness, as also of poetic justice, that Professor Briggs be retained to conduct the investigation.

The pending suit at the capital has an important bearing on current issues; for if distinguished religious lights continue on their present line of conduct, the state will soon be able to demand a divorce from the church on the statutory grounds.

For the first time in several years I violated the civil, economic, and physiological Sabbath last Sunday by attending the Catholic church, selecting for that purpose the institution on Twelfth street dedicated to St. Ann. I found the stage set for an altar scene, lighted at various points, and suggesting a Chinese theater modified by a night parade of Barnum & Bailey's circus. I havn't seen anything so oriental and barbaric since I left San Francisco. The candles, the priests and acolytes in celestial vestments and headgear; bells and bric-a-brac, and above all the odor of burning joss-sticks; and even the music, which, like that of the prohibited people, lacks what we call tune—all these take the returned Californian back to the coast faster than a telegraph message goes. In cheerfulness, however, the Confucian surpasses the Catholic. I never saw a really solemn Chinaman at any public doings, but the worshiper at St. Ann's has a countenance like a sad mule, which he crosses frequently with the hasty and deft motion of a monkey washing his face. If anyone should inquire the cause of his depression, I doubt that he could giv a lucid reply.

If in the course of a discussion with some other person I had incidentally remarked that whenever the Prophet of Gowanus alluded, even casually, to the subject under consideration, angels and seraphs shed tears that tubs could not contain, I should not expect him to regard such reference to himself as a question going to the "root of his belief." Neither should I look for extended argument in reply. Nevertheless Mr. E. O. Roscoe, having averred that under certain specified circumstances the gods regard myself as a "spectacle," now complains that instead of proffering argument, I abandon myself to verse. Then, unmindful of the proverb, the sagacity of which has been proved by frequent application, that we should sometimes answer the wise according to his wisdom, he alleges evasion and hints at a paucity of sand. Now a man in a ditch is not afraid of bullets, and a prophet conscious that his brain is impervious to thought may invite discussion with safety; but, to introduce a figure of speech, having "sat into the game," I may as well call his bluff.

It is a peculiarity of the Prophet's literary method that he invariably devotes a moiety of his paper to sarcastic exordium; and it was in his half-column prelude to a column article in reply to Mr. Peck that he made the before-mentioned allusion to "the man with the badge-pin." I do not know whether Mr. Peck's belief is the same as mine or not, but the questions which the Prophet has asked him are not unanswerable from my point of view. Here is the first one:

Let an inquirer ask M. Peck if the fact that the making of fractional currency—such as cents, nickels, and dimes—is a governmental monopoly, taken in conjunction with the fact that one can realize on such assets at the various sub-treasuries in any other kind of curreney one desires, does not sufficiently account for their passing at their face value.

If what Mr. Roscoe says about cents, nickels, and dimes passing at their face value and being exchangeable for any other kind of currency were strictly accurate as regards all points in the United States, then I should say that these accidents might hav something to do with the case; but since there is a large section of the country where cents do not pass at their face value, their circulation in other quarters must be otherwise explained. And since, furthermore, their exchangeability does not insure them currency where they are not wanted we are not warranted in concluding that it is their exchangeability which causes them to circulate in localities where trade could not be carried on without them.

Anticipating an affirmativ response, the inquirer proceeds:

If the answer be affirmativ, we may ask if the certainty of ultimate redemption in intrinsic value, when required, of any of the currency, fractional or otherwise, is not a large factor in establishing the confidence of the people generally in money which has no intrinsic value, or which has very much less than its face value in intrinsic worth.

Now that is a very fair question. I hav to admit that in finance, as in religion, redemption is a large factor, albeit a strong delusion. According to a late statement of Secretary Carlisle there was in the United States treasury sufficient gold to redeem about $1 out of each $8 of the government's promises to pay. The figures were: Gold, $100,000,000; promises to pay, $813,000,000 (Century Magazine for January, 1894, p. 473); so that each individual dollar rests on a basis of one and one quarter dimes in gold. The eighty-seven and one-half cents is confidence. I would allege that under the free coinage of silver the intrinsic value of the standard silver dollar would be equal to the intrinsic value of the gold dollar; and that were gold demonetized the gold in the dollar would not be worth as much as it is now. But even if the silver dollar has an intrinsic value of but fifty-three cents, I conceive that fifty-three cents' worth of silver is as well calculated to inspire confidence as a dollar relying for its soundness on gold to the value of only twelve and one-half cents, saying nothing about the fact that Wall street could in twenty-four hours withdraw every ounce of gold in the treasury and leave the nation's promises with no intrinsic value whatever behind them. Question No. 3 is this:

Does Mr. Peck believe that fractional currency would continue to circulate at its nominal value if the mints were open to the free coinage of cents, nickels, and dimes at ten cents' worth of copper, twenty cents' worth of nickel, and fifty-three cents worth of silver to the coined dollar?

As for the dollar, I think it would. It is said to hav so circulated previous to its demonetization. The free coinage of nickel and copper is not proposed. These metals are substitutes for silver and gold, the coinage of which into denominations of one and five cents is impracticable. Money is a good deal like a flag: a piece of bunting is not in itself an object of distinguished regard, but print the stars and stripes on it and it at once commands respect. Its importance does not arise from the material which enters into its construction, but from the fact that the credit of the country is pledged to its support. This has been found quite sufficient to gain it "world-wide acceptance" and recognition.

I ought to remind the Prophet that presenting itself at sub-treasuries and getting redeemed is not the highest use of money. Its province is to discharge debt and to facilitate exchange of commodities. Here intrinsic value is not considered, and a dollar passes for one hundred cents because the receiver knows that the next man will take it at that rate. The dollar based on a dime and a quarter of gold and 87.50 cents of confidence is worth a dollar. If it were not, the Prophet may wager his reputation that nobody would accept it in exchange for one hundred cents' worth of gold. I might go further and aver that it is not the redeemable quality of this country's currency that makes it exchangeable for gold; but it is so exchangeable because the party having the gold knows that the currency has the same debt-paying power as his coin. It is the old question of the egg and the hen; but with a dime of egg and a dollar of hen in evidence, I am inclined to think the latter exerts the greater influence. The Prophet still swears by the original egg, despite the influence which time and change has had upon that product. Mr. Roscoe cannot jar loose from the doctrin of redemption. He seems to regard a dollar as a sort of religious pilgrim with a sub-treasury for its holy grail or the tomb of its redeemer, and with no other object but to get there and end its existence. Its usefulness in the ways of industry is quite overlooked.

In conclusion let us inquire if, "when a man pays a debt with a paper dollar, the dollar is redeemed," it is not equally true that Mr. Peck's note would be redeemed by the operation of the holder paying it out to some one in exchange for some commodity to the value of its face? Would Mr. Peck despair of ever seeing his note again in consequence of such a transaction, or would he bear in mind the date of its maturity and hustle round for funds to meet it, when it met him, as it surely would?

This inquiry, I believe, brings the discussion up to date so far as argument is concerned, which Mr. Roscoe says is what he wants. It will be seen that Mr. Peck's opponent has placed him in the position of the government confronted with one of its notes. I imagin that under the circumstances Mr. Peck would say: "The expenses of this government necessitate the collection of taxes from citizens. Your share of the public burden is this amount; the note is for that amount. Take your receipt and your change—another note—and go to the devil." The note has done its work; it is "redeemed;" and as Mr. Roscoe stopped asking questions when he got to this point, I do not feel called upon to follow it any further.

Geo. E. Macdonald.—If you theorize as widely of the mark on financial questions as you do on the author of the "What We See column," you will never become a Sherman, nor even a silver-bill Blair.

You are mistaken, Ernest, if you think that simple denial will acquit you of the "What We See" column. Also if you think I want to be a silver-bill Blair. Everybody is onto you in the column aforesaid, and it is no secret that my ambition is to be a Sunday-bill Bland.

Dr. Caleb S. Weeks has published a pamphlet giving his "Experience in Hypocrisy." The doctor concludes that hypocrisy, or the form of deceit so termed, is commendable—a state of mind he has perhaps reached from his experience at the Liberal Club, where a philosophical audience habitually listens to several perpetual motion orators, and hypocritically refrains from throwing anything at them.

While the plaintiff in the breach of promis suit now trying in Washington was giving her testimony, women were excluded from the court. This leads a Chicago lady to inquire whether, when the defendant goes on the stand, all the men will be shut out. And yet there are persons who contend that women are not gifted with a sense of humor!

Last week I made favorable mention of the initial number of Charles C. Moore's revived Blue Grass Blade, a paper published at Lexington, Ky. The second number is now at hand, and I must revise the opinion which I formed upon reading the first. I now think that Moore is destitute of any honest purpose or principle. He discloses himself as simply a coarse, ribald old man, who, having no purpose in life, has adopted prohibition in the place of it. I should imagin that every conscientious Prohibitionist in Lexington, after reading the Blue Grass Blade, would feel like opening a saloon and getting full just to avoid suspicion that he is identified with Moore's detestable method of propaganda. Mohammed Charles Chilton Moore! read the leading editorial in this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Perpend its benevolent precepts, apply them to intemperance instead of its twin evil religion, and then be ashamed of yourself as you ought.

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

Churchly Purpose and Performance.

A school mistress in Garth, England, held an annual prize distribution, followed by a dance, and on prayer-meeting evening. Whereupon Rev. Mr. Nicholson said with all possible gravity: "The great God and judge of all will bring all such godless ones, rich and poor, to an account, and assign them their portion in hell forever." What a God and what a preacher! ∴∴ The Ohio penitentiary is "ont" two chaplains. When the McKinley administration came in there was a chaplain appointed who was soon found guilty of "ministerial conduct" and dismissed, and lately his successor had to go for appropriating the funds of the convicts to his own use. ∴∴ President Blanchard, of Wheaton college, when in attendance at the district meeting of the American Sabbath Union at Des Moines three years ago, said, in advocating the boycotting of the Sunday paper, "Why, I would rather swear for half an hour than to buy a Sunday newspaper for a minute."

SABBATARIAN AGGRESSIONS.

"It is settled law in Michigan that a Sunday contract is a prohibited transaction, the illegality of which forbids it being made a sale by mere delivery after." (Chief Justice Hooker, Michigan Supreme Court, Aspell vs. Hosbein, 57 N. W. Rep. 27). Date of opinion, December 8, 1893. ∴∴ Topeka, Kan., is in the agony of a Sunday closing campaign. The Ministerial Union—of course—wants cigar stores, butcher shops, and news stands shut up on the preachers' workday, and a number of young men hav declared a boycott on the churches belonging to the Union. Let them also blacklist every councilman voting for the ordinance, and see that he gets neither votes nor business patronage in the future. ∴∴ Morris Sichenaeun, of 220 Bowery, New York, was arrested for selling a shoestring to a detectiv on Sunday. For want of a bondsman he was held in the Tombs for trial. Such damnable outrages against the weak are enough "to stir a fever in the blood of age, and make an infant's sinews strong as steel." And now comes Dr. Westbrook, and tells us that we are foolish to think we can put a stop to this besotted criminality—we "might as well attempt to paddle a canoe up Niagara Falls or to sweep back the ocean with a broom." We shall see; perhaps the doctor reckons without his host. ∴∴ In Wisconsin "Protestant pastors and Catholic priests are uniting for the better legal observance of Sunday." It is not the first time mother and daughter hav combined forces to strangle liberty. ∴∴ The Evangelical Alliance of St. Louis called a mass meeting to form a law and order league to secure the enforcement of the Sunday law. ∴∴ The chief of police of Chatham, Mich., has notified newsdealers that Sunday papers must not be sold or delivered in that town. How long will the people of the United States submit to this thing? What would be said by Christians if the Freethinkers were in the majority in Chatham and should forbid services in the churches? That would be no greater outrage than the suppression of the sale of Sunday papers. The citizen has precisely the same right to buy and read a Sunday paper that he has to listen to a Sunday sermon. ∴∴ Chicago preachers hav requested the dailies not to print the notices of their church services in the Sunday morning papers. It is not stated that they hav objected to reports of their sermons appearing in the Monday morning papers, although most of the work on these papers is done on Sunday. The preacher objects to the Sunday paper, not because it involves Sunday work, but because it is a rival to the pulpit. ∴∴ The mayor of La Crosse, Wis., has started a paper in the interest of Sunday laws. ∴∴ A bill has been introduced in the Chicago city council to close all places of business on Sunday. ∴∴ A strong Sunday observance union has been formed at Oshkosh, Wis. ∴∴ At a Sunday law meeting in Philadelphia Justice Williams, of the State Supreme Court, spoke in favor of the Sunday inquisition. ∴∴ Rev. E. M. Milligan, of Steubenville, O., has made information "against a newsdealer, his assistant and three newsboys, two butchers, and a cigar dealer, for violating the Sunday law," reports the Christian Statesman. Turn about is fair play; let the people who hav been wronged lay an information against Milligan's church; his work is neither necessary nor charitable. Besides, he is a pest in the community, for he meddles with and despoils people engaged in legitimate business.

Lectures and Meetings.

FRANKLIN STEINER'S lecture engagements are as follows:

April 1, Alliance, O.	April 10, New Ross, Ind.
" 3-6, Eaton, O.	" 13, 14, Toledo, O.
" 8, Dayton, O.	" 15, Detroit, Mich.
" 8, Cincinnati, O.	" 21,22, Mt. Pleasant, Ia.
" 9, Petersburg, Ind.	" 24, Eddyville, Ia.

JOHN R. CHARLESWORTH has arranged for two debates on his return trip to the East. The first will be with Rev. J. J. Porter, a cousin of Sam Jones, at Franklin, Ill., four nights. The other will be with Prof. J. S. Van Cleve at Cincinnati, and will take place on Sunday, April 29th. A third is under consideration, and if arrangments are consummated Mr. Charlesworth will enter the lists with Dr. J. M. Hall, of the Baptist Gleaner, during the early part of May, at Golden Pond, Ky. Six nights. Mr. Charlesworth lecture engagements are as follows:

April 19, 20, Humboldt, Ia.	April 27, 28, Delphos, O.
" 23-26, Franklin, Ill.

FRANKLIN STEINER lectured to an appreciativ audience last Sunday before the Newark Liberal League.

"MORAL PHILOSOPHY" was the subject of Henry Rowley at the Brooklyn Philosophical Association Sunday.

J. E. REMSBURG has returned from his eastern tour, having delivered sixty lectures in fifty-five days. He will lecture next in Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri.

ON Friday, March 30th, at the Manhattan Liberal Club, lecture by Mr. Carl Snyder, "How New York Might be Made a Model City."

HENRY ROWLEY will deliver two lectures in Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Liberal League, on Sunday, April 8, 1894.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for March:

THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome.

THE Manhattan Liberal Club meets every Friday evening in German Masonic Hall, 220 East 15th street, New York, at 8 o'clock. Program for March.

THE Milwaukee Liberal Club meets at Severance Hall, 421 Milwaukee street, every Sunday at 7.30 P.M.

Letters of Friends.

Straight from the Shoulder.

ALLISON, IA., March 13, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find money order for $1.50, due you on THE TRUTH SEEKER. Your paper is getting better every day. It's hitting them right on the head. Yours truly, JOHN SWANCARA.

His Name in the Book of Life.

BLAKESLEE, O., Feb. 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $17.60 to pay for the gallant old TRUTH SEEKER another year for myself and five new ones, who hav had the hoodwink removed and now want to aid in clearing the mental sky of gods, ghosts, and devils.

This entitles me to S. P. Putnam's big book, in which you may enroll my name if this reaches you in time.

D. W. ISENHART.

Not "Holy," but True and Instructiv.

PORTAGE, WIS., March 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed order for $5 for renewal of your paper and for Thomas Paine's entire works. I cannot do without THE TRUTH SEEKER; need it for reference every day. Thomas Paine's works are my Bible, not "holy," but instructiv and true. I hav tried hard to get you some new subscribers and am in hopes to get some yet, as I hav a promis. Hoping for your continued success, I remain yours for the truth, MRS. S. RACE.

A Friend Wanted.

OAKFIELD, ME., March 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Would not some of your subscribers like to pay for my TRUTH SEEKER? I am unable to pay for it myself. The person who promised to pay for the paper has met with bad luck. I hav a wife and four children to support by working out by the day; besides, I hav been used up with the rheumatism all winter. Should you publish this I hope some one will respond that we may not lose the honest old TRUTH SEEKER.

Yours truly, J. E. LASKEY.

Grandpa's Bible.

SEATTLE, WASH., March 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find order for $6.50, for which please send me what one of my grandchildren, five years old, calls grandpa's Bible, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and one copy of Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought."

Money matters hav tightened considerably since your brother left this part of the Lord's vinyard, or I should hav remitted sooner and also hav sent a mite for the good of the cause, but may do so later on.

What in Place of Christianity?

VERA CRUZ, MO., Feb. 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 24th you say a correspondent wants to know what he should put in the place of the Christian religion to make himself and the world better. Now, if your correspondent will take a suggestion from me I would like to say: Just substitute reality for superstitious notions; honesty for hypocrisy; truth for falsehood; goodness for condemnation and persecution; love for malicious prejudice; common sense for dervish-like howling; peace for church jangles and quarrels; school-teachers for priests and preachers; schools for churches; honest industry for running to church and spending time and money for the support of an institution that has been a brake to the wheels of progress; has caused church fanatics to torture and murder better men than themselvs; caused more strife, war, and bloodshed, than all other institutions combined, and has, in all times past, been the greatest curse the world has known. If he does this he will probably find a glowing light of truth that will astonish the world and put laurels on his brow that will be worth more than gold.

Fraternally yours, S. B. DAVIS.

Another for Putnam's Work in Washington.

BELMONT, N. Y., March 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: We hav taken your valuable paper for many years, and welcome it weekly as a gift of worth and wisdom. We look forward to the time of its arrival with interest, as we know we will hav a feast of intelligence and wisdom. Please find inclosed $5 in payment of our subscription, Saladin's "God and His Book," and the remainder to go toward Putnam's expenses while in Washington. I hope soon to send an order for several books.

Yours for Freethought,

JOHN LEILOUS.

Would Make a Better and Greater People.

CRETE, NEB., Feb. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Send to each of the four names inclosed your paper for one year and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," and to me "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," as per your club offer.

Inclosed find draft for $28. I do not wish to make any money, but take books, as the last three are for myself. I will do all I can for you or the cause of Freethought; whatever my commission may be I will take out in books. I will hav another order for you before a great while. Would like to circulate thousands of your books about here, as I think it would make the people more Liberal in their views—a better and a greater people.

FRED THIBODEAU.

On the Eve of Great Events.

ATLANTA, GA., March 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find order for $3, renewing subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year. You hav been patient with me, and I am obliged to you. For several months I hav been absent from the city a great deal, going in and out on business.

I consider it to be the bounden duty of every Liberal to giv support to one—or more—of the exponents of Freethought. Of these THE TRUTH SEEKER easily keeps the lead. To my mind we are on the eve of great events—political and religious—religion the warring element. Wishing you a full measure of success during these hard times, and hoping for a wider spread of the principles of Freethought, Yours, etc., THOMAS M. TAYLOR.

God Is in the Laws, Anyway.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., March 10, E.M. 294.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5, for which you will please giv credit.

I hav been circulating petitions versus the God-in-the-Constitution amendment, and hav got something over fifty names, but hav had to talk a great deal to obtain them; people seem to think that God is already recognized in that document. I think that all Freethinkers should join the Federation so that they can be counted, and then we would hav votes enough to secure attention for our side of the question in the Congressional committee-room; in other words, we would become respectable enough to be noticed and our votes would then be worked for. I will circulate a list and get names for the Federation the next thing I do after getting through with the petition. Wishing the Truth Seeker family a grand future, I am

Yours fraternally, G. G. BECK.

Has Distanced the Wolf.

GLEN'S FERRY, IDA., March 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $1, for which send "Bible Contradictions," "Religion a Lie, a Disease, a Curse," "Crimes of Preachers," Miss Wixon's "Woman."

I am not unmindful of my duty to the Freethought heroes. I will this month send you something to help sustain S. P. Putnam at Washington, and pay for one copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." The wolf has been close upon my heels, but with pluck, nerve, temperance, diligence, and manly, honest purposes, guided by the experience of successful men, leaving God, Christ, and Bible out of the question, and obeying and relying upon the laws of Idaho for help and protection, I hav distanced the hungry, devouring glutton, and if I liv will soon hav a special fund to devote to the Freethought cause and to the destruction of error and her advocates. JAMES STOUT.

From an Earnest Worker.

MCCALLUM, WASH., March 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav found one man who said just as soon as he could get some money he would hav THE TRUTH SEEKER and some books. I showed him my "Pictorial Text-Book." He was delighted; he had never seen anything of the kind before. When I came home I sent him some of my old TRUTH SEEKERS and one Boston Investigator. Ever since I became a Liberal I hav been working all I could for the cause and to increase the subscription list of your journal. I never was a professing Christian, but believed the Bible was the word of God until four years ago, when a neighbor gave us a TRUTH SEEKER. We read it two or three times; the more we read it the better we liked it; so I subscribed for it, and hav since sent for quite a number of books, all of which hav given us general satisfaction. Our books are nearly always away from home, but hope they are doing good work.

Inclosed you will find $4 for renewal of subscription, and for pamphlets.

Yours fraternally, J. N. FRIEND.

From One Who Stands Alone.

ASHLAND, OR., Feb. 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $3, for which send "Life: A Prose Poem," a Lithograph of R. G. Ingersoll, and apply the balance on my subscription. I would like to be able to send you more now but cannot; hope to soon. I must hav Colonel Ingersoll's picture, for I do think he is the greatest, grandest man living. He has said so many beautiful things in behalf of women; has tried to make them see what slaves they hav been to the church.

I often think what a fool I was when I thought everything the preacher said was true, and did not doubt the divinity of the Bible. I wonder why I was so blind to reason. I hav more Liberal books than anybody else here, but not half that I want and hope to hav sometime. I want Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," but cannot get it yet. I hav tried, and will keep on trying for new subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but hav failed, for the cry is "hard times." I suppose you hav heard that before.

Ashland has the name of having many Freethinkers. I don't think that half of them take a Freethought paper. I don't see how they can be so indifferent to a cause that needs the support of every one that our liberties may be protected. I hav to fight my own battles, as I am the only woman in Ashland who calls herself a Liberal, and is not afraid to hav people know just what she is. MRS. A. DE PEATT.

Fasting and Stealing.

March 18, 1894.

Can God's immortal feel envious of mankind—
They in full effulgence, man still groping blind?
If in state celestial they do drink and eat
Of dainties more luscious than mortal tongues greet;
If forever they liv on elixir of life,
And with famin and death hav no ken nor strife;
Why need they begrudge us our daily repast,
And a priesthood appoint to order a fast?
Does fasting make lighter the heavenly rod?
Or does what is saved go to fatten a God?
Is the faster relieved, on ending each fast,
As is the bad boy when the tingle is past?
Or in Lent a martyr—with no meat supply—
While stuffing down fishes, eggs, puddings, and pie?
Full of joy is the faster when the church-bell strikes
The right to end fast and to eat all one likes;
But what kind of a god is pleased at the sight
Of one fasting all day and gorging all night?
When a Christian is sick, his stomach all clogged,
His bowels inflated, and his mind befogged,
No question but fasting will do him more good
Than cramming down windy or heavy-built food.
But when he is choking on biblical lies,
To vomit is better than fastings and sighs.

In the old Canaan times some angels were known
To take meals on earth when the wife was alone;
A lamb on the altar would bring a God down
To partake of the roast when done to a brown;
And while the tribe engaged in fasting and prayer,
The God and the priest took the whole of the fare.
When the God was displeased, he was soothed with a lamb;
But it took, when furious, a bullock or ram.
No share now has a God, e'en though he complain;
The priest takes the whole in an ancient God's name.

Stealing and fasting, through centuries of time,
Hav been joined together in many a clime.
Without tithes the fasting would be of no use;
'Tis for dimes that the priest makes for sinners excuse.
Should the priest stop stealing, and let spooks alone,
No need then of fasting for sins to atone.
Now, when that will happen no prophet can tell;
But on earth 'twould be heaven, perhaps in heaven a hell. L. G. REED.

How and Where Did He Die?

SALESVILLE, MONT., March 11, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of March 3d there appears a letter over the signature of A. D. Swan, the last paragraph of which reads as follows:

Should there be any among your readers who hav lost relations and who think it impossible for any medium, an entire stranger to them, to tell them of their deceased friends—telling their names, when they died, how long they were sick, and many other things connected with their lives impossible for strangers to know, and who care to take the trouble and expense to test the subject, and find that what I hav written is untrue—I will forfeit $50, on condition that they giv me the same amount, should they find what I hav said true.

Now, I am not after Mr. Swan's $50; neither am I after his scalp; but I should esteem it a favor beyond my ability to ever adequately recompense, and for which I should amply reward him, if he will, through mediumistic or any other power, tell me where my brother died. I do not know myself, but hav always been anxious to find out. From the candid and earnest manner in which Mr Swan wrote his entire letter I do not construe his $50 offer as made with a mercenary intent, but rather to emphasize his own deep convictions, with a view to more forcibly impressing them on others. If correct in this view of the case, viz., that it is with an earnest desire on his part to convince others of the truth of Spiritualism that he makes the offer, I take it for granted that he will agree with me that he cannot adopt a better method to that end than to giv the proof the notoriety of newspaper publication.

I would inquire of Mr. Swan if this particular case of mine and all similar ones do not come within the prescribed rules of spirit manifestation? That is, wherein would there be any violation of conditions in giving the information I desire? Could not my brother's spirit speak through a medium and tell where it parted with the flesh and the fact be communicated to me? Where would there be any violation of conditions in this? Am I not fair?

Some years ago we got an inkling of his death through newspapers, but could never learn where it occurred. I advertised in several papers, THE TRUTH SEEKER among them, but no tidings came. Therefore, when I read Mr. Swan's communication, replete as it is with so much confidence, it occurred to my mind that it was a fine opportunity to make a public and practical test of the claims of Spiritualism, and at the same time, if within the realms of probability, acquire the information desired. That Mr. Swan may be assured that this communication is not written in a spirit of banter, merely to puzzle or perplex, I giv the full name of my brother—Henley Lybrook Burk. The rest of the details I leave to mediumistic power.

THOMAS BURK.

An Investigator's Questions.

LA SALLE, ILL., March 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just finished reading John Peck's questions to Mr. Perry. Now will Mr. Peck explain some things in regard to Freethinkers? I hav been reading THE TRUTH SEEKER only a short time. It has been loaned to me by one of your subscribers. I was raised in the church, which does not meet my demands. I hav also investigated and given Spiritualism my full consideration with like results. Every creed has its foundation. What is yours? You say you "take nothing on trust;" neither do I. I cannot believe what I am told, but must see and feel demonstration to hav faith; am free of prejudices, but am so constituted that I cannot believe what I do not understand. My reason requires proof. So far as I know myself, I am of uncertain faith in the unseen and unknown. You convey the idea that death ends all. Can you tell me why you believe so? What is your evidence? What is the faith of a Freethinker? Samuel P. Putnam says: "Freethought is fundamentally a method and not a result." What does he mean by that? Do not consider these remarks impertinent, but made in all sincerity by an honest investigator, and by giving this your consideration the light may fall upon others as well as myself. At least you will confer a favor upon a thinker, but perhaps not a Freethinker.

INVESTIGATOR.

[You inquire what is meant by the statement, "Freethought is fundamentally a method and not a result."

By method we mean a way of finding ont the truth. By result we mean an intellectual conclusion. When we say that Freethought is first of all a method, we mean that it insists that there is only one way of finding out the truth; namely, by the observation of facts, and reasoning from those facts. Without facts no truth is ascertainable. All the knowledge that the human mind now possesses has come through experience; that is, by the contact of the human mind by means of the senses with facts. The imagination, the feeling, the reason, simply as such, can giv no particle of truth. Thinking merely as thinking givs no facts. Reason without facts givs no knowledge. Reason with facts givs all the knowledge that there is.

What, then, is the "creed" of Freethought? It is that you shall observe all the facts that you can, and come to your own conclusions, and accept no authority but the truth of facts, as you see that truth with your reason. You are not to accept the authority of Bible or church or priest. You are not to "trust to your feeling." You are not to believe a thing because you want to believe it, but you are to believe it on the evidence of facts, interpreted by your own reason, and on no other evidence.

This is the method of Freethought. It is the scientific method, and is the only method of discovering truth. It will be easily seen that by this method it is impossible to demonstrate the existence of God, for we never can hav facts enough to demonstrate his existence. We can go beyond facts and imagin God exists, but if we stick to facts, we can prove only that which is finite. If by God is meant "infinit and eternal goodness," facts demonstrate that there is no such being; for there are evil facts in the universe, and these could not exist if there were an "infinit and eternal goodness."

The question of immortality is simply to be decided by facts; not by one's wishes. What are the facts? You must decide for yourself.

We do not say that "death ends all." Death ends nothing; it simply changes. There is no such thing as annihilation. But universal human experience shows that the action of the mind is dependent upon the action of the body, that without body there is no mind. Mind might exist without body, but we hav never had any experience of this and therefore cannot prove it. As to what is beyond death we can only hope. Human experience, however, demonstrates this: If we liv our best to-day, we shall thus be prepared to liv our best to-morrow; and so if we do our best in this world we shall be prepared for any destiny hereafter. Experience also shows that if we strive to make others happy we shall be happy ourselvs; and if death is the close of our self-consciousness, we can leave behind the memory of good deeds. So with every other question; consult facts. Don't shut your eyes and dream; don't seek for "faith;" don't ask people for their belief, but for the facts they hav. Read books for facts; read history for facts; get all the facts you can; illuminate them with your your own reason; relate them with one another—that is, see how one fact depends upon another fact or produces another fact, etc. Theology says, "Don't mind facts, believe as the Bible and the church tell you to believe." Freethought says, "Don't mind the Bible or the church, but believe according to facts, as you see them and understand them with the activity of your own brain."—SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.]

Reasoning From the Basis of Fact.

CRAYON, O., Mar. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Having traveled fifty miles to Delphos to hear a series of lectures by the invincible Samuel P. Putnam, and returning filled unutterably full of the Holy Ghost of Freethought, I feel like giving a few thoughts in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER on the subjects of the God idea, the Bible, and the existence of the soul.

It occurs to me from my experience in life that heaven, hell, and the Bible God exist in the minds of the people only. When we see the convulsions of nature sweeping destruction before them and its blind forces destroying life on every hand we perceive no evidences of a benevolent God. When we look upon undeserving people smothered almost with the richest blessings of life and beside them honest people writhing out a miserable existence in want, disease, and starvation, we see no evidences of a just God. When we read in the Bible of the many instances (Judges i, 19) where God could not accomplish his plans on account of the superior powers of men, we see no evidences of an infinit God. When we pursue the studies of geology, philosophy, chemistry, etc., and acquire a true conception of the eternity of matter and force, we see no evidences of a God at all. I do not assert that I know there is no God, no supreme power or principle, but from the evidence already given in, the jury of my conscience decides for the negativ. Since the finite cannot grasp the infinit, and the natural cannot comprehend the supernatural, we are shut off from the conception of a deity, should there be one. There may be myriads of gods in the domain of the unknowable, but so far as human conception is concerned there is no foundation upon which to build such a theory.

To believe that there must hav been a God to bring the universe into existence is to approach the climax of absurdity. This would imply then that before the creation there was nothing in existence, the immensity of space a vacuum. Then, before there was matter and force, how could a God "speak worlds into existence?" Science declares that "from nothing nothing comes." To assume that matter always existed in some form is the most plausible theory and yet borders on the mysterious; but to assert that at one time it was made of nothing would be ridiculous. We will be compelled to assume that the universe always existed when we cannot contrive how it could be made from nothing. Thousands of people honestly believe in the existence of a God because their ignorance prevents them from accounting for the phenomena of nature. The more a person knows, the less God does. Where knowledge ends God steps in and begins work. The more we know the less use we hav for a God. What is not known is God; what is known is science. As science advances God is correspondingly going out of business.

In olden times the people believed God to be a real, tangible, human-shaped being; but now he is a "spirit without body, parts, or passions," which is an excellent definition for nothing. They could eat, drink, and play hide-and-seek with him (Ex. xxxiii, 18–23) in the days of Moses, but now the astronomer with his powerful telescope cannot discover him or his abiding-place.

As for the Bible, it condemns itself, with its countless contradictions, obscenities, and mistakes. It being the outgrowth of the human brain, I treat it the same as any other human production. If I am to believe that the Bible is a divine revelation its authenticity must be proven, and that has never been done. When history tells me of so many bibles and religions, and all in contention and at variance with each other, I am driven to the thought that there is a fault somewhere, and to place myself in a safe and satisfactory attitude I reject them all.

The existence of the soul is another vague mystery that clouds my comprehension when I try to grasp it. What is it? where is it? when did it come into existence? and what becomes of it when dissolution takes place? are questions that constantly arise in my mind. As I understand the theory, this immortal principle, the soul, is seated in the brain. That which causes our identity and our mental existence is the organism of the brain. If we are to exist after death and be sensitiv to pleasure or pain, we must hav a conscious intelligence upon which it can act. We all believe that it requires an organized brain to produce intelligence or thought. Then, when this brain is dissolved or disorganized at death, where is this thought? In short, where is the soul? I believe physiology will bear me out in asserting that there is no thought without a brain. Before I was born I did not think—I had no soul, neither had I a brain; and after death will I not be in precisely the same condition? Strike a man a blow on the head and he immediately ceases to think, that is, he ceases to exist mentally. Suppose the blow is sufficient to cause death, when and how would he regain consciousness in another world? If I cannot carry an organized material brain with me into eternity, my existence ends at death—my mental existence. The atoms of my material existence are eternal and will never cease to be. Formation and dissolution, and not creation and annihilation, are the immutable processes of the economy of nature.

It now remains to be seen if science will not vindicate my propositions. From what I know of it I think it will. Apply science to this whole superstitious fabric and it falls to the ground a helpless myth.

Forever yours for Freethought,

ELMER MILLER.

The Prophet's Rejoinder.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., March 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: It is not necessary to contest the claim made by the man with the badge-pin, in regard to who discovered "the prophet of Gowanus," although such a contest would be entirely successful. The main point is, the "prophet" is here. Our George's version of what he wrote me "years ago" is, however, not in strict accordance with the fact; but let it pass uncorrected, since the allusion to that correspondence is evidently only a peg on which to hang a bargain-counter sarcasm, built on the model of the New York Sun's spiteful remark about General Hancock during the Garfield campaign. I find, upon reference to the correspondence mentioned, that our George also writes a very readable hand, and, as an orthographist, leaves nothing to be desired. He generously forgivs me for criticising his "poetry," and also overlooks the fact that I called his stanzas verses, for which I thank him, the more so as he has added to my knowledge by showing that the use of "verse" is improper in the connection in which I used it. But, then, I never claimed that one could learn nothing from George; the claim was that he had made a mistake in writing (even casually) about money, except, perhaps, to delinquent subscribers, or other debtor's, suggesting the necessity, for various reasons, of prompt remittance. He informs me that I should be charitable toward his "poetry," because his lines were suggested by my remarks, and, therefore, the inspiration being of something less than the potency necessary to screw him up to concert pitch, he could not be expected to produce first-chop poetry. In reply, let me ask him if the absence of infernal machines to his address—by express—is not the most conclusiv proof that I believed he had done the best he could under the circumstances. I am a little surprised, however, upon mature reflection over his accusation that I wrote "into the paper," at my leniency. George continues, in the breezy way we know so well, and are so entirely and completely "mashed on," by affecting to disbelieve that the questions in regard to finance, in the letter which caused him to mount his Pegasus without his spurs, go "to the root" of any belief he holds. If they do not, he must believe in sound money; that is to say, in money with an intrinsic basis of world-wide acceptance. If that is his position, I owe him an apology and hasten to tender it. But it seems impossible to believe that such is the case, for the reason that a simple statement of the fact would hav settled the controversy, and at the same time hav saved some damage to his reputation as a poet. It seems more reasonable to conclude that it was easier for him to pay attention to my allusion to the light in which the gods regarded him than to demonstrate that the spectacle he presented to men of sound financial knowledge lacked all inducements to mirth. If George had held financial ideas that were susceptible of being logically defended, he would not hav sought to escape from the discussion through such a small aperture as that of pretending to think he had met a proposition that was not intelligible. He might, for instance, hav answered the questions contained in the letter in question, which Mr. Peck seems to be still deliberating, or else has given up. "The prophet's suggestion about studying the finance question" reminds our poet of the picture which represents a priest as picking the pocket of a peasant while he attracts his attention to an apparition of the Virgin. It would hav been in order to show the reason for believing that studying the financial question is equivalent to offering convenient opportunity for picking the student's pocket. Such study is warmly recommended on the ground that it will tend to remove the danger of having one's pocket rifled by unstable money; if the claim be not true, discussion will show its falsity; but George refuses to argue. Perhaps he thinks he is arguing when he says: "If I were a politician · · · desirous of filching from the people, I would advise them to bury their faces in some elaborate treatis on money." If I were a politician, there might be some room for this remark, although even then it would seem necessary to show how general study of a subject, popular ignorance in regard to which enables politicians to rob the people, could possibly facilitate the robbery. Or again, he may fancy he is arguing when he remarks: "Of course we all know that it is bad form for anybody except a prophet or professor of political economy to object to robbery." Where does he get this universal opinion from? Who ever denied the right of any man whatsoever to object to robbery? Sensible men demand that those who charge that any given system results in robbery shall prove their case before obtaining a verdict. Macdonald refuses to testify, which prompts the belief that he fears the inevitable cross-examination. So, also, he may really think it argument when he remarks: "Likewise none but a doctor of divinity is qualified to doubt that Jonah swallowed the whale." Doctors of divinity are either of the class that examins but one side of theology, or else are numbered with those who falsely pretend to believe what they hav every reason to think is false, through unwillingness to giv up a "soft snap." Rather an unfortunate analogy, it seems to me. If upholders of religion attempted to palm off such misfit analogies as these I hav noticed, on our George, I fancy he would with difficulty overcome his desire to project any handy missil, violently, in their direction; and he would be entirely excusable if the desire proved invincible. Better buy that barrel of kerosene, George.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight.
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

My Right to Think.

My right to think! My right to think!
'Tis greater than the crowns of kings!
And to my heart, by love-wrought link,
Unceasing joy it ever brings.

My right to think none shall dispute,
Nor put a fetter on my brain,
Whose treasury is an institute,
Which yieldeth sweet and precious grain.

My right to think—and thought must be
As free as is the upper air,
Thus shall I always plainly see
Straight out, where all is clear and fair.

Freethought, thou art a jewel rare!
Amid all gems the brightest still!
Thine is the gracious, golden share,
Which neither man nor time can kill.

A Freethought Sunday-School.

EDITOR CHILDREN'S CORNER: I stop right in the midst of my work and take up my pen for a little talk with you. I come encroaching on your valuable time, but you are such a whole-souled, pure, good woman, I feel I hav the privilege.

My dear friend, I come begging this morning, a phrase which I presume that you are familiar with. I want help, advice, and counsel. I look around me from day to day and see the great number of little children, especially boys, loitering and loafing about the streets and frequenting places which can but poison their young hearts and bring them on to manhood with nothing to care for, no helping, trusting hand to guide them, no loving, tender friend to rely on or help them over the rough places in life. Some of them are too poor and present too abject an appearance to hope for any kind word, look, or deed to raise them from their present state.

A great many of them do not believe in the teachings of the Christian Sabbath school and would not go there for fear of being made fun of by those who are able to dress better and own their own Bible and carry plenty of missionary money. And therefore a great many children with bright intellect, a warm and trusting nature, a tender and willing heart, are allowed to drift in all the worst existing elements of this world. It is not because they do not want to be something or somebody, but because they do not know themselvs; they do not know what important place they are expected to occupy in this great world's panorama.

I may not hav the faculty to express my meaning clearly and I dare say I go "entirely around Robin Hood's barn to get in the back door;" be it so. What I want to do is to organize a Freethought Sunday-school. A school where all who wish to come are welcome. Where all can hav a voice, to express each young idea, giv each child credit for its worth, teach each member to fully understand who he is or by using the words of Alexander Pope,

"To know then thyself,
The greatest study of mankind is man."

The Christians hav said if you take their religion from them what do you giv in its place. Of course a matured mind needs nothing in the place of superstition. You take nothing from them; they giv nothing; they are brought merely to see superstition in another light; hav dropped the dark veil of superstition from their eyes and come face to face with truth and mind to mind with the scientist, the philosopher, the astronomer, and many others who hav dropped the same and become enlightened men and women. But for children, what do we giv them? There are many poor mothers who do not believe, but whom the Christians hav befriended, and who, without giving the matter any serious consideration, let their children go into the Sunday-schools, or go adrift on the city streets, because there are many other things to look after and attend to. Whatever kind of men and women these children make, who shares the disgrace or glory—who is fully to blame? Not the children, not wholly the Christians, but partly the parents and partly us. Yes, we talk a great deal about Freethought advance, reform, etc., but very few of us act. As Mrs. Marden said, "More work and less preaching would be a nobler creed." This holds good for us as well as Christians.

What I want to do is to act—help others and feel at liberty to ask for help. I would like to organize a school here in Jamestown, but know not just how to begin and come to you for some good suggestions, as I know your mind possesses them.

My idea was to hav a library; of course, small at first, but consisting of good scientific books in different branches—medicin, etc. It would not, I think, be very difficult to find subjects for the older children, but what could be done with the wee children. I should want to make the meeting interesting as well as instructiv. There is a little magazine published in New York entitled, Our Little Ones, which contains delightful reading for children. It has none of "Pansy's" writings in it, nor any of her style. My dear friend, please offer me some suggestions. My thoughts travel with my ambitions and both travel too rapidly for my body to keep pace. I hope you will not deem me too ambitious, for I think we should Be up and doing,

With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

That is, do all we can; labor all we can and wait patiently for our work to develop and bloom in beauty. "Procrastination is death." While we procrastinate the little tender hearts are being initiated into the Christian Sunday-schools, and even if they are again redeemed and brought to see the light, their feelings hav been trifled with, their faith in humanity and all that is real has been shaken. Why not begin now and instill the truth into their young hearts in the beginning? Please do not think I mean nothing is being done, for I know a great many willing workers are making bold strides toward the enlightenment of mankind, but many of us are sitting with folded hands waiting for something to "turn up."

My dear friend, I hope you will hav patience with this very lengthy letter. I did not intend to write so much when I began, but hope you will answer and express your mind.

Sincerely in Freethought,
MRS. EMMA CUSHMAN.
Jamestown, N. Y., Feb. 26, 1894.

[Gather the children in. Teach them of the composition of their bodies and of the world in which they liv. Begin with simplest things—a leaf of a tree, a flower, a pebble, mosses, the new grass, a piece of coal—anything, almost, is of interest. There's a world of information and beauty at our very feet. There is no nobler calling than to impart knowledge. Dear, earnest heart, all our sympathy is with you in your aspirations. Thanks for your good opinion, which we would always like to merit, but do not know as we ought to print such praise.—ED. C. C.]

Across the Continent.

The Editor of the Corner expects to make a visit to California, leaving Boston the first week of April. Her address in California will be the Russ House, San Francisco, where she will be happy to meet her friends who may desire to call upon her. She will keep the Corner informed of her whereabouts and trips in that wonderland of bloom and beauty.

Chats With Correspondents.

F. LINDBURG.—Thanks for interesting clippings from New Orleans Picayune. Always pleased with similar items.

IDA J.—Then we were misinformed. It was told for a fact.

CHARLES STANDING.—Be honest, because it is right so to be. Thus you are happier and everyone also who may be affected by your conduct.

ALBERT OLLINGER.—No need to trouble about dying. You can die when you hav nothing else to do.

F. H. H.—Thanks for specimen of quartz containing gold. Under the microscope it shows that it is like the sender, genuin, pure gold.

J. E. LARMER.—Excuse delay in answering your letter. We hav very little time for correspondence.

ELLA VINTON.—Yes, our new book, "Right Living," is suitable for the purpose you name. The Truth Seeker Company fills orders.

B. THORNDIKE.—No reason whatever for discouragement. If you cannot succeed in one thing turn your hand to another. Your health and strength are the finest capital in the world.

W. C. S.—Shall write soon. Hav been very busy.

Correspondence.

HANNA, IND., Feb. 7, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Would you please tell me if there is a Liberal monthly or weekly magazine for children? Is the "Children's Hour" a magazine or book? and oblige a Liberal mother.

LIZZIE W. CHAMBERS.

[The editor of the Corner ofteu receives inquiries similar to the above. It is a pity that she is always obliged to answer in the negativ. How long must this be so? "The Story Hour" is a book by the editor of this Corner.]

SALEM, NEB., Feb. 4, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Children's Corner. My papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for thirteen years. I like to read the Corner very much. I go to school in Salem. I liv on a farm about a mile and a half southwest of Salem. We hav had a nice winter without much snow. I seldom go to church. There are five churches in Salem. Salem is a small town. I am fourteen years old. Hoping to see this in print I will close. Your Liberal friend,

NELLIE BRINEGAT.

[The school will do Nellie more good than the church.—ED. C. C.]

SCRANTON, PA., Feb. 6, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I saw my other letter printed I thought I would write again. This is the coldest day we hav had here in a long time. I hav a cold and can not go out—at least, I do not want to go out. I read the Children's Corner all through last week and I thought the letters and pieces were very nice. I would think Mr. Heston would get tired of making those funny pictures so much. As my letter is getting so long I will close. Wishing success to the Corner and THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain,

Your Liberal friend,
MARY LILY MERRITT.

[We are glad you like the Corner. Mr. Heston is fond of his work and he cannot grow weary in a good cause.—ED. C. C.]

RIGHT LIVING. By Susan H. Wixon. Author of "All in a Lifetime." "The Story Hour," "Apples of Gold," "Woman: Four Centuries of Progress," and other works. Chicago: Charles H. Kerr & Co. Cloth. Price, $1.

Of course the Editor of the Children's Corner needs no introduction to the readers of this paper. All know about her and all like her. Whenever she gets out a new book they want to see it and enjoy it. And after they hav read it they loan it to their friends and neighbors. This loaning may seem to involve a hardship to the publisher, but it does so only apparently, for it makes more people acquainted with the author and so when she publishes her next work it has a larger sale than its predecessors. Books that their owners do not like well enough to wish to hav their delights shared by others never attain a very extended circulation. A book that appeals so to one's thoughts and emotions that she involuntarily exclaims, "Oh, I wish mother, or sister, or Harry could read this," has a future of popularity. This is the explanation of the reception of Miss Wixon's productions.

"Right Living" is an attractiv book. The printer and book-binder hav conspired to please the people. This is important. No matter how excellent the contents, a book lacks much in charm and influence which does not appear in a tasty dress. Beauty and vigor are in the highest sense compatible. Charles H. Kerr & Co. understand this.

Miss Wixon believes in right living in the here and now and for the sake of the future generations on this earth. Morals which come from the skies are useless in a world of realities. The ethics of supernaturalism invariably subordinate the human to the divine when there is any conflict between the two, as there generally is. Yes, as there always is, for any concept which does not hav its origin in men's interrelations or which introduces extraneous elements pertaining to supposed supermundane wishes or needs necessarily demands the sacrifice of the earthly to the heavenly. Our author holds with Herbert Spencer that "as with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not."

On the first page of this paper the business manager has stated the contents of the book here under review, so it is not necessary to particularize. But it is not easy to resist the temptation to reproduce some of its gems. In her introduction Miss Wixon says: "It is a law of nature to do naught that imposes torture upon ourselvs, because we shrink from suffering. Therefore we shun those acts that hold the sting of pain and regret. . . .

"We are constantly to try to know more of human nature, the appetites and passions, the laws of heredity, the affections, forces, environment and influences that make human beings what they are. As we learn more of the guiding and controling powers of life, we will be better fitted to guide, restrain, and direct others. It is our duty to be ready to show by actual demonstration, by example, the nobler way and the reasons for walking therein. Many would be better men and better women, better children, if they only knew how to be. Such a showing and inducing of all to adopt the way that is free from pain, vexation, and despair, is true moral culture."

We may add that all would be better if they knew how to be, for all seek happiness, and all stumble more or less through ignorance.

Again, in the introduction the author wisely observes:

"The circulation of the blood is swifter where a function of the brain is in action. We should aim to bring the circulation to that function of the mental system whose use is followed by health and pleasure. A faculty not stirred or aroused to action becomes dormant, and, after awhile, inactiv. Lead one to think of what he actually is, and then make him realize, if possible, all that he ought to be and may become. Point him toward the unfoldment of the great possibilities and capabilities of his highest nature."

Here are a few short passages culled from various chapters:

"Our concern is to improve, strengthen and quicken the tendrils of right action; in every way possible, to bring to light the best forces of physical, moral, mental, and intellectual being."

"Good health is one of the requisits of good morals. A healthy body can sustain a healthy mind better than a feeble and diseased body; therefore we should scrupulously observe hygienic principles, be true to all laws of health, and jealously guard every avenue through which might enter disease and infirmity. We should be careful as to the food we eat, and the fluid we drink, that no harmful thing may enter the system, and thus work injury to the physical, mental, or moral nature, each being dependent and inter-dependent upon the other."

"In living a moral life, should one be actuated by hope of reward or fear of punishment? No. Such reasons are both degrading and insulting. Animals are moral, but they cannot tell why. Man should be moral because it has been proven that morality is better for health, happiness, and comfort."

Are not "health, happiness, and comfort" rewards of a moral life, and their opposits the punishments of an immoral life? Certainly. Then we are actuated by "hope of reward" and "fear of punishment." Probably what Miss Wixon means is that we are not to be actuated by hope or fear of human rewards and punishments, but only by the knowledge of nature's consequences which are, however, practically rewards and punishments. And are we not often induced to choose the better way through hope of the rewarding approbation of those we love? Or because of our desire to escape their censure?

"To be ignorant is to take a back seat. It is to be pushed aside while learning and intelligence grasp the prizes of life."

"Ignorance is in all directions. In lacking of skillful fingers, quickened thought to apply ways and means to make a living, in wastefulness of energies, in failure to find the channels of progress."

With this illustration of the imperativ need of a knowledge of the common facts of our every-day life we must leave "Right Living" in the hands of our subscribers for their closer examination:

"Nature commands that we seek to know, and knowing, to apply knowledge. Of what avail is knowledge unless applied? In a book called 'Homestead Highways,' the author tells of a graduate of a distinguished New England college, who could tell all about Latin and Greek roots, and who later was graduated from a well-known theological seminary with some degree of honor, who, when his health failed, because of over-study, went back to the old homestead among the hills and took up the plow. This man, though he knew so much of dead languages, so much of higher mathematics and of philosophy, so much of all that was choice in literature, went about his farm with his cart-axles groaning and squeaking so loudly that his neighbors might hear them a half-mile away. One day he started out with his oxen and cart for the adjacent grist-mill. He had not gone far when he met a neighbor.

"'Wal, deacon, 'pears like them air wheels o' yourn air purty dry. I've hearn 'em squeakin' more this year 'en ever. Why don't yer grease 'em, deacon? Sounds kinder lon'som' like t' hear 'em whinin' up an' daown hill, an' 'cross th' fields.'

"'Why, sir, it never occurred to me, but I think it might be a very excellent plan. I believe father did something of the kind when I was a boy.'

"So, the author says, it was with everything about the deacon's farm. The things wore out, went to ruin quickly because the deacon had no knowledge of the ordinary workings of every-day life. He could not decipher nature's cost-mark."

EUTHANASIA; THE ÆSTHETICS OF SUICIDE. By Baron Harden Hickey. New York: Published by the Truth Seeker Company for the Author. 16mo. Price, 50 cents.

Baron Hickey says in the preface to this unique volume that there is always one consolation in life, and that is, that truth will eventually triumph, and he is sure that when she does come into her own suicide will be looked upon by philosopher and moralist in a light far different from that in which it is viewed to-day. For the enlightenment of the Christian the author observes that if the legend on which that religion was founded is true, Jesus "would occupy a very prominent place in the annals of suicide," and to induce reasonable cogitation in the minds of other people he gives the pith of what has been written on this subject by Zeno, Epictetus, Aurelius, Diogenes, Seneca, Cicero, Marcus Aurelius, Montaigne, Rousseau, Donne, Hume, Gibbon, Montesquieu, and others. The book is composed of four hundred numbered sections, preceded and followed by the symbols of dissolution and interspersed with illustrations of self-inflicted death. The author's style causes us to wonder regarding his nationality, for it is forcible and yet peculiar, and he seems to hav determined to add some expressiv words to the English language. The illustrations hav not made us anxious to hasten the shuffling off of the mortal coil, for his dead do not appear to be enjoying themselvs.

RELIGION NOT HISTORY.

Examination of the Morals and History of the New Testament.

By PROF. F. W. NEWMAN. Price 25 cents.

Just Out.—25 Cents.—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria, the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets, Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town, the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portuguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America. Materials of Human History

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History. Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love.

Price reduced from $1.75 to $1.00. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

PROSE-POEMS AND SELECTIONS.
Fifth edition, enlarged and revised. A handsome quarto, containing 383 pages. This is, beyond question, the cheapest and most elegant volume in Liberal literature. Its mechanical finish is worthy of its intrinsic excellence. No expense has been spared to make it the thing of beauty it is. The type is large and clear, the paper heavy, highly calendered, and richly tinted, the presswork faultless, and the binding as perfect as the best materials and skill can make it.
As to the contents, it is enough to say that they include all of the choicest utterances of the greatest writer on the topics treated that has ever lived.
Those who have not the good fortune to own all of Mr. Ingersoll's published works, will have in this book of selections many bright samples of his lofty thought, his matchless eloquence, his wonderful imagery, and his epigrammatic and poetic power. The collection includes all of the "Tributes" that have become famous in literature—notably those to his brother E. C. Ingersoll, Lincoln, Grant, Beecher, Conkling, Courtlandt M. Palmer, Mary Fiske, Elizur Wright: his peerless monographs on "The Vision of War," Love, Liberty, Art and Morality, Science, Nature, The Imagination, Decoration Day Oration, What is Poetry, Music of Wagner, Origin and Destiny, "Leaves of Grass," and on the great heroes of intellectual Liberty. Besides these are innumerable gems taken here and there from the orations, speeches, arguments, toasts, lectures, letters, interviews, and day by day conversations of the author.
The book is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac-simile, has been prepared especially for it. In the more elegant styles of binding it is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.
PRICES.—In cloth, beveled boards, gilt edges, $2.50; in half morocco, gilt edges, $5; in half calf, mottled edges, library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible finish, $9.

Any of the above sent to any address, by express, prepaid, or mail, post free, on receipt of price. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Not for Parsons.

A CERTAIN Chinaman once commenced attending church, and all went well so far as the services were concerned, but he could not understand the passing of the contribution plate. The first Sunday it was passed to him he looked at it and inquired, "Wha' fo?" "For the Lord," said the steward. This satisfied John, but the next Sunday, the plate being again stopped in front of him, he again asked, "Wha' fo?" Once more he was told the money was for the Lord. Thereupon a look of perplexity came over his face, which found expression in the inquiry: "Lord all time bloke?"

JONAS HANWAY, the philanthropist, having once advertised for a coachman, he had a great number of applications. One of them he approved of, and told him, if his character answered, he would take him on the terms which they had agreed upon. "But," said he, "as I am rather a particular man, it may be proper to inform you that every evening, after the business of the stable is done, I shall expect you to come to my house for a quarter of an hour to attend family prayers. To this, I suppose you can hav no objection." "Why, as to that, sir, replied the man, "I does not see much to say against it, but I hope you will consider it in my wages."—London Freethinker.

THE WORRIES OF GODSHIP.

The scene is a cloudscape in God's private "grounds,"
Away either up, down, or sideways,
Where light sends its beams round the vaporous mounds
In curves, so that nothing should hide rays.

His Godship is seen on his nebulous couch,
With mien beatific reclining;
His volume plethoric would, seemingly, vouch
He'd too well, not wisely, been dining.

But truth bids us say that the cause of his girth
Was not gormandizing erratic;
The cause of it was, as we're taught from our birth,
The union that's styled "hypostatic"—
Far closer than three-storied unions on earth,
'Twixt ground-floor and first-floor and attic.

The bulk of a triad should never excite
A unit to mirth or derision;
Remember that three in God's person unite—
Addition's more fat than division.

"The Hebrew cosmogonist, silly old lob!"
Said God, with his phiz all congested,
"Declares that I finished the cosmical job
In six days, and afterward rested!

"What, rested! The work of creation was rest
Compared with my subsequent doings!
My work for the Hebrews alone was no jest,
The smashings, and hackings, and hewings!"

"We wish we were deaf, or that Christians were dumb,"
Said two of the Trinity scowling;
"No rest can we get from the noises that come From the simpletons praying and howling!"

"Our Son, when on earth, rashly bound us to grant
The things, without any restrictions,
That faith might request; but, confound him! we can't—
They always involve contradictions!

"For instance: from Peckham, last night, did arrive
Conflicting petitions for weather—
For wet and for dry; well, we cannot contrive
To grant all their wishes together!

"The millions of opposit prayers that we get
From farmers, cits, ryots, and fellahs!
The sunshine for this one, for that one the wet—
From makers of blinds and umbrellas;

"The ice-man petitions for sunshine and heat;
Another wants showers and sloshes,
And prays for the weather that soddens the feet
And quickens his trade in galoshes!

A pious man asked us, in name of our Son,
To giv to an imbecile lad nous;
The man was a Christian—a genuin one!—
And ended his days in a madhouse.

"Confound them! we'll leave the whole lot to their fate,
Or send them our friend on the 'pale 'oss'—
Here! run and tell Peter to lock the front gate,
And let us play quoits with our halos!"

—G. L. MACKENZIE, London Freethinker.

With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knee.

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt beveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

DOCTORS are the statistics of vice.—Katherine Mabley Corbett.

THERE is very little difference between religious and political fury.—Galveston News.

GENEROSITY is the sole, though clumsy, apology for wealth.—Kate Field's Washington.

WE cannot judge a man's life by a falser rule than his death.—Chamfort and Vauvenargues.

THE ministers say: "God will pay those who work in his vinyard." They themselvs prefer the cash.—Fritänkaren.

THE order and energy of the universe I hold to be inherent, and not imposed from without; the expression of fixed laws, and not of arbitrary will, exercised by what Carlyle would call an almighty clockmaker.—John Tyndall.

I DO not see how it is possible for a man to die worth millions of dollars in a city full of pain, where every day he sees the withered hand of want, and the white lips of famin! I do not see how he can do it, any more than he could keep a pile of lumber on the shore, where hundreds of thousands were drowning in the sea.—Ingersoll.

FOR sixty years I hav considered the clergy on a lower plane than the tricky horse jockey or quack medicin vender, though they hav a more genteel appearance. If you trade with a jockey you will, at least, get an old, spavined horse, whose hide may be worth a trifle; if you buy quack medicin you may, perhaps, get something that will kill rats or bed bugs; but if you giv your money to the clergy, all you get is a bare promis of a faint possibility that if you can liv after you are dead you may get a harp, crown, and mansion in a city of gold-paved streets that not one of them knows anything about, and, if they did, hav no right to traffic in it.—Jeremiah Hacker.

IN the National Reform party, allied with Rome, there is danger. Then put with this the almost universal demand for more rigorous laws, more vigorously enforced, for the stricter religious observance of Sunday—the very thing above all others at which the National Reform movement aims—the danger is increased and is imminent. In view of these facts there is great danger that through the sophistry of the National Reform arguments, the ill-informed zeal of thousands upon thousands of people who favor Sunday laws, will be induced to support the National Reform movement, and so they and the whole nation be delivered into the hands of Rome. There is danger in the National Reform movement.—American Sentinel.

SABLE are the torn fibers of the heart with which the warp and the weft of life are woven. Weird is the fling of the shuttle in the loom of Fate. And, if a bright thread be tangled into the web, it is only, by its garish luster, to throw into deeper gloom the blood and tear-stained fabric of our mortal experience. There is no canvas of joy that is not set in a frame of woe. The grass is green on the meadow, but as green on our father's grave. The sunbeams are bright on the yellow tassels of the broom, but as bright on the yellow hair of the dead. Happiness is only a foam-flash on the great Dead Sea of Misery. Laughter is a transient variation in the long, deep moan of Pain. Human life is a furnace, heated for all, seven times heated for many. And it is the loftiest souls that, fused in the fires of agony, from the torture of Time, are poured into the matrix in Eternity. The less lofty souls pass scatheless, even as the storm that leaves the toad-stool unharmed lays the oak in the dust.—Saladin.

AMONG our faculties the moral sense now alone claims absoluteness, and in these days, when the moral sentiment is borrowing the enthusiasm of religion, it is important to consider whether this reinforced power is using scientific methods, or merely giving new lease to notions related to discredited systems. The increasing tendency to invoke legal authority for the regulation of private conduct has succeeded to the declining authority which regulated religious belief and worship. As it is now certain that the enforcement of creeds retarded religions progress for many ages, it may be fairly suspected that moral legislation will retard ethical, consequently social, progress, unless the enforced morality be perfect and infallible. But it would require human omniscience o determin such perfection; and by consensus of ethical philosophers our moral systems are defectiv, their social results unsatisfactory. Legal repression of moral differentiation is therefore, so far as effectual, practially prohibitiv of improvement, from the danger of the general principle involved in such laws.—Moncure D. Conway.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dien Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especially in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

A PREDICTION WHICH PROVED A FALSEHOOD.

BOOKS

BY

SALADIN

(W. STEWART ROSS),

Editor of the

LONDON AGNOSTIC JOURNAL,

GOD AND HIS BOOK:

When he had read this book Colonel Ingersoll wrote to the author: "You have earned the thanks of all who really think." It is a work of vast research, of sound criticism, of caustic humor, of sledgehammer vehemence, of scathing satire, of pathos and eloquence. It is one of the heaviest iconoclastic broadsides ever fired at the Jewish God and the Bible.
Cloth, gold letters, $1.25.

WOMAN: HER GLORY, HER SHAME, AND HER GOD.

The Rev. Archdeacon Farrar said that "Christianity elevated the woman; it shrouded as with a halo of sacred innocence the tender years of the child." The object of Saladin's work is to show the archdeacon his error, and he has succeeded. An English writer said of it: "This certainly is one of the most marvelous books ever issued from the press. The authorities cited are unquestionable, and the result is convincing."
In two volumes, cloth, gilt lettered, $2.50.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE SLAVE TRADE.

A condensation of the known facts upon this subject, proving that Christianity did not abolish but aided this infamous traffic in human beings. To which are added such comments as only Saladin can make. In paper, 30 cents.

THE TRANSITION.

A consideration of the antagonism of the Bible and science, and of the question whether the veiled or allegorical portions of the Christian Bible can be interpreted by modern science.
In paper, 20 cents.

ROSES AND RUE.

Being Random Notes and Sketches. Some of its subjects are: A Last Interview with a Man of Genius; An Essay on Stirpiculture; Asceticism and Superstition; Capital Punishment; Poverty; God in the Constitution; Bruno; Gods; Witchcraft, etc. This may be called Saladin's own book, for it is poetry in prose, and is one of the books that lovers of strong literature like to read again and again. In cloth, gold- and silver-lettered, $1.50.

LAYS OF ROMANCE.

This book reminds one of Sir Walter Scott, being romantic, historic, ..., aglow in every page with the energy of a true and high poetic genius.
Cloth, gold-lettered, 75 cents.

ISAURE and OTHER POEMS.

The title poem is a story of intense passion, touchingly told. The other twenty poems are fresh, fragrant, thoughtful, and every verse reveals the thinker, observer, and reformer. Every page glows with passion and throbs with life.
Cloth, gold-lettered, 75 cents.

A FEARFUL FLOGGING.

By one who endured it. Based upon a manuscript in the possession of Saladin
In paper, 10 cents.

THE AGONIES OF HANGING.

Studies in Psychology. By one who was cut down from the gallows. Printed from manuscript in the hands of Saladin. In paper, 10 cents.

WHIRLWIND SOWN and REAPED.

A short story of clerical crime and villainy founded on fact. Of this book the Open Court said: "This novel will command the same, or more, interest than Helen Gardener's story, 'Is This Your Son, My Lord?'" In paper, 25 cents.

THE CONFESSIONAL.

Being an exposure of that infamous religious rite. Contents: Li... tiousness of the Pre-Reformation Church; Lechery of the Confessional; The Priest in Abso...ion; Confessions of the Escaped Nun; Extracts from Dens and Liguori; Examination of th... Church's Claim to have Fostered Learning; Her Atte...pts at Continency even more Ruinous than Her Self-Indulgence; The Relative Criminal Statistics of Catholicism and Protestantism

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.
Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:
"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

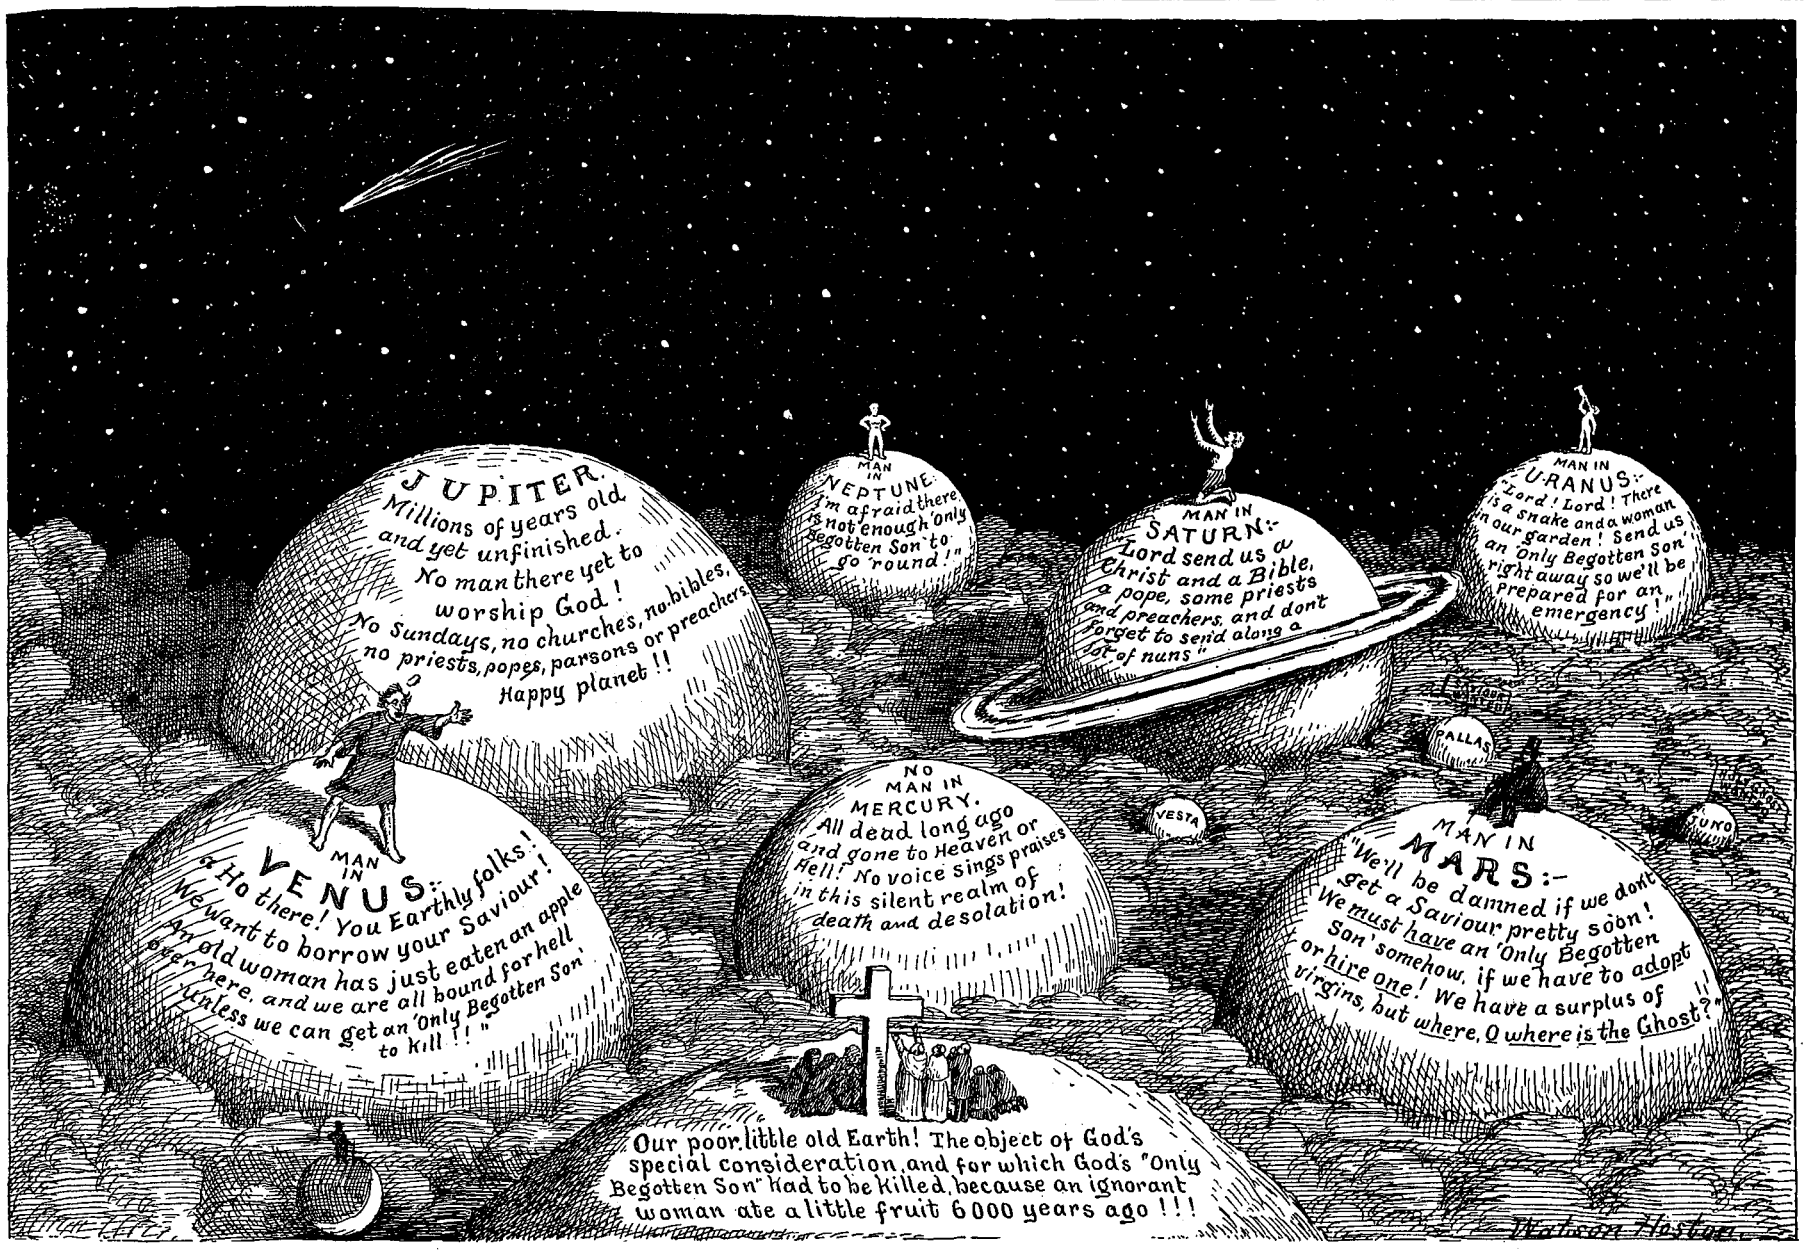
THE New York State Board of Charities has reported to the legislature that Superintendent Brockway and the board of managers of Elmira Reformatory are not fit for the positions they hold. The charges of cruelty against Brockway are unanimously sustained.

T. THOMAS FORTUNE, who sued James Trainor, proprietor of a hotel at corner of Sixth avenue and Thirty-third street, New York, for refusing to sell him beer, because he was a colored man, has won his suit in the Court of Appeals, getting judgment for $1,016.23. Fortune is the editor of the New York Age.

KENNETH P. SUTHERLAND, indicted, tried, and sentenced for complicity in the Gravesend election frauds, has jumped his bail bond and disappeared. Justice Newton pleaded guilty and was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment in the penitentiary and to pay a fine, and Constable Jamieson was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment. Sixteen other Gravesenders hav pleaded guilty.



COXEY'S commonweal army of the unemployed started from Massillon, O., Sunday, March 25. They numbered one hundred when the army started, but before they reached Canton about twenty-five had dropped out, a snow storm having come upon them. Chief Commissary Marshal Solon C. Thayer (formerly a leader at Liberal, Missouri) got discouraged and resigned on reaching Canton.

B. LEWIS, newsdealer, of 250 Hanover street, Boston, was indicted on seven counts for alleged sale of obscene literature. The jury, after a long deliberation, found him guilty on two counts. Lewis has appealed to the superior court. Count Zuboff, who was arrested on a charge of issuing obscene matter, in putting forth his last book, "Violet," was acquitted on the 12th inst. Alexander McCauce, a South End Washington street newsdealer, has also been indicted on a charge similar to the foregoing for selling a Worthington edition of the "Decameron."

CONWAY'S EDITION
OF
THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

COLLECTED, EDITED, AND CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED
By MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY.
Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," "Omitted Chapters of History Disclosed in the Life and Papers of Edmund Randolph," etc.

Four Volumes, Royal Octavo, Gilt Tops, Uniform with the Editor's "Life of Paine." Price per Volume, $2.50.

An edition of one hundred and fifty numbered copies bound in half leather, gilt tops, uniform with the limited editions of "The Writings of Washington," "The Writings of Jefferson," etc. Price, per volume, $4.

For the general reader the $3 edition of Paine's works is sufficient, as it contains all of his writings upon which his fame substantially rests. But for those who desire to go deeper into the subject of the man and polemic we can most unreservedly commend the "Life of Paine" by Mr. Conway, and this edition of Paine's works edited by him It is the fullest that we are likely to have, and the student of history, and particularly the writer, should have it upon his shelves.

The work will consist of four volumes, and will be arranged chronologically. The cause of America, as Paine said, made him an author, and the first volume will cover the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1774. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay, and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvania Magazine; these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The second volume will consist mainly of the "Rights of Man," and pamphlets relating to English politics, but will also contain certain papers on French affairs.

The third and fourth volumes will consist mainly of Paine's religious writings, but will also contain some essays relating to American affairs, written in his last years. At the close will be given Paine's poems.

The first volume is now ready for delivery, and the others will follow soon. Orders for the whole set will be taken and filled as the volumes appear, or the volumes can be purchased separately. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.
Descartes.	Kepler.	Pestalozzi.	Cervantes.	Goethe.	French Salon.	Bradlaugh.	Harriet Martineau.
Locke.	Da Vinci.	Froebel.	Marlowe.	George Sand.	French Revolution.	Garrison.	Frances Wright.
Hume.	Newton.	Combe.	Shakspere.	George Eliot.		Phillips.	Lucretia Mott.
Hobbs.	Humboldt.	Spencer.	Gibbon.	Victor Hugo.	Thomas Paine.	Parker.	Ernestine L. Rose.
Kant.	Lyell.	Owen.	Burns.	Emerson.	Jefferson.	Sumner.	Lydia Maria Child.
Hamilton.	Darwin.	Holyoake.	Shelley.	Heine.	Mazzinni.	Lincoln.	Margaret Fuller.
Comte.	Tyndall.	Haeckel.	Byron.	Thoreau.	Bentham.	Bakounine.	Elizabeth Cady Stanton.
Büchner.	Huxley.	Girard	Pushkin.	Whitman.	Mill.	Warren.	Susan B. Anthony.
Feuerbach.		Lick.	Tcherny-chewsky.	Ingersoll.	Garabaldi.	Petrofsky.	Matilda Joslyn Gage.
					Heinzen.		Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age. Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT

FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDREO YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

Our Weapons and Theirs.

We indicated in this place last week the logical necessity that Freethinkers are under to respect the equal rights of all citizens, regardless of the opinions of those citizens upon the subject of religion. We said, in substance, that all progress depends upon freedom of thought and expression; that Freethought is a method of investigation, not a bundle of dogmas; that we war on intellectual errors with facts and reason only; that the absurd and immoral in the popular religion will disappear when increasing intelligence and a quickened ethical sense hav stripped them of the illusiv veil of "inspiration," but that an attempt to punish people because of their acceptance of any tenet or because of their spiritual allegiance to any church cannot result otherwise than in strengthening the church thus unfairly attacked; that we must not join with those who would limit the civil rights of this or that division of our fellow citizens for fear that their ideas may lead to invasion of equal rights; and that the misguided sectarians who want to disfranchise and shut out of office their religious opponents are the legitimate children of the inquisitors of the Dark Ages and the Puritans of New England.

And while protesting against proscription as wholly opposed to the spirit of Freethought we referred to the religio-political associations formed for the sole purpose of establishing a theological despotism and said that no Freethinker could giv his support at the polls to any member of these bodies. They hav left the arena of argument and appealed to the arbitrament of force on the battlefield of politics, and, in self-defense, we must meet them on the ground they hav chosen. If they succeed, religious liberty dies. On the other hand, we said, the churches contain many who are not in favor of religious legislation, and hence we cannot, at the ballot-box, war against the churches as such; only against the privileges which law has given them and against their individual members who support the theocratic demands for church-state union.

Such, in brief, is the attitude of the intelligent Freethinker toward the church and its members, and toward the theocratic societies whose purpose is to make religious freedom a memory of the past. Now, what is the attitude of the National Reformers toward liberty of opinion, and does that attitude justify us in our declaration of political antagonism to that society and its allies? We will see. Rev. J. M. Foster, of the National Reform Association, writes in the Christian Statesman of March 24th, under the head, "What the Christian Amendment Includes." Here is a part of one paragraph of his article:

"It [the amendment] will require moral and religious qualifications for civil office. The scriptures specify these qualifications. · · · 'Religious convictions, grounded upon the truth of divine revelation, are necessary.' · · · Hence it follows that weak and ignorant men, drunkards, libertins, Sabbath-breakers, profane swearers, Atheists, Infidels, plotting Jesuits, and ranting heretics should be constitutionally prohibited from holding office. The proposed amendment would require that the provision forbidding the requirement of any religious test as a qualification for office or trust in these United States should be repealed and in its stead a provision be enacted admitting to office and trust only true Christian statesmen, whose natural endowments, high moral worth, and fear of offending the King of kings fit them for representing the divine ordinance of civil government."

Here, then, is an organization which represents principles the direct opposit of those held by Freethinkers. This organization would deny civic rights to all who do not agree with it as to the proper way of spending Sunday. It would similarly ostracize men who do not pronounce with what it considers sufficient solemnity the names of its myths, and those who are Jesuits and Atheists and Infidels and "ranting" heretics. Contrast this position with that of the Freethinker. The latter would not ask that people who choose to go to church on Sunday be denied the opportunity to hold office; he would not ask that persons who say "God" and "Christ" and "hell" in a peculiar, long-drawn-out, and reverential manner, be made a pariah class, although he has no more of a predilection for swearing than has the average Christian, and he would not wish to debar men and women from public positions because of their religious beliefs. In a word—the Freethinker recognizes the right of private judgment—the theocrat does not, although, if he is a Protestant, he loudly claims that his "Reformation" was based on that right.

Besides emphasizing the contrast between the fundamental ideas of the Freethinker and the National Reformer the above quotation from Rev. Mr. Foster justifies our declaration of political war against the society he represents and its affiliated associations. It is evident to all observant persons who hav given this question serious thought that no compromise with the theocrats is possible, and certainly we could agree to none, even were future peace attainable upon such a basis. The conflict between the secular and the theocratic principles is irrepressible. We in America had fondly believed that the serpent of church and state union could not breathe in our atmosphere. We were grievously mistaken. We hav been rudely awakened. From this day forth it is to be a struggle for domination on the part of the theocrats, for liberty and life upon our own. Not only must we spread the light of criticism, scholarship, and science, but we must also hurl the projectils of political defense against the assaulting hordes of fanatical intolerance. The channels of investigation and discussion must be kept open. This will not be possible if we permit the champions of suppression to sit in the places of authority. The men who would make religious belief the test of fitness for public office must not be given the opportunity to put any more of their proscriptiv political creeds into the statutes nor to tamper with the Constitution.

No discrimination against any class of people because of their religious beliefs and allegiances and no legislativ offices for the bigots who would enact such laws if they could get the offices.

Strength of the Church, Past and Present.

The Congregationalist thinks that there is no basis for the assumption that Christianity is on the wane. It says "that there never was a period in human history when so many persons absolutely were interested in Christian churches. Probably there never was a time when the proportion of Christians to population throughout what is called Christendom was so large as now." As for the first assertion, it is to be said that the defections from Christianity necessarily occur chiefly in the comparativly small class of studious men and women who are capable of reasoning coolly and critically, and hav some leisure for investigation; and that, taking into account her great wealth and admirable means for proselyting, it would be strange, indeed, if, in spite of the increase of the world's population, the Christian church was to-day absolutely weaker, in numbers, than she was fifty, one hundred, or five hundred years ago. But when it is asserted that she is probably relativly stronger numerically than she was at any previous time in her history, it is using very mild language to say that the averment is absurd. Once she held entire nations in the thrall of her superstitions, and no man dared question the divinity of her self-declared mission. In this age, scientific, critical, and historical assaults upon her position hav forced her to drop dogma after dogma in order to retain the support of those of the more intelligent people who are not hopelessly lost to her, and it is this very letting down of the bars which has enabled her to keep within her pale multitudes who hav no belief in nor respect for the Christianity which was supreme a few centuries ago. Once she held the brain of Christendom in her grasp, and all men served her through hope of heaven and fear of hell. To-day tens of thousands of the keenest thinkers do not pretend to work for her, and other tens of thousands lend her their pens only because she is a mighty social force and a well-oiled political machine. Others, again, serve in her ranks because they think she is permanently reformed. But this is a delusion. The theological leopard has not changed her spots. Catholic and Covenanter are as ambitious, rapacious, and intolerant as ever. All they lack is power to reinaugurate the reign of religious terror.

Wanted—More Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two splendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

Colonel Ingersoll's recent trip through the South was a kind of triumphal tour. The heartiest of receptions greeted him everywhere, and in Memphis and Chattanooga the hotel-keepers even refused payment of their bills. He and his party didn't owe them anything, they said. And he must come again. This will make Louis Levine's heart glad, for it shows that his sunny Southland is getting ahead intellectually to appreciate the Great Heretic to such an extent.

On the 22d of February, at Welland, Ontario, died John Ray, aged eighty-eight years. Mr. Ray was one of the stanchest of Canadian Freethinkers. Born in Huby, England, he was trained in the principles of the Church of England until he was eighteen. For the next twenty years he attended the meetings of the Friends. Then he came to Canada and was for thirty years a member of the society of Friends. He was past sixty-eight years of age when he came out into the unfenced fields of Freethought. He retained his mental powers to the last and died without fear.

The Independent observes, anent the recent lessening of Sunday freight traffic on the Erie, that "it is a serious thing to rob men of their rest day, and still more serious to rob God of what is his due." We hav always said that the Sunday-law people cared far more for "God's honor" than they did for the laborer's tired body. Just think of the absurdity of the idea that man can "rob God of what is his due"! What babyish superstition! As to the laborer's due there is not the slightest need of interfering with Sunday work or pleasure in order to giv him all the rest he requires.

Speaking of the bill recently before the New York legislature, which proposed to permit the people of this city to vote upon the question of allowing the sale of liquor on Sunday, the Independent observes: "To compel men engaged in legitimate and useful business to close up on Sunday, and allow those conducting the infernal traffic in intoxicants to open, would be an unspeakable outrage."

We would hint to our neighbor that the compulsory closing up of "legitimate and useful business" is itself an "unspeakable outrage," which such a journal should be ashamed to sanction.

The House Judiciary Committee by a majority vote has laid the Morse-Frye joint resolution on the table. Representativ Stone made a vigorous speech against such action, but the Democrats voted solidly to table. So the resolution will not be reported, either favorably or unfavorably, as the adoption of the motion to table prevents a minority report being made. The theocrats now hang their hopes on the possibly friendly action of the Senate Judiciary Committee. It will be just as well for our friends to hold all blank remonstrances, and those which hav been signed, ready for such an emergency. The enemy has not gone to sleep.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union in Australia is devoting itself mainly to attempted enforcement of Sunday laws and the Christianizing of the public schools. It is animated by the identical spirit which spurs into pernicious activity the same organization in this country. What could be expected of a society whose name is a falsehood? Christian temperance, indeed! We know of several good Freethinking women who, in some inexplicable way, hav been decoyed into that reactionary organization. How they can feel at home there—if they do—is more than we can understand. Will not the Union's open championship of Sunday laws and the Christian amendment open their eyes?

"We want not the right to speak or pray in the prayer meetings, the question that a certain brother talks so glibly of introducing into the next ministers' conference. What care we for that? We should spurn it! We are South Carolina women—South Carolina Baptist women. We stand by the Bible, and are not ignorant of some things that Paul has said."

So writes a woman correspondent of the Baptist Courier. This utterance well illustrates the condition of mind in which faith in the Bible as a divine authority leaves its unhappy victims. There are no other such abject slaves as those who love their chains.

"There is religion enough in the world. It is Christianity, the religion of Christ, that the world needs. The world was religious before Christ came, and it has never ceased to hav religion."—Journal and Messenger.

Will the Journal and Messenger kindly inform us which of the one hundred and forty-odd sects in this country has the genuin "religion of Christ"? Or must we wait until we get Jesus into the Constitution before we can hav an authoritativ answer? What is there in the religion of the "son of the carpenter" that is so essential, so superior to any and all other religions?

The Christian Advocate is not inclined to place much faith in the "supernatural communications of facts" and gift of prophecy of Mrs. "Landaulet" Williams and her small band of followers, who recently retired from the world to fast for forty days on claret and crackers. Dr. Buckley thinks that "many would join them if they could hav all the claret they wished." He says that these two articles "contain sufficient of the elements of nutrition to keep persons, not exposed to the elements or engaged in physical labor, healthy for at least eleven months." The good doctor is decidedly rationalistic when dealing with modern frauds, but does not seem to see quite so clearly when gazing at ancient marvels. Distance appears to lend a hypnotic glamour to his view.

"If any man can make truth, righteousness, and love Atheistic, then there is no God worth honoring in the universe."—Unity.

We think it a fair assumption that Unity means that if men can be truthful, just, and loving without belief in God, then there is no God in the universe worth their worship, for they hav in themselvs the moral attributes popularly assigned to him, and so will gradually elevate the race by means of these inward forces working for righteousness. Certainly there are many Atheists who possess all these qualifications of mind and impulse. But it may be that Unity wants the Atheist to prove that the attributes named do not hav their source in the thoughts of God. If so, we would remind it that as it affirms God the burden of proof is not ours but its own.

Father A. Lambert, a noted missionary of the Redemptorist Order of the Roman Catholic church, has renounced his allegiance and allied himself with the Protestants. In his letter of resignation he says that the "intolerance and duplicity" of the Catholic priesthood has "become utterly unbearable" to him. And he adds, in conclusion:

"Some may now condemn me, but I intrust my cause to the almighty and to his son, Jesus Christ. I know now clearly that those who believe in Christ shall be saved. I believe in him. I resign myself unto his loving care and I feel sure he will not forsake me."

It would appear that Father Lambert, in his endeavors to shun Scylla, has fallen into Charybdis. He will find plenty of intolerance and duplicity in the Protestant priesthood.

As we must get out our church taxation pamphlet before the New York Constitutional Convention meets in May, we are obliged to divide Mr. Watts's last installment of Notes into two, perhaps, three, parts. In this week's paper he tells us more about the "Atheist Shoemaker" story. The Methodists and other Christians hav much to say about Mr. Holyoake's alleged "Vindications" of Hugh Price Hughes, but they are very careful not to print any part of Mr. Foote's exposure of the original story and his thorough analysis of the "Vindications." On the other hand, Mr. Foote has published in the Freethinker all that Mr. Holyoake has written, although the latter gentleman's articles were prepared for first insertion in the Methodist Times. This illustrates anew the difference between the Christian and the Freethought conception of fair play.

William H. Artman, living a few miles from Tell City, Indiana, trampled his wife and one of his children to death, and the other children fled for their lives. Religious excitement was the cause of Artman's insanity. Revivalists will hav much to answer for in "the day of judgment"!

Up at Mt. Kisco and other places on the Croton watershed, whence comes the water consumed by New York's great population, there has recently been discovered much filth which must inevitably pollute our water unless removed. Several nuisances had to be abated. One of these was a pond at Mt. Kisco. On "Easter" Sunday a gang of workmen were engaged in filling it when a pious Methodist and an equally pious Presbyterian came along on their way to church. They were shocked. They ordered the men to quit work. The laborers did not obey, whereupon warrants were sworn out and two were arrested. But new men were put on and the work was continued and completed. Cleanliness is much more conduciv to both physical and moral health than is godliness when godliness opposes cleanliness for the sake of a fragment of time which cannot be hurt.

In the Asiatic Quarterly Review, London, Bertram Mitford, F. R. G. S., reviews the treatment of the Matabeles by the English. Although King Lobengula's ambassadors were shot while trying to escape, two white traders who were in Lobengula's capital were found unharmed when the English took the place. The Literary Digest givs the gist of Mr. Mitford's conclusion in these significant words:

"The proselytizing zeal of English clergymen, 'whooping for Matabele blood' in order to further 'the spread of the gospel' among the Mashonas is credited with having played an efficient part in the tragic program. The writer advocates the reconstruction of the Matabele under one responsible head and insists that a crowd of missionaries should not be forced on it."

Did not Jesus say that he "came to send not peace but a sword"? And must not he be proved a true prophet?

At the legal hanging of Daniel Gilchrist at Rockingham, North Carolina, the officiating minister took for his text: "I hav fought a good fight; I hav finished my course; I hav kept the faith." Following the sermon came this hymn: "Servant of God, well done." Both minister and murderer were white. We do not wonder that the Independent says: "Really, we think something more appropriate might hav been selected"; but that paper needs to be reminded that so long as belief is necessary to admit a man to heaven, while in the absence of such belief good conduct won't save him from hell, such scenes will be possible.

Editor Brown of the Ram's Horn boasts of the alleged fact that he was once an Infidel. How he was converted is told by a Western paper:

"Brown went to a Moody service to 'write up' that preacher in a humorous fashion, and in the midst of a sermon on the 'Prodigal Son,' Moody suddenly pointed straight at Brown in the gallery and exclaimed with impassioned earnestness: 'Sinner, that father is your God!' Startled as if addressed by name, Brown dropped pencil and tablet, and turning to a man sitting beside him, asked: 'Is that so?' 'Yes, it's all true,' was the reply. It led to Brown's conversion."

Assuming this story to be true, we are free to admit that Mr. Brown was duller as an Infidel than he is as a Christian and we are very glad that Mr. Moody rescued him from oblivion. A man who could be "taken in" that easily belongs in the church. He would soon strangle in an atmosphere containing a normal amount of ozone. What a collection of "converted Infidels" the church has gotten together!

"What the people of our states and of our nation must come to is the expression in fundamental law of the will of the people as subject to the will of Christ, and the laying down of that divine law by the people as the authoritativ rule for the administration of the government in all its departments, legislativ, executiv, and judicial."—Christian Reformer.

In other words: What the people of our states and of our nation must come to is the subordination of the civil power to the religious; the absolute rule of the church through her officials, the priests, in all departments of the government, and the smothering out of all new ideas, of all theories, principles, and methods of social development not in harmony with these priests' interpretation of a book called the Bible. This, in plain English, is the ultimatum of the ecclesiastical power as represented by the National Reform Association, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and affiliated societies which are behind the God-in-the-Constitution amendment now in the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate.

Rev. H. H. George observes that "what God has joined together no man shall put asunder." But the question is, How do you know that God has joined together a certain man and woman? Your Jesus is reported to hav declared that the tree was to be known by its fruits. You say your God is perfect, and if this is so and if he does actually join men and women in matrimony these heaven-made unions should produce only peace and happiness. Do they always? Is there a particle of evidence to prove that marriages are consummated in heaven? All this talk about God's authorship of marriage is in the interest of the priest, who by the acceptance of the idea is enabled to extend and perpetuate his malign power over mankind. Mr. George further avers that there are fifty millions of people in this country who want God's law of indissoluble marriage rather than the existing systems of marriage with more or less easily-procured divorce. Fifty millions? Why did not the reverend gentleman claim the entire population of the country and be done with it?

The article upon church property which appears in this and succeeding issues of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be made into a pamphlet immediately upon completion. The book will be a vade mecum, as the pedants say, upon the subject, and is designed as a handbook for those who object to being held up by the tax gatherer and forced to pay other people's taxes.

This question will be brought before the New York Constitutional Convention, which meets in May, and every delegate shall be supplied with this pamphlet. We also desire to place it in the hands of every editor and legislator in the state—and in the country, if we can—with requests for notice and discussion. We also want to circulate it generally and generously. The price for single copies will be low (we will announce it as soon as the cost is determined) and in quantities still lower.

To distribute it as it should be we want help, particularly from the Liberals of New York state, though it will not be refused from anybody. It is a national question and work done in one state helps in others. Those who feel like helping can send such sums as they can spare and will receive pamphlets to the amount of their donation.

The more we receive the wider will be the circulation of the pamphlet. Every Liberal is interested in this question, and we hope will help us to distribute thousands.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, in his "Religious Forces of the United States," puts the number of communicants of Protestant churches at 14,180,000, and then multiplies this number by three and one-half, on the supposition that there are two and one-half adherents, including young children, for each communicant, making a total of 49,630,000. Catholic communicants number 6,257,871, to which he adds fifteen per cent to make up the total of Catholic adherents, 7,362,000. Catholic and Protestant, 56,992,000. Total population (1890), 62,622,250. Difference, 5,630,250, which number includes the Jews, Latter Day Saints, Freethinkers of all classes, Theosophists, and the indifferent. Are these figures approximately correct? At a meeting of the Congregational Club of Chicago Professor Henderson of Chicago University displayed these estimates with much pride, but his colleague, Professor Taylor, said he had studied church statistics and they would not stand inquiry. In his church at Hartford he had been unable to find a living person to answer to two hundred and fifty of the five hundred and twenty names on the membership roll. Every church he had been connected with in his twenty years work in the ministry was in a similar condition. What has Statistician Carroll to say to this?

The urgent need of vigilance in guarding against the encroachments of the Sunday worshipers can not be too often insisted upon, and it is of the utmost importance that the Federation be abundantly supplied with money for use in emergencies. As our readers are already informed, a Sunday bill for the District of Columbia is now pending in both Houses of Congress, and a National Sunday law bill is prepared and will be introduced at this session, unless its friends get frightened off, which is scarcely possible. What it is intended to accomplish by means of a National Sunday statute is told by Rev. J. M. Foster in his article on the scope of the Christian amendment. A National Sunday law before the adoption of the amendment would be unconstitutional, as are all present Sunday laws, but such a trifle would not of itself prevent its passage. Mr. Foster says:

"It will, therefore, be imperativ that the law adopted by Congress in 1810 and observed ever since, that the United States mail be carried and distributed on Sabbath be repealed, and the mail service be discontinued on the Lord's day. It will also be obligatory on the general government to prohibit inter-state commerce on Sabbath. The running of railroad trains, the issuing and selling of Sunday papers, and carrying on of Sunday excursions will be unlawful on the Sabbath day."

This is, in brief, the program for National Sunday legislation, and the District bill is the entering wedge. Mr. Putnam will hav to go to Washington again this spring or summer. E. C. Reichwald, 65 South Water street, Chicago, is the treasurer of the Freethought Federation.

This Week's Cartoon.

Astronomy proves that the boundless realms of space are filled with innumerable planetary bodies. It is but reasonable to suppose that many of these bodies are inhabited by rational beings similar to man, and if such is the case, then all the inhabitants of all these worlds hav either remained in a state of sinless purity, or some of them hav transgressed God's laws and "fallen" as theologians claim man has in this world. But if some of the inhabitants of other worlds hav "fallen," then, according to the orthodox plan of salvation, a savior would be needed for each and every world that had sinned! But as God has but one "only begotten son," who was sent expressly to this world, then God must invent a new scheme of salvation, beget more "only sons," or let them all go to eternal damnation. The Christian assumes that "man is the chief object and end of all of God's creations, and created for the purpose of worshiping and glorifying his creator," then, allowing them this assumption, it follows that if none of these other worlds are inhabited by rational beings or man, there is a vast lot of unoccupied territory which will forever remain untenanted, and from whose mighty depths no prayers nor songs of praise will ever be heard, and thus the "chief end and aim" of God's creativ purpose becomes a failure. It is well for thinking Christians to consider this problem, for there are but two horns to it, and no matter which they seize or reject they will find the whole Christian scheme ripped open by the other. In contemplating the vastness and grandeur of the universe with its countless worlds separated by appalling distances, all moving in majestic harmony and order in obedience to one great law, the law of necessity, how foolish, aye, how contemptible seems the Biblical Jehovah with his petty whims and passions, and how utterly childish the entire scriptural narrativ with all its narrow dogmas! Looking into the starry depths of space the thoughtful mind is convinced of the comparativ insignificance of this world, the falsity of Christian dogmas, the ignorance of so-called inspired writers and revelators, the littleness and uselessness of either a multitude of gods or one.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

Should It Be Exempt from Just and Impartial Taxation?

REASONS WHY IT SHOULD NOT.

An Argument for Equality of Taxation, and a Statement of Facts, Giving, from the Census of 1890, the Value, by Denominations, of Church Property in the United States and in the Several States and Territories and in All Cities Having 25,000 or More Inhabitants; so Arranged as to Show at a Glance the Relative Standing as to Wealth of the Leading Denominations and Denominational Groups.—Also, Much Other Matter of Especial Interest to Certain Cities, States, and Sections.—All Comparisons and Percentages Based Upon Official Figures.

III.

Church Wealth by Denominations.

The total value of church property in the United States, by the census of 1890, is $679,694,439. The census figures were revised in only a few particulars, as we are informed by H. K. Carroll, LL.D., from whose work, Vol. I. of "The American Church History Series," all the figures in this paper are taken. Mr. Carroll had charge of the division of the Census office which directed the gathering and compiled the statistics of churches.

Following this will be found a table giving in the order of their magnitude the holdings of all the denominations. The six divisions of the Adventists are grouped together and the property of all lumped in one sum. The same procedure has been followed in the case of the Baptists, with their thirteen divisions; the three branches of the River Brethren; the four branches of the Plymouth Brethren; the seven Catholic bodies; the two divisions of the Christian church; the eight Communistic societies; the four schools of Dunkards; the four bodies of Friends; the two divisions of the Jews; the two churches of Latter Day Saints (Mormons); the sixteen Lutheran sub-denominations, with the independent congregations under that name; the twelve bodies of Mennonites; the seventeen divisions of Methodists; the twelve Presbyterian churches; the two wings of the Protestant Episcopal church; the three divisions of the Reformed church; the two wings of the United Brethren; and the various Independent Congregations, except the Lutheran.

The same system has been carried out in all the tabulations by states.

1.	Methodist (17 bodies)	$132,140,179
2.	Catholic (7 bodies)	118,371,366
3.	Presbyterian (12 bodies)	94,869,097
4.	Protestant Episcopal (2 bodies)	82,835,418
5.	Baptist (13 bodies)	82,392,423
6.	Congregationalist	43,335,437
7.	Lutheran (16 bodies)	35,060,354
8.	Reformed (3 bodies)	18,744,242

39.	Christian Missionary Association	3,900
40.	Christadelphians	2,700
41.	Plymouth Brethren (4 bodies)	1,465
42.	Theosophical Society	600

ADDITIONS SINCE 1890.

It is estimated that to the above aggregate is to be added thirty million dollars for each year since 1890, that sum being put into church buildings annually. This would make the grand total of church property at this time in the United States $769,694,439 by the census. The value of all property has suffered a shrinkage during the past two years, but church property is known to be listed very much below its taxable value, so it will be perfectly safe to say that there is now in this country an aggregate of $800,000,000 of untaxed church property. By some careful computers it is put at a much higher figure.

To this $800,000,000 of untaxed church property should be added another very large amount for sectarian schools, charitable institutions under church control, and various other adjuncts of the churches that in one way and another escape taxation. Let the reader turn to "Ohio" and he will find a list of properties in and near Cincinnati which belong in this class of subsidiary church property and are not taxed.

Denominational Wealth by States.

In the pages that immediately follow will be found tables giving the wealth of the leading denominations or denominational groups by states. After the tables there is stated, approximately, the proportion of the total church property in the respective states held by one denomination, and by two, three, and five denominations. Next is given the total of church property in each city of the first, second, and third class in the state, with the amount owned by the leading denominations or groups. The number of times any denomination holds first, second, third, or fourth place in all the cities in the state is then recorded. Such explanatory remarks as seem to be demanded by exceptional conditions in any state or city are added.

Alabama.

In this state the total value of church property is $6,768,477. The leading denominations are:

Methodist	$2,278,988	Catholic	$602,752
Baptist	2,110,362	Jewish Cong	103,500
Presbyterian	819,255	Congregationalist	91,755
Prot. Episcopal	655,752	Disciples of Christ	78,185

The wider the diversity of religious opinions the greater the religious liberty of the citizen. Concentration of vast wealth in the hands of one church or of a few churches is not conduciv to the public welfare. This is the unanimous verdict of history. The more wealthy a church is, the more does it receive from the state by the exemption of its property from taxation, not only absolutely but also relatively. In such a case, the exemption fund is a pure luxury which labor presents to ecclesiastical power; and in order to place all denominations on a level, this favoritism would need to be balanced by an appropriation to the poorer churches equal to the exemption of the rich.

In the United States there are forty-three denominational groups, composed of one hundred and forty-three denominations. The differences between the denominations of the same group are very slight in nearly all instances, in many cases being only historical or sectional. For statistical purposes all the denominations of each group may be treated as one denomination, and they are so considered throughout this paper.

A glance at the figures which give the wealth of the churches of Alabama shows that one denominational group owns more than a third of all the church property in the state; that two denominations own nearly two-thirds of the total, while five denominations own sixty-four sixty-sevenths of the whole. In other words, the state of Alabama, in appropriating money for the propagation of religion—an act in itself unconstitutional—bestows more than one-third of its bounty upon one denomination, and gives to all in the direct ratio of their wealth, thus helping that church the most which is the most able to help itself, while the weaker denominations, which are unable to build many or costly edifices, and are compelled to worship in private houses, get comparatively nothing. These observations, taken in connection with the considerations presented in the general argument, demonstrate conclusively that, in whatever light the tax exemption question is viewed, such exemption is seen to be inherently inequitable, vicious, and demoralizing.

What is true of Alabama is true in degree of all the states, and the criticisms here made apply in the cases of all, but the evil of concentration is greater in the Southern than in most of the Eastern, Western, and Pacific Coast states, and, by a curious and instructive but not surprising coincidence, the older and more rigidly orthodox Protestant doctrines are clung to with greater tenacity in the former division of states than in the latter divisions, and also dissenters are more harshly treated there, as the persecution of the Adventists in Alabama, Arkansas, Maryland, and Tennessee bears witness. Not only are the ultra evangelical denominations relatively stronger in the Southern than in most of the other states, but there is within their own pales less of the leaven of the new and tolerant religious thought than there is in the same denominations north of Mason and Dixon's line. Speaking of the Presbyterian church north and south, the New York Independent says: "The smell of higher criticism has hardly touched the garments of the Southern church."

There will be frequent occasion to illustrate the general principles stated in these paragraphs in comparisons of the strength of the leading denominations in different states, and it is also revealed in the table which is given in another place of the denominational groups and denominations in all the states.

Church property in Mobile is listed at $806,119, of which the Catholics own $297,000; Methodists, $192,900; Episcopalians, $110,150; Presbyterians, $105,000; Baptists, $79,069; Miscellaneous, $22,000. Birmingham, total, $664,525; Methodist, $208,550; Presbyterian, $140,800; Catholic, $105,000; Baptist, 93,800; Episcopalian, $54,375; Miscellaneous, $62,000. Total in two cities, $1,470,644.

Alaska, Indian Territory, Oklahoma.

These three territories have within their borders church property to the value of $447,491. Of this Alaska has $203,650, the Indian Territory, $182,266, and Oklahoma, $61,575. No doubt the latter territory has, in the three years since the census was taken, at least quadrupled the value of church holdings.

Indian Territory, Methodist, $75,243: Presbyterian, $59,158; Baptist, $35,765. In Oklahoma the Methodists have $37,550. In Alaska the Russian Orthodox church has property to the value of $180,000.

Arizona.

In this territory the total value of church property is $270,816. The most popular denominations own property as follows:

Catholic	$124,500	Presbyterian	13,900
Methodist	58,100	Baptist	11,200
Latter Day Saints	26,400	Congregationalist	9,500
Prot. Episcopal	24,216

In Arizona one denomination owns more than three-sevenths of the aggregate of church property and two denominations own two-thirds. Four denominations own twenty-three twenty-sevenths of the whole.

Arkansas.

In this state there is listed church property amounting to $3,266,663. Leading denominations:

Methodist	$1,200,842	Disciples of Christ	106,360
Baptist	1,066,104	Jewish Cong	44,000
Presbyterian	357,685	Lutheran	39,345
Catholic	219,100	Congregationalist	26,000
Prot. Episcopal	196,122

One denomination owns more than one-third of the total of church property in the state, while two own more than two-thirds.

In Little Rock there is church property to the value of $497,600, of which the Methodists own $135,900; Baptists, $99,700; Episcopalians, $79,500; Catholics, $65,000; Presbyterians, $45,000; Miscellaneous, $72,500.

California.

Church property in this state is valued at $11,961,914. The wealthiest denominations are:

Catholic	$2,667,955	Disciples of Christ	$291,250
Methodist	2,575,631	Adventist	170,850
Presbyterian	1,895,675	Universalist	96,000
Prot. Episcopal	1,019,695	Evangelical Ass'n	72,100
Congregationalist	1,014,975	Independent Cong.	70,575
Baptist	763,860	New Jerusalem	41,500
Jewish Cong	396,000	Chinese	37,000
Unitarian	366,040	United Brethren	37,000
Lutheran	364,800

In California there is no legal exemption. Church real estate, whether rented or otherwise used for profit, or devoted solely to religious worship, is taxable. But taxation seems to be pretty much of a farce, so far. Often the churches evade the law in all possible ways.

An injunction will be asked for, on one pretext or another, restraining the assessors from performing their duty. The temporary injunction granted, a paralysis seems to lay hold of the officials charged with the duty of enforcing the law. Nothing more is done; property protected by the injunction escapes assessment and the honest owners smile complacently at the success of their little scheme. In one instance the attention of the assessor in San Francisco was called to the fact that he had listed a certain church property at a ridiculously low figure. He replied that as the building did not yield any profit he had assessed only the land, and as the latter was encumbered with the nonproductive building its value was very much lessened, hence the low assessment!

By the injunction trick the Young Men's Christian Association property in San Francisco escaped taxation for several years, and may still be exempt, but its present status is not definitely known.

The friends of equal taxation in California should put themselves in position to effectively antagonize the church's attempts to evade the law and also to defeat all movements having for their object the repeal of that law. The state cannot afford to take any backward step in the direction of the union of church and state. Every dollar which a church saves by exemption from taxation is a dollar appropriated by the state for the support of religion. No amount of sophistical reasoning can make it anything else.

As regards the number of denominations and the monopolizing tendency of a few, California makes a better showing than the preceding states. The wealthiest denomination owns less than one-fourth of the total ecclesiastical property in the state, while five own a little more than three-fourths.

The total of church property in San Francisco is $4,241,100, of which the Catholics own $1,364,300; Presbyterians, $666,100; Methodists, $517,950; Episcopalians, $385,000; Jewish Congregations, $300,000; Congregationalists, $249,500; Baptists, $199,250; Lutherans, $168,200; Miscellaneous, $390,800. Oakland, total, $1,052,491; Catholic, $240,00; Methodist, $183,216; Congregationalist, $168,800; Presbyterian, $140,500; Baptist, $64,500; Episcopalian, $55,875; Miscellaneous, $199,600. Los Angeles, total, $951,507; Methodist, $295,100; Presbyterian, $170,000; Baptist, $101,500; Catholic, $87,000; Congregationalist, $81,600; Episcopalian, $65,507; Miscellaneous, $150,800. Sacramento, total, $337,100; Catholic, $150,000; Methodist, $47,000; Baptist, $31,000; Episcopalian, $25,000; Congregationalist, $20,000; Miscellaneous, $64,100. Total in four cities, $6,582,198.

In these four cities the Catholic church holds first place three times and fourth place once; the Methodist, first place once, second place twice, and third place once; the Presbyterian, second place twice, and fourth place once; the Baptist, third place twice; the Congregationalist, third place once, and Protestant Episcopal, fourth place twice.

Colorado.

In the Centennial state the census of 1890 found church property to the value of $4,743,317. The greater bulk of it was divided among these sects:

Methodist	$1,105,700	Lutheran	$154,800
Catholic	843,637	Disciples of Christ	151,625
Prot. Episcopal	700,065	Jewish Cong.	75,500
Presbyterian	643,550	United Brethren	32,800
Baptist	440,000	Reformed	20,000
Congregationalist	377,090	German Evangelical Synod	18,000
Unitarian	157,500

One denomination has possession of nearly one-fourth of all the church property in the state, while five hold some more than three-fourths.

In Denver church property is valued at $2,884,142, or $512,484 more than half the total value in the state. Of this the Methodists own $762,000; Catholics, $513,042; Episcopalians, $418,000; Baptists, $254,600; Presbyterians, $236,150; Congregationalists, $206,300; Lutherans. $140,200; Jewish Congregations, $63,500; Miscellaneous, $290,350.

Connecticut.

The church property of Connecticut aggregates $16,985,036. The richest denominations are these:

Congregationalist	$5,366,201	Presbyterian	$443,500
Protestant Episcopal	3,403,170	Universalist	367,000
Catholic	3,093,750	Lutheran	172,900
Methodist	2,225,730	Jewish Cong.	87,000
Baptist	1,656,750	Adventist	59,340
		Unitarian	38,000

One denomination holds nearly one-third of all the church property in this state, three hav considerably more than two-thirds, while five own nearly fifteen-sixteenths.

The value of church property in New Haven is $2 089.600. of which the Congregationalists own $676,000; Episcopalians, $432,000; Catholics, $323,500; Methodists, $269,600; Baptists, $239,000; Lutherans, $56,500; Miscellaneous, $93,000. Hartford, total, $1,989,600; Congregationalist, $533,000; Episcopalian, $394,000; Catholic, $382,600; Baptist, $280,000; Methodist, $150,000; Presbyterian, $75,000; Miscellaneous, $175,000. Bridgeport, total, $1.260,000; Episcopalian, $350,000; Catholic, $250,000; Congregationalist, $180,000; Methodist, $159,000; Presbyterian, $150,000; Baptist. $88,000; Miscellaneous, $83,000. Waterbury, total, $708,000; Episcopalians, $220,000; Catholic, $180,000; Congregationalist, $130 000; Methodist. $86,500; Baptist, $61,500; Miscellaneous, $30,000. Total in four cities, $6,047,200.

In these cities the Episcopalians hold first and second place twice each; the Congregationalists, first and third place twice each; Catholics, second and third place twice each; Methodists, fourth place three times, and Baptists, fourth place once.

Delaware.

The total value of church property in this little state is $2,708,825. The chief denominations and their holdings follow:

Methodist	$1,116,125	Catholic	$201,500
Presbyterian	709,800	Baptist	184,300
Protestant Episcopal	388,000	Friends	65,500
		Unitarian	14,000

One denomination owns more than two-fifths of the $2,708,825, and five denominations hold about twenty-six twenty-sevenths of the total.

The value of church property in Wilmington is stated to be $1,600.100, of which the Methodists own $570,050; the Presbyterians. $435,300; Episcopalians, $191,250; Baptists, $150,000; Catholics, 142,000; Miscellaneous, $111,500.

District of Columbia.

In this territory, set apart as the seat of the federal government, the valuation of church property is $6,313,625. The best-equipped denominations are these:

Methodist	$1,543,000	Congregationalist	$339,000
Catholic	1,015,800	Disciples of Christ	80,000
Presbyterian	950,000	Unitarian	80,000
Baptist	914,150	Friends	50,000
Protestant Episcopal	790,500	Universalist	47,000
		Jewish Cong.	42,000
Lutheran	414,000	Reformed	31,000

One denomination owns a little less than one-fourth of the total amount, and five denominations hold about five-sixths.

Mr. Carroll, or some one of his assistants, has apparently blundered in the figures for the District of Columbia or in those for Washington. While the total of church property in the entire District is put at $6,313.625. that of the city of Washington is given as $6,370,575. It is possible that this is not really a mistake—that some conference, diocese or presbytery, takes in territory outside the District. Perhaps several do so.

Florida.

Here is found church property valued at $2,424,423. These are the denominations which own most of it:

Methodist	$829,551	Catholic	$225,100
Presbyterian	484,650	Congregationalist	73,775
Prot. Episcopal	390,561	Disciples of Christ.	14,850
Baptist	375,936	Jewish Cong	13,500

One denomination owns some more than one-third of all church property in the state, while five denominations hold about twenty-three twenty-fourths.

Georgia.

The Empire state of the South makes a return of church property amounting to $8,228,060. These are the denominations which should pay the taxes upon most of it:

Baptist	$3,109,390	Disciples of Christ.	$197,925
Methodist	2,783,267	Jewish Cong.	159,000
Presbyterian	776,025	Lutheran	124,150
Prot. Episcopal	492,300	Congregationalist.	75,350
Catholic	485,123

One denomination owns more than three-eighths of total, two own more than two-thirds, while five hold all but about one-fourteenth of the whole amount.

The total of ecclesiastical property in Atlanta is $1,073,050, of which the Methodists own $349,600; the Baptists, $325.450; Presbyterians, $138,500; Episcopalians. $115,000; Catholics, $64,500; Miscellaneous, $80,000. Idaho.

In 1890 this young state had church property within her borders to the value of only $281,310. Doubtless she has at least doubled that in the last three years. Her most prosperous denominations are these:

Methodist	$74,200	Presbyterian	$40,950
Catholic	70.050	Baptist	27,000
Latter Day Saints	45,560

One denomination owns a little more than one-fourth of the whole amount, and two denominations more than one-half.

Illinois.

The Prairie state givs the churches taxes upon property amounting to $39,715,245. The denominations which profit most by this unconstitutional generosity of Illinois are named below in the order of their culpability:

Catholic	$9,946,819	Evangelical Ass'n	$438,500
Methodist	7,807,118	Unitarian	406,000
Presbyterian	4,649,410	United Brethren	293,475
Baptist	3,681,360	Reformed	272,000

Freethought and Secular Notes from England.

THE PRESENT SITUATION.

The past month has been one of unusual excitement in the political, social, and theological circles of the United Kingdom. One of the greatest prime ministers that England ever had has practically retired from public life; the Cabinet has been reconstructed; the House of Lords, at least in its present form, is doomed; the House of Commons is as vigorous as ever in its energy and determination to carry out democratic measures; the Labor problems are advancing slowly but surely to a sensible solution; the Educational Progressiv party is struggling hard against the machinations of theological bigots; the church is still activ in trying to secure the allegiance of the people by departing from its ancient landmarks and by making desperate efforts to adapt itself to the modern requirements of society; and, finally, the National Secular Society is continuing its dignified and successful propaganda in vindicating the honor of the Secular party and in exposing the shams and unmitigated falsehoods of those who are constantly preaching what they term "the truth as it is in Jesus." While we on this side of the Atlantic recognize and feel proud of the noble Freethought work that is being accomplished in the United States and Canada, we can assure our American and Canadian co-workers that the Secular and Freethought movement in the old country is in a really thriving condition, and its activ toilers are full of hope in consequence of the steady progress that is being made both in London and throughout the provinces. Our favorit motto, "Onward and onward still," is well to the front.

A VERDICT OF GUILTY.

The case of the alleged "Converted Atheist" has now been thoroughly and completely investigated by Mr. G. W. Foote, with the result that the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has been proven, without a shadow of doubt, guilty of a series of the most unblushing falsehoods that ever emanated from a theological brain. The main point in the story is that the supposed "convert" was an Atheist and a prominent speaker in the Secular ranks, but he had, it was said, changed his views and become converted to the Christian faith. Now from the clearest and most indisputable facts, furnished by the father and brother of the hero of this pious fiction, who are professed Christians, also from the testimony of others, it is proved that the principal feature in the case is the utter absence of truth from the whole story. Mr. Foote has written and published a thirty-two-page pamphlet, containing all the evidence bearing upon the subject, in which he supplies overwhelming evidence that the tale concocted by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was a barefaced deception, destitute of one redeeming point.

UNDOUBTED EVIDENCE.

In Mr. Foote's pamphlet he says:

I went down to Northampton and interviewed the family—the father and two brothers of the Atheist Shoemaker. They had important documents in their possession, which they hav since left in my custody. They also gave me a mass of verbal information. The father is a devout Christian, and has conducted a Methodist mission at Northampton. He is a man of simple, honest manners, and strong feelings. Having just read Mr. Holyoake's report and my pamphlet, he deemed it wrong to let the world be longer abused. "Herbert's" brothers are also Christians, and hav never been otherwise. There was never a Freethinker in the family. They are satisfied that the dead son and brother was never an advocate of Atheism. His real name was Charles Alfred Gibson.

The Gibson's were so indignant at Mr. Hughes's conduct that they declared they would do anything I thought advisable. On my invitation they came up to London on Sunday, February 4th, and appeared on the platform at the Hall of Science before a very crowded assembly. Several reporters were present, and reports of the meeting appeared in London papers the next morning. Half way through my own speech I paused to let Mr. Gibson senior giv his own testimony. He said that he was there as a Christian man in the interest of truth, and he branded the Atheist Shoemaker story as a "damnable lie." Mr. Stephen Henry Gibson, the "Atheist brother" of the story, said to hav been converted by the "seraphic death" of Charles Alfred Gibson, also stood up at my request. "Were you ever an Atheist?" I asked him, and he answered, "Never." "Hav you ever been anything but a professed Christian?" Again he answered, "Never."

THE SEQUEL TO THE STORY.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, being convicted upon the clearest evidence, takes shelter in silence. He now discovers that "discretion is the better part of valor," but where does his Christian morality come in? For years he has been deluding the public with a vile fabrication, and now that he has been detected and exposed he makes no attempt to atone for the wrong that he has done. The least he could do would be to try to mitigate the evil he has wrought, by assuring his credulous followers that he had been mistaken. But no; once a sinner he will remain a sinner, probably seeking forgivness through the "atoning sacrifice" of his savior; for,

> While the lamp holds out to burn
> The vilest sinner may return.

In the mean time ample facilities are being employed to let the world know of his guilt and cowardice. Thousands of Mr. Foote's pamphlets are being given away, not only to the general public but also at the slanderer's own meetings. The Freethinkers of this country hav generously subscribed over a hundred pounds to secure a wide and free circulation of this full and complete exposure. No event in connection with the Secular party within my experience has elicited more earnest and united action than the successful effort of the president of the National Secular Society to vindicate the principle of truth and justice. From all parts of the country he has received aid in and approval of the useful work he has done in this matter. Let us hope that the impertinent inventors of "Infidel Death-bed Stories" will learn a lesson from the humiliating fate of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

Notes of Work.

"God in the Constitution" is laid aside for the present; but the "Reform Party" is pressing the District Sunday bill and National Sunday law; and we must meet these issues. It is folly for Liberals to cease doing anything because "God has been knocked out," as the papers report. There are other things fully as dangerous, or more so, than "God," for "God" is but an abstraction; but bigotry is a reality, and rules in the government. Here is an instance brought to my notice by the president of Newark Liberal League:

SMITHSONIAN REPORT SUPPRESSED.

The entire edition of the annual report of the Smithsonian Institute, numbering two thousand copies, will hav to be expurgated before the report sees the light of day. It was discovered just before the report was to be placed in the hands of the binders, that it contained matter that would shock the national idea of orthodoxy.

The objectionable matter was found in two lectures by well-known Washington scientific men—one by Prof. W. G. McGee, of the geological survey, and the other by Prof. Lester Ward, of the Smithsonian Institute.

They were taken from the winter course of Saturday lectures at the National Museum, and the offense in each was trenching on the teachings of the orthodox church. They were accordingly expurgated.

The lecture by Professor Ward was on the "Physiological Man." Professor Ward, in common with a number of modern scientific men, is of the opinion that all mental exhibitions are the result of physiological action, a materialistic view of brain phenomena not exactly in accord with the theory of a distinct indwelling soul principle.

Professor McGee's lecture was more of a popular one, treating of the growth of the earth, its maturity and decline through the ages, as a parallel of the life of an individual; but the general tenor was to cast some doubt on the idea of a special creation, and showed a decided leaning toward the theory of evolution, not an uncommon heresy in these days. Some of the particularly offensiv paragraphs of the lecture suggested the possibility that the theory of evolution would be one day universally accepted, but one of the crowning offenses, which seemed to hav caught even the eye of the copy reader, was the spelling of Creator with a small "c."

It seems that there is an orthodox censorship in the publications of the Smithsonian Institute, which is devoted entirely to science, and science, therefore, is to be expurgated at the demand of the orthodox religion. This certainly is a most humiliating surrender to ignorance and bigotry. Smithsonian Institute is also closed on Sundays, the very day when it should be open, for thousands of the clerks and working people cannot visit it on any other day. Here again we are under the heel of orthodoxy, and a protest should be constantly made against such outrages.

The Press and Platform campaign which I hav outlined is meeting with most favorable support. About a hundred lectures are on the books already in New York, Michigan, Ohio, Iowa, Nebraska, and North Dakota. I expect now to proceed Westward after June 1st through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, and along the Northern Pacific to the Coast. I expect to lecture at Fargo, N. D.; Crookston, Minn.; Fort Maginnis, Mont.; and I hope that Liberals along this route will do the best they can for the work in spite of hard times. Arrange for one lecture at least. In places where two or three Liberals hav to pay expenses I will make special terms if necessary; but I would like as far as possible to carry out the campaign as I hav planned it, for I believe that in this way great good can be accomplished. Write me at once, care of THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Mr. Gladstone's Religion.

Mr. Gladstone's resignation is a fact of religious, as well as political, significance. It will presently be perceived that he has been a great Conservativ influence. Not only has he held Radicalism in check by his unquestionable ascendancy and the glamour of his personality; he has also been a bulwark to the cause of religion. Certainly his defense of the Bible was a p'tiful performance, like his reply to Ingersoll. But that did not matter. Only a handful of people, after all, took the trouble to read the great statesman's apologies for the Christian faith. It was enough that he was on the side of orthodoxy. Christian advocates never tired of exclaiming that the greatest statesman of the age, one of brilliant intellect and unsurpassed eloquence, who led the Liberal party and held the office of prime minister, was a devout Christian, a believer in the inspiration of the Bible, and a subscriber to the cardinal doctrins of all the churches. Such an exclamation, of course, was lost upon persons who had the courage and ability to think for themselvs. But it served the turn with the multitude, who are always prone to be overawed by the authority of "great names."

Now that Mr. Gladstone has resigned, and practically disappeared from the activ political world, we shall hear less and less, and finally nothing, of this cheap argument for Christianity. Mr. Gladstone's successor is not exactly a pious man. Lord Roseberry is essentially a man of the world, with a saving sense of humor. He may profess himself a Christian, but he will never write articles in defense of Christianity. At bottom, he is more a friend of culture than a friend of religion. And when this is taken in conjuntion with the presence in the Cabinet of an open Freethinker like Mr. Morley, it shows that orthodoxy is losing ground in favor of skepticism on the one hand and indifference on the other.

Mr. Gladstone is the last great figure of an old school which has had its day. Neither the Church of England nor the Nonconformist conscience will rule in the future. The secularization of public life grows apace, and the time is not far distant when the very name of God will sound strange in Parliament, despite the attendance of the chaplain. Religious considerations will be dismissed to the sphere of individual privacy, and the language of secular civilization will prevail in all assemblies for the transaction of public business. In another fifty or a hundred years the ostentatious profession of Christianity will be rather a disadvantage than an assistance to statesmen, and he will be most trusted by the people who talks as little as possible about the affairs of any world but this. Even at present there is a certain allowance made for Mr. Gladstone.

His occasional appeals to the almighty are winked at on account of age and personality. A smaller or a younger statesman might be reminded that the almighty's approval or disapproval would make very little difference in the division lobby, and that a month's prayer would be less effectiv than the services of a good whip.

Mr. Gladstone's religion is out of date in the political sphere. Henceforth we shall find it only in churches. And the fact shows how far we hav advanced on the path of national skepticism.—G. W. Foote, in London Freethinker.

Observations.

A Connecticut correspondent of THE TRUTH SEEKER in laying out a plan of campaign for lecturers intimates that the speakers should be men who will work for the good of the cause rather than for the money there is in it. There are two sides to that proposition. A lecturer may work for nothing and get his reward in the spread of truth, but how about the rank and file? Do they not feel an interest in the proceeding; and if they do, how can they display it better than by generously supporting those who are gifted as speakers? Self-sacrifice has its place as a sentiment, but it is impractical and mischievous, for the reason that when one individual works for nothing some other individual gets the benefit without paying for it, which is not only unjust, but unscientific. Every instance of self-sacrifice involves a wrong, and the practice should be discouraged. People who don't want lectures cannot be expected to contribute, but those who do should be willing to pay for them. I don't believe that the correspondent alluded to really wants to see the apostles of Freethought walking about on their uppers and depending upon charitable strangers for their subsistence. One thing is as sure as the sunrise, and that is that men of ability are not going to devote themselvs to any cause whose advocates do not adequately appreciate their services, and I don't blame them a bit.

The other day the Rev. Dr. Buckley had occasion to send to Anthony Comstock some evidences of attempts to swindle by the sale of counterfeit money, and was favored with this reply:

"The matter will receive attention. Since last week Monday we hav reveived over ten thousand such samples."

Dr. Buckley is astonished, and being also impressed by Comstock's great usefulness, proceeds to giv that worthy a very flattering notice. But the editor of the Advocate is not the first to be astounded by Anthony's ability as an exaggerator. In the language of the poet, sublimity is admirable even in a liar.

Almost everybody has a remedy for the state of morals disclosed by the pending breach of promis suit at Washington. The Rev. Dr. Funk, editor of the Voice, says that "it is a serious question whether provision ought not to be made by law for the asexualization of men in certain cases—such men, for instance, as seducers," etc. The good Dr. Funk goes far for a remedy which lies near at hand. Let men of the Breckinridge stamp be at once ordained as clergymen, and made members of the third sex. Then their conduct will not cause surprise, and with a bucket of ecclesiastical whitewash always at hand any little spots upon their character may be readily wiped out and scandal avoided without recourse to the law. But as an ounce of prevention is often more salutary than a pound of cure, Dr. Funk might attest his sincerity by receiving it.

Next comes a lady with her moral specific. Miss Eliza Archibald Connor, addressing the congregation of the Baptist church at Lexington avenue and Twenty-third street last week, said, "If woman had suffrage, that unholy panorama of scandal now unrolling at Washington would hav been unknown." How the enfranchisment of woman would stimulate morals is not apparent, in view of the fact that some men who vote are notoriously bad. Disfranchisment of the male sex, I should say, would be more to the point. And this recalls something that occurred in New Hampshire a good many years ago. There was a regulation to the effect that persons supported wholly or in part by public aid were not allowed to vote. In the community where I lived was a shiftless fellow with a big family of children who applied to the selectmen for relief. He got it, and having seen that the applicant was comfortable, the first selectman, on reaching home, observed to his wife that old Harvey was disfranchised. The good woman was a trifle shocked at first, but said there was one consolation—the town wouldn't hav any more of the Harvey brats to support. Disfranchisment, as she understood it, had a direct influence on conduct.

Governor Tillman of South Carolina is giving the world an object lesson in State Socialism. The state control of the liquor business necessitates the employment of spies to search the houses of citizens. Naturally the citizens object, and the governor calls on the militia to back up the spies. The militia refuse to act, and the governor proclaims martial law, seizes the telegraph lines, and plays the dictator with a high hand. There has already been bloodshed and more is likely to occur.

It is rather creditable to the citizens of South Carolina that they decline to submit to this tyranny. It shows that they know when they hav had enough state interference with their private affairs, and if their revolt calls general attention to the drift in governmental matters, the occurrence will not be altogether a calamity. Probably nobody outside of South Carolina, except, perhaps, the Prohibitionists, believes that any state officer can possibly hav the right to force his way into private houses and search the occupants' trunks, but there are plenty of people who believe in other things just as infamous. For example, there are customs officials on the Canadian border who open express packages addressed to citizens of the dominion, and then exercise their own idiocy with regard to forwarding them. Officials of the same stamp hold up travelers landing at the port of New York and outrage person and property by search and robbery. Immigration commissioners likewise hav a little inquisition of their own, and if they find that an immigrant has had the foresight to provide himself with employment before landing, he is excluded under contract-labor laws. Then we hav the Parkhurst societies, the Gerry societies, and the social purity smellers, and to crown them all, there is the Comstock society with its fingers in the mail bags and its nose in the crack of every bookseller's door. In one way or another, the last barrier that secures safety and privacy to the citizen is torn down, and the whole gang of meddlers comes trooping in. The Tillman despotism is the logical result of the accepted system, for if a United States official may search a traveler's pockets, state officials hav just as good a warrant to dive into his trunk. If Anthony Comstock may stand between the sender of a piece of mail matter and the person to whom it is addressed, then Governor Tillman may capture telegraph lines and dictate every message sent over them. Between these censors with their search warrants and the revolutionary Anarchists with their bombs there is little choice; only it would be more satisfactory if the hanging of each propagandist-by-deed could be supplemented by hustling an "inspector" into the penitentiary.

It is not to be wondered at that the Populist scheme of the initiativ and referendum is growing in favor. Experience is teaching the people that our national legislature cannot be relied upon to pass any measures demanded by the country at large. Indeed, to suggest any reform in laws regulating finance or trade is to invite a year or two of hard times and a business panic like the one that has just been precipitated upon the country by the silver discussion and the tariff bill. Not that there is anything inherently dangerous in those measures, but partisan politics and an unscrupulous press hav used them to discourage prosperity. But I am unable to see how the initiativ and referendum would help matters; for what the country needs is not legislation so much as a suspension of activity in that direction. The faith of the average citizen in the power of law to adjust all misfits is at once simple and touching. Whether the question relates to catching fish out of season, to marriage and divorce, to running a railroad, to business depression, to matters of faith, or to personal habits, we are always ready to prescribe a law. Of course we all know that no law passed since the war has afforded any relief or led to any beneficent adjustment of difficulties, but that doesn't shake our faith in statutory law or lessen the acuteness of the legislating mania which possesses us; only now we are convinced that if we take the law-making power out of the hands of the small mob at Washington, and lodge it with the big mob spread over the country, the end sought for will be obtained. I take that notion alongside without hoisting it aboard. To my mind the problem is how to get rid of these fellows who insist on legislating. Possibly the abolition or reform of the English House of Lords will convince the American Senate that it no longer has any reason for continued existence, and the members will go home. Then maybe we can get the lower House to attend the Pollard-Breckinridge trial in a body, when a number of high-school girls could be turned loose among them, and that would settle our Congressmen, especially the elderly and pious ones. To complete the happiness of the country, it would only be necessary that the state legislatures adjourn never to meet again this side the grave, while the various capitol buildings are turned into asylums for the reception of the lunatics who insist upon more legislation, popular or otherwise.

I am grieved to notice that Gen. M. M. Trumbull, the Open Court's frisky contributor. has fallen into the vacuum which ex-Mayor Hewitt created when he discussed the Bland Seigniorage bill. True, the bill is now a thing of the passed and vetoed, but that does not license anyone to slander it. De mortuis nil nisi bonum—always speak highly of the recently deceased. The facts are that the government issued silver certificates redeemable in silver dollars of 412½ grains of silver and that having set aside silver bullion to redeem its promises, the government has silver enough remaining to coin some fifty-five million standard dollars. That is seigniorage, and it is as material as the bricks that a contractor may hav remaining after building a house. The only vacuum made apparent is the one existing in that particular part of Mr. Hewitt's system which should generate thought.

It seems to me that General Trumbull deals with effect instead of cause when he says that the coining and redemption of silver is "the logical folly of the 'legal tender' system;" for "once allow government the power to declare gold, silver, or anything else a legal tender in payment of debts, and the way is open for wildcat finance unlimited." I suggest to the general that he review that notion and see if he cannot find that the legal collection of debt lies at the root of the matter. The state having undertaken the enforcement of private contracts, the establishment of a legal tender for the discharge of such contracts would appear to be positivly necessary. There is no sense in a government declaring that a debt shall be paid and saying nothing about the kind of money it shall be paid in. The repeal of all laws looking to the enforcement of Shylock's demand for his pound of flesh must precede the abolition of the "legal tender folly," and a man of Commander Trumbull's perspicacity ought to see it.

Lectures and Meetings.

FRANKLIN STEINER'S lecture engagements are as follows:

April 1, Alliance, O.	April 10, New Ross, Ind.
" 3-6, Eaton, O.	" 13, 14, Toledo, O.
" 8, Dayton, O.	" 15, Detroit, Mich.
" 8, Cincinnati. O.	" 21,22, Mt. Pleasant, Ia.
" 9, Petersburg, Ind.	" 24, Eddyville, Ia.

THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome. Program for April:

April 10th—"Evils of the Sweating System." Miss Diana Hirschler.

April 17th—"Walt Whitman as Man and Poet." Thomas Harned, Esq.

THE Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia meets Sundays at 2.30 and 7.30 P.M. in Warner Hall, near Green and Broad streets.

April 8th, Henry Rowley. 2 30 P.M—"Has Man a Soul?" 7.30 P.M.—"The Christian Scheme of Salvation."

THE Manhattan Liberal Club meets every Friday evening in German Masonic Hall, 220 East 15th street, New York, at 8 o'clock. Program for April:

April 6th—"The Wheel of Life." Mrs. Mary Shepherd Singer.

April 13th—"Women as Citizens Essential to American Institutions." Judge Noah Davis.

April 20th—"Truth About Hawaii." Clinton Furbish.

S. P. PUTNAM'S lecture engagements are as follows:

Boston, Mass., April 8th.
East Dennis, Mass., April 15th.
Brooklyn Philosophical Association, May 13th.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for April.

April 8th - "What Labor demands of the Constitutional Convention." Edward King.

LAST Sunday at the Brooklyn Philosophical Association Mrs. Mary Shepherd Singer spoke on "The Fall of Man from a Scientific Standpoint." It was an interesting and able lecture, delivered in the lady's usual charming manner. She regards the Bible's fall of man as a myth, but supposes that at some period of time there existed a race of perfect people, who, in their attempts to raise those below them, fell from their state of perfection—this being the fall.

THAT earnest Liberal, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., will talk about "Microbes, Good and Bad, What They Do for Us," before The Science Sermons Society, in the lecture-room of Rev. Robert Collyer's church, Park avenue and Thirty-fourth street, on Sunday, April 8th, at 7.45 P.M.

THE Ohio Liberal Society meets in College Hall, 168½ Walnut street, Cincinnati, Sunday evenings at 7:45, prompt. Admission is free. Program for April:

April 8th—"Infidelity Defended Against the Christian Pulpit." Franklin Steiner.

April 15th—"Thomas Jefferson." Dr. E. S. McLeod.

Letters of Friends.

And Yet a Little More Work.

WHITEHALL, WIS., March 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find order for $1, for which please send me five copies of the "Age of Reason." I want to do a little more missionary work before I lay me down to sleep, and when that time comes I hav a stanch old friend in the person of B. F. Wing, who will be ready to take up the gauntlet when I lay it down.

Yours fraternally, CHAS. A. ECKER.

Anyone Can Comprehend It.

DE GOLIA, PA., March 15, 294.

MR. EDITOR: I am delighted with "Design Argument Fallacies." This great delusion is explained in language anyone can comprehend. Most writers use too big words, too vague phrases, supposing that as they know what they mean others will, forgetting that the masses are "mostly fools."

Please send Otto Wettstein's "Giant Delusion" and catalog of his other works, if any. MRS. LOTTIE FOSTER.

To Make the Country Fit for Habitation.

EDGEWOOD, ALA., March 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose the amount due on THE TRUTH SEEKER, and for another year's subscription. I hav been a long way behind, but could not well help it, having just got money that was due me more than a year ago. I hav always paid a hundred cents on a dollar and think that I shall while I liv. I am long past three score and ten years, and crippled with rheumatism; am not able to do much. I do not take the paper as much for my own benefit as I do to distribute it in this priest-ridden country for the benefit of others and make it a safe place in which to liv. There are a number of people here who do not believe in the churches, but help support them and keep their families in the church. There is no use of wasting ammunition on them. I hav been the means of getting you two new subscribers in this vicinity, and will probably get some more if money matters improve. Hard times here. I hand you order for $9.46.

L. PULSIFER.

As All Rivers to the Ocean.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., March 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Robert G. Ingersoll lectured here on the 15th to a full house on the subject of "Shakspere." It was the first distinctiv Freethought lecture that had been even reasonably patronized and listened to by our people, and will hav a great and widespread influence. The lecture, when printed, should be distributed by the million. It is incomparable! While it yields to Shakspere that "the thoughts of others that flowed to him, as all rivers to the ocean, were purified of all things crude and rough, and yielded back to them, as by returning rivers, to all lands," from this mighty Shaksperean ocean—the grandest utterances of the ages—these, thus gathered and combined and again diffused to the world, are here, by Ingersoll, expanded, etherealized, and illumined, filling all minds and the surrounding constellations with an all-pervading light and intelligence, expelling ignorance, darkness, and all crime—a wonderful character, a most wonderful elucidation. J. W. JAMES.

Truth Concealers too Abundant.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 22, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav received the sample copy of your paper and read it with much interest. I hav been a truth seeker myself for a good many years, but as truth concealers are so abundant in this world, the article does not circulate freely enough to suit me. The fact is, I had no idea that such a paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER was published. Imagin my surprise and pleasure to find so many of my own opinions so well expressed in this number.

I but recently, and on previous occasions, had a similar experience to that of Mr. Erwin Auffurth, who, I see by his published letter, is a resident of this city. The Truth, Times-Democrat, and Picayune refused to publish one of my contributions offered them, because I assailed some of the questionable methods of Christianity, although they frequently publish my contributions on other matters.

Please send me THE TRUTH SEEKER one year. Inclosed find order for $3.

Yours respectfully S. S. BRYAN.

Good Work for the Remonstrance.

WHITEHALL, WIS., March 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3.10, for which send me the books mentioned on inclosed slip. The torch of Liberty still burns in this vicinity in spite of the ignorant and domineering privileged class. In counting noses in this community one is likely to underestimate the number of Liberal-minded men, but in this town of less than four hundred inhabitants we got the signatures of seventy-five male adults to a petition remonstrating against the God-in-the-Constitution amendment, and even then we did not get all the signatures that we might hav obtained, owing to the limited time that the petition was in circulation. I wish every town in the United States had done as well. The Judiciary Committee probably would not hav been so fast in declining to hear Freethought arguments after they were presented. I am pleased that our Putnam is there with his heavy artillery, and I will shortly send him a contribution from his friends here.

Yours truly, CHAS. A. ECKER.

Working With the Remonstrance.

WEST SUTTON, MASS., March 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking a little out-door exercise would be beneficial to me, I cut out petitions from THE TRUTH SEEKER, and attaching sheets of paper thereto, started out one bright morning to secure signatures for the same among the people of this village. I succeeded in getting names of fifty-eight persons, fifteen of whom are church members and one a deacon. I presented the petition to the Baptist minister, Rev. W. D. MacKinnon, a nativ of Nova Scotia, and asked him for his signature. He said that he had read the proposed amendment over carefully, and thought that any person who was not an Infidel could hav no objections to it, therefore he could not sign the petition. I then asked him if it would not be hypocritical to say, "We, the people of the United States, devoutly acknowledging," etc., and referred him to the Unitarians, who do not acknowledge Christ as God. His answer was, "Majority rules." The next day in church he read the proposed amendment to his congregation, and told them that two-thirds of the people who had signed the petition did not understand what they had done, and advised them to withdraw their names. (A very unjust reflection on the mental caliber of his members who had signed the petition.)

After listening to him, some wondered if they had committed an unpardonable sin. Yours for justice and liberty,

LUCY W. PHELPS.

Now the Lecturers Can Talk to Him.

NORWALK, CONN., March. 16, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I take the liberty to make the following suggestions in the interest of Freethought lecturers:

1st. That lecturers visit every town of any size on the lines of their tours through the states.

2d. Get from the different Freethought publication offices the names of Freethinkers who are subscribers to said publi cations on the lines of said tours,

3d. And suggest to them that if they procure a suitable hall and properly advertise, a lecture will be given, for which an admission fee of ten cents will be charged.

4th. That the Freethought Federation of America place twenty lecturers in the field the coming winter—men who are willing to sacrifice something for the cause of Freethought. As the growth of the Methodist church was due to circuit riders ministering to the people, so Freethought men must go into the field with the good of the cause in view and not for the money they may get out of it.

5th. The above suggestions, if put in practice, would enable all small places to hav at least six to eight lectures during the winter months. The present system is not beneficial to the cause; many Freethinkers hav become discouraged, owing to the slow progress Freethought is making in this country.

The above is written in the interest of the Freethought cause. A. B. BENNETT.

The Truth Seeker Breaks New Ground.

RUSHVILLE, ILL., March 13, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $10—one new subscription, my own renewal and "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," "Answers to Christian Questions," and the "Age of Reason."

I did not hav to do any soliciting in getting the new subscriber. It is not necessary when one meets such good, frank, large-hearted people as Dr. Clark.

We hav a small sprinkling of Freethinking people here, but, as usual, they are not in a position where they dare express themselvs openly. I should like to hav Brother Putnam come here and deliver several of his lectures, but owing to the fact that I am a comparativ stranger here it will be impossible for us to do so the first year of his coming tour. Yet if we cannot get him here we all hope that the lecture course will be a success. I think it is one of the best methods of overcoming the old superstitious dogmas and spreading those truths which go to liberate the minds of people.

I shall try to get you several more new subscribers before long. The existence of THE TRUTH SEEKER was not known at this place before I came here six months ago. I am sending my paper to every one who is willing to hav the scales removed.

Hoping that this much may be appreciated, I am, Most respectfully,

DR. D. W. BOTTORF.

Briefly but Strongly Stated.

RENSSELAER FALLS, N. Y., Mar. 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: As you are doubtless aware, the New York Press for some months past has been publishing letters on Christianity, Agnosticism, Atheism, etc. The following letter, however, which I sent them on the 7th inst. for some unknown reason fails to appear:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Press, Sir: Who can tell the first great cause of all things? The Agnostic, after investigating the subject, frankly says he does not know. The Christian claims to know and calls it "God," and says that the Bible is his revelation to man.

Now, what we see in these days of scientific truth is the manifestation of the natural. In the barbarous past supernatural displays of ghosts, witches, visions, etc., were of frequent occurrence, but in these days of general education they are seen no more. Let us examin briefly the two main pillars of this revelation, which are the very foundation of the Christian religion, viz.: "Fall of man" and "Salvation through Christ."

In the first six verses of the third chapter of Genesis an account is given of a serpent holding conversation with a woman (Eve), thereby causing her to sin. That is to say, the dogma of the "fall of man" is based upon the assertion that a serpent could talk.

If this was found in the Koran or in the Hindoo bible instead of his own, what would the Christian say about it?

Again, the dogma of "salvation through Christ" is based upon the declaration of his divinity. But how do we know that Christ was divine? We know it by Joseph's dream: "Behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David," etc. (Matt. i, 20).

That is to say, the Christian has as a basis for his religion, or divine revelation, two dogmas—one based upon the assertion that a serpent had the power of human speech and the other upon a dream.

Is it possible that a revelation having the above for a foundation came from the source of all truth? If not, then the Christian knows no more about "God" than the Agnostic.

C. C. VAN WATERS, M. D.

An Opportunity for Co-operation.

MARVEL, O., March 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $6.25, your dues for THE TRUTH SEEKER. If but one paper comes to my house that paper must be THE TRUTH SEEKER. But, like many others of your readers, I can scarcely afford it. I liv in Bloom township, Wood county, northwestern Ohio—the oil and gas regions—and own three and three-quarters acres between two gas wells a little over one-half mile apart. Oil and gas hav been developed all about my place. I would like to drill a well on my land, but cannot do so on account of the cost and the lack of money. The wells are drilled to a depth of from one thousand to fifteen hundred feet; cost from one to two thousand dollars, and are worth from nothing up to and exceeding fifty thousand dollars. The city of Fostoria owns one such, a well about seven miles to the southeast of me, and greater wells hav been found to the northwest, while some wells are nothing but salt water and others hav been found perfectly dry holes. This enterprise is much of a lottery; some men with thousands of dollars hav been broken up, while others, with barely enough to drill one well, hav been made independently rich. I would like to fix the amount of stock that any one person might hold at one dollar, and I will open a record for that purpose and place the name and post-office address of each and forward a copy of the same to THE TRUTH SEEKER each week, which would be an acknowledgment of the receipt of one dollar for the purpose of drilling for gas or oil, and if sufficiently encouraged will commence operations by May 1st. I would expect to retain one-sixth royalty of the product of the well, that being the customary price of a lease; the remaining five-sixths to be placed to the credit of the stockholders and a dividend struck and remitted at the end of each quarter after the beginning of operations. One dollar in the undertaking may be a dollar lost and it may pay your subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER for a year or for three or five years. I will head the list with a dollar for my wife, one for each of my two children, one for myself, and one donated to the Truth Seeker Company, the proceeds to be used for the cause of Freethought. Three hundred such families will drill the well and donate three hundred dollars in stock to the cause of Freethought, which might become a powerful auxiliary to the cause of liberty.

I will close with the promis to giv you all the items of interest as the work goes on, and pledge my word and honor to be faithful and honest, which is the highest oath I can take. I was born in 1854, hav lived in this place for twenty-five years, hav been township clerk for ten years, and go out this spring at my own request. I believe I hav the business qualifications to carry out the proposition made, and hav implicit confidence in my Freethought friends, trusting them farther than I can see them, thereby doing as I wish to be done by. As a reference of identity I refer you to Samuel Bower, of North Baltimore, O. (the nearest TRUTH SEEKER subscriber I know of, and he is seven or eight miles distant), and this, too, without his knowledge or consent. Nothing ventured nothing made. Who will lend a helping hand?

Yours for money, Freethought, and liberty. W. H. DENNIS.

Joseph Van Hoeter.—Putnam's Address.

GRASS VALLEY, CAL., March 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: It is by request of Mr. S. P. Putnam that I send you the inclosed clippings from Grass Valley papers about the death of my husband, Joseph Van Hoeter.

I expected that Putnam would let you know; but it seems he did not receive my first letter, in which I informed him of the receipt of the funeral address which he wrote, and Mr. Van Hoeter's death. It arrived an hour before he passed away. To-day I got an answer to a second letter to him, which also seems to hav been delayed more than a week. In Mr. Van Hoeter Grass Valley has lost the only independent, aggressiv Freethought expounder. I do not doubt that the seeds he has sown will propagate some.

Mournfully, MRS. P. VAN HOETER.

Says the Grass Valley Union:

Joseph Van Hoeter, deceased, was a warm-hearted, genial old gentleman, and his many virtues won him many friends. He was independent and often expressed himself forcibly, but still he had respect for other people's opinions. The deceased was born in Brussels, Belgium, Oct. 18, 1819, of a highly respectable family. He leaves an aged wife and two grown sons—one in San Francisco and the other in Oregon.

The Grass Valley Telegraph's repo t follows, including the address written by Samuel P. Putnam:

This afternoon the remains of Joseph Van Hoeter, were laid away in the grave in Greenwood cemetery. The services were held in the house on Upper Main street, and were carried out in accordance with the wishes of deceased. A male quartette, consisting of Messrs. Moore, Argail, Opie, and Glasson, rendered appropriate music, Mrs. Wm. Moore officiating at the organ.

Mr. A. Burrows most impressivly read the following address:

Our friend has passed away! Whatever may be the mystery of the darkness we call death, we hav no fear but that which is right in this world must be always right, and duty well-performed is sure of happiness wherever the path may be. Our friend and companion in this life has helped to giv happiness to those around him; he has been a worker in the fields of time; he has joined himself to the ranks of humanity and stood faithfully by his post; he has done his share in the service of mankind; and to him is the victory as we now lay him in the grave. His life is the best monument, illuminated by truth, honesty, devotion, and love. A husband and a father, he has proved himself pure and honorable; as a neighbor he has won respect and given sympathy; as a citizen he has labored for justice, liberty, order, and progress.

In our universal humanity, in the harmony and glory of the universe itself, we find our hopes for the dead. We giv them to the bosom of that eternal nature from which they sprang—nature, which givs her sunshine and her flowers to all alike and whose countless paths lead to the same goal for the greatest and the least.

Ours is a common sorrow, and none can escape the dark hour, and therefore are we bound together in the common ties of deepest affections; together we must liv and together we must pass into the infinit beyond.

Let us look upon our friend as still living in our hearts and memories. Let us cherish all his deeds of kindness. He has indeed added to the happiness of this world. He has done what he could to decrease the misery in it. A life of simple usefulness is better than any shining crown or golden stream of wealth. "Do your duty" is the lesson of this hour. Let us not be made weak by the gloom of death. Let us see in it the stars that shall shed their mild influence on our onward course. Our friend sleeps beneath the canopy of heaven like a babe in its mother's bosom—a sweet sleep unbroken by the storm and conflict. To those who are near and dear to him, to his wife who has been by his side for so many years in the joys of home, and who knows but to love the nobility of his character; to his children who revere and mourn a beloved parent; to these we would giv the consolation of our presence, of our honor for the dead; our appreciation of his services, and tender memory of his manly and generous deeds amidst the good and evil fortune of our community, our state, and our nation.

We do not perish any of us, forgotten, if we strive to liv to help others. We do not shrink into nothingness; but into the great stream of humanity passes the effect of our lives. As we gather here let us be animated by this sublime truth—let us not be haunted by the fears of superstition; let us not tremble as if in the presence of some unknown tyrant; let us not bow in despair and agony and terror; let us be brave and hopeful; let us recognize the greatness of our being; let us be upright and free and aspiring, even in the face of death itself. Let us see an added dignity and beauty in life because of this universal sorrow.

We must depend on one another. It is in humanity itself that we find our greatest solace, our greatest strength. No superhuman power has ever come from the breaking heavens to help our toiling and struggling world. We ourselvs must plant the seed, and we ourselvs must reap the golden harvest; we ourselvs must make a paradise here and every man must be his own providence, his own divinity, and his own redeemer. Such is the lesson which our friend teaches from the silent tomb, a lesson for the living and the future.

We cannot change the past; it is like marble, and no hand can alter its lines engraved.

But the future is like an ocean. It is rolling before us, and we can shape our voyage. Let us look forward with hope. We may sink in death, but we can leave behind a beautiful memory. Our words and deeds can giv cheer to many a weary one, and we can illuminate the darkness of death with the torch of reason, the flames of liberty and human progress. We can broaden the blue skies of truth and enlarge the harvest of man's toil.

Farewell, friend and brother! Over the couch of everlasting rest we place the flowers of hope and memory. We giv thee the sad tribute of our tears; but no shadow of fear is in our breast. Whatever is good and beautiful in nature will be thine—if a sleep, a dreamless sleep, soft as the waves that sink in the bright bosom of ocean's depths.

If thou awakest it will be to virtue, to happiness, and to progress. The fruit of our life we take with us, unto our further toil and reward as we pursue life's checkered journey.

Peace to thee, and peace to us, as with undaunted spirit we so learn to labor and to wait—

"That to-morrow
Find us farther than to-day."

Majorities Cannot Enact Religions.

CALISTOGA, CAL., March 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I see in my last TRUTH SEEKER a heading for a petition to Congress asking it to reject the proposed God-in-the-Constitution amendment. There is not a doubt in my mind that such an amendment is unwise and unjust, and is against the principles of a free and independent people; and, as you say, will lead us step by step until we hav a complete union of church and state; then, good-by to our liberties; we will be thrown back upon the track of progress at least one thousand years.

These unscrupulous meddlers of the church are seeking to fortify their rotten, absurd, and decaying dogmas by getting them fraudulently incorporated in the fundamental laws of our land. I regret very much to see this thing being forced upon us, but it is surely being done, and is being done in such a way that the masses of the people cannot help themselvs. And the reason is, we no longer hav anything to say in regard to the making of the laws. Political parties and political bosses arrange and manipulate the elections so that their tools or their friends are elected to office. With a few rare exceptions, our legislators are men seeking solely for self-aggrandizement and the almighty In-God-we-trust dollar. They are professional politicians, and in order to succeed they will sell their honor to rings, combines, and trusts. With such men at the helm of state, what are we to expect? Such men are easily influenced to vote for any measure; you never see a politician with honest, open convictions which he dares to express; he is always ready to secure the largest vote, or the longest purse, and will fall easily on either side of the fence. They cannot be trusted. With a majority of our representativs made up of such material, what will petitions avail us? No matter if our cause is just, one wily politician can upset the petitions of one million honest men. If the number of petitioners is to decide the case, what hope hav we against the villains and perjurers who will send in more petitioners from a single state than there are men, women, and children in that state, as was done by the Christians in their petitions to close the World's Fair on Sunday? With an honest Congress, one such example should hav condemned the whole Christian scheme; but it did not. These Christian schemers, with many of their friends in high office—Brother Ben, John, and others—told these political tricksters that if they refused to vote for the bill, the churches would boycott them at the polls. And the political boss was also brought to bear. It is a well known fact that the ministers, the priests, and the churches, the money bags, the millionaires, hav always been a unit as against the common people who earn an honest living by honest toil. The churches hav ever upheld the oppressor. They do not hesitate to enter into league with despotism or the devil for the sake of more power. This is the charge of the Protestants against the Catholics, and the same compliment is returned by the Catholics with much truth and propriety, while the people who do not believe their falsehoods, hypocrisies, and shams are left between the devil (churches) and the deep sea. Between the politicians, money sharpers, bankers, and the preachers, the people hav very little show. Our rights hav been stolen, our substance squandered, and our political and religious liberty destroyed. Our representativs, or, more properly, our misrepresentativs in Congress, pass laws for classes, combines, and rings without so much as saying to the people, By your leave.

Did they ask the people whether they favored the National Banking system? Whether they desired to fund our currency into interest-bearing bonds? Whether they favored the giving of the public domain to corporations, along with hundreds of millons of dollars? Whether they favored the demonetization of silver, and the establishment of a single gold standard for the payment of all debts? Did they ask the people whether they favored the further destruction of silver as money by the repeal of the Sherman law, without any provision for coinage? Did they ask the people whether they should issue more bonds to make debt slaves of our children and their children?

No, no, no, never! They don't do the business that way. Did they ask the people if they wanted a Sunday law? Certainly not. Will they, or dare they, submit this God-in-the-Constitution clause to a direct vote of the people? No, never! Do they dare to submit any, or all, of the damnable list I hav named to a direct vote of the people? If they had done so in the first place, those laws would never hav disgraced our statutes and robbed our people.

Now, my brother Liberals, do you not think it time the people were seeking to restore their rights? Do you not believe that a direct vote of the people is the best way to settle these important questions? Now, let me ask you candidly, Are you not willing to submit the Sunday law and the God-in-the-Constitution amendment to a direct vote of the people of the United States? Havn't you sufficient confidence in the intelligence of the people to demand that they by their own votes shall decide under what laws they shall liv?

The despot, the priest, the politician, the money lord, and the landlord, hav always been above the people; the people hav never had a fair show; and I say now, let us unite upon one proposition: Let us demand that every law by which the people are to be governed shall be submitted direct to the people, to be ratified or rejected by the people; let the majority of all the votes decide every question. I hav such confidence in the intelligence of the people, even in my plodding working brother, that, when given the chance, he will assert his manhood by voting for the interest of himself, his wife, and children. The interest of the least among us is the interest of all. The moment I am convinced that the people cannot be trusted to make their own laws, I shall say good-bye to liberty and free institutions. It is not so! I hav faith in my fellow-man; the Knights of Labor, be it said to their glory, hav decided in favor of direct legislation by the people. All labor organizations, the farmers' and industrial unions, are falling in line; they recognize the fact that representativ legislation is a delusion and a fraud; we can talk, petition, and pray our representativs, but it does us no good. I hav persisted in that line of procedure along with others whose intentions were equally good. Twenty-five years has convinced me we are wrong; we hav been teaching the people; but for all this I see the priests of religion allied with the professional and unscrupulous politician and step by step our liberties hav been encroached upon and the shackles of religious intolerance are being drawn around us. If we had been able to see the right course and pursue it we might to-day hav been leaders instead of followers. Let us not stand longer alone where we can accomplish nothing; let us join in earnest, hand in hand with the great industrial classes—work, talk, and vote with them for direct legislation through the system of the initiativ and referendum.

We hav, as Liberals, always claimed the equal rights of all and opposed class legislation, and I believe the only way to secure that end is by the people making their own laws—by direct legislation. This givs every man an equal chance. I do not fear the results; we can go on educating the people and thereby improve our condition. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," is certainly a true saying, and I hav been broken on that rack for twenty-five years. We elect officers and representativs who at once become our masters and exercise despotic sway over us. We are ever on the alert to prevent them passing bad laws—and they do pass about ten bad laws for every good one. Let us take their power away; let us reserve the law-making power in the hands of the people, and this eternal strain will cease. There is no argument against the principles of direct legislation, wherein every law, every appropriation, and every national undertaking shall be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection. I am ready and willing to sign a petition to Congress to submit the Sunday law, the God-in-the-Constitution amendment, taxation of all property, and every other question of national importance, to a direct vote of all the people, and for that end I am ready to work and vote.

R. F. GRIGSBY.

[Our friend is decidedly in earnest, but in his enthusiasm he has overlooked some very important facts. We are confronted now with the menace of the Christian amendment. It cannot be settled by the referendum, because it is an amendment. All amendments to the Constitution can be adopted and ratified only as provided in the Constitution itself. Any proposed amendment to the Constitution must receive a two-thirds majority in both houses of Congress. It then goes to the states for ratification or rejection. It may be voted upon by the legislatures of the states or by conventions chosen for that purpose. Which course will be pursued in any case depends upon Congress. Under the Constitution that body can choose either method. Hitherto all amendments to the Constitution hav been submitted to the legislatures of the states. An amendment is ratified when three-fourths of the legislatures or of the conventions, as the case may be, vote for it. The pending Christian amendment will be submitted to conventions, if the theocrats can hav their way, as they evidently think that in very many districts no man would dare stand, in the face of the church influence, on a platform opposed to the recognition of God in the Constitution and ask voters to cast their ballots for him as a delegate to the convention. And we think they are right. It will be much cheaper to defeat these traitors in committee of Congress or on the floor than elsewhere. The average of intelligence is higher there than among the masses. To make that intelligence act for us it is necessary that we show our power at the hearings, by arguments, letters, telegrams, and petitions. A determined minority can do much more in legislativ halls than it can on a direct issue at the ballot-box. What is needed is to show Representativs and Senators that if they vote to subvert the Constitution we will use our balance of power against them at the polls. That is, if the present member from your district votes for this amendment or for a Sunday law, vote against him if he stands for reëlection, no matter what other principles he represents that you accept. There are hundreds of districts where the vote between the parties is so close that a few hundred Freethinkers can turn the scale.

No, we do not want to be governed by majority votes in religious matters; the fathers wisely provided against any such hell upon earth by the original Constitution and the first amendment thereto. Religious liberty is too precious a thing to be made the shuttle-cock of contending parties. We, as Freethinkers, absolutely deny the right of any majority to enact a Sunday law or any other piece of religious legislation. These things are without the domain of politics, direct or representativ, and only because the Christian violators of the Constitution hav forced the issue are we making this fight in Congress and through the press. We want the Constitution to remain as it is. We are under no obligation to submit the question to any body of men nor to all the people. The one thing to be done is to kill the amendment in the quickest way possible. Self-defense is the primary right. We must educate the people, it is true, and that is what we are doing as fast as we can, but that is something entirely different from putting our heads into the lion's mouth. Faith in the people is all right, in its way, but it will not do to forget that the people's government is what they make it. They are not fooled so often as they fool themselvs. Religious legislation is unconstitutional. No man's property or liberty is safe when it is permitted. It is no part of our duty as citizens to giv a Christian majority in any city or state of the nation an opportunity to force a Sunday law upon us or the Bible into the schools by a direct vote or any other. They hav no right to vote such laws. We must protect ourselvs.—ED. T. S.]

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Adam Never Was a Boy.

Of all the men the world has seen
Since time his round began,
There's one I pity every day—
Earth's first and foremost man,
And then I think what fun he missed
By failing to enjoy
The wild delights of yonthtime, for
He never was a boy,

He never stubbed his naked toe
Against a root or stone;
He never with a pin hook fished
Along the brook alone.
He never sought the bumble bee
Among the daisies coy,
Nor felt it's business end, because
He never was a boy.

He never hooky played. nor tied
The ever ready pail
Down in the alley all alone
To trusty Fido's tail.
And when he home from swimming came
His happiness to cloy
No slipper interfered, because
He never was a boy.

He never cut a kite string, no!
He never hid an Easter egg;
He never ruined his pantaloons
A-playin' mumble peg;
He never from the attic stole
A coon hunt to enjoy,
To find the old man watching, for
He never was a boy.

I pity him. Why should I not?
I even drop a tear;
He did not know how much be missed,
He never will, I fear.
And when the scenes of "other days"
My growing mind employ
I think of him—earth's only man
Who never was a boy.

The Inquirendo Club—I.

"We ought to do something to improve our minds," declared Florence. Considerably startled by the vehement tone from too usually inert Florence, our little company glanced in a surprised way towards her, where, reclining languidly in the oaken rocker, she seemed to fully merit her brother's satirical remark: "Supposing you set the example?"

Even Aunt Margaret appeared interested. "You are quite right, Florence. But what do you propose to do?"

"That's right, auntie," said Arthur, "an inducement for such a prodigious task is sine qua non." Arthur prided himself on Latin. "Now, Florrie."

"If you will keep still for a moment," said Florence, "I will tell you. What do you think of organizing a club?"

"Good!"

The vote was unanimous. Florence looked pleased, but soon after assumed a comical expression of dismay, as the questions immediately followed in breathless haste:

"Where will you hav it?" "What will you call it?" "When will you start it?" "Will it be held during 'wee sma'' hours?" This was from Arthur, of course. "And will you throw in refreshments and cigars—apropos of 'inducements?'" he added wickedly.

"What is it for?" and "who will you hav?" asked the younger children. Aunt Margaret looked amused, but said quietly that it was a very good idea."

"Gracious!" cried Florence, "what a perfect tornado of queries. I think you will all prove excellent members, judging from your ability to ask questions."

"Now, listen," she commanded, "while I explain. Since I could not possibly answer your interrogations, even were I to try, I will tell you of my plan just as I hav thought it out. It will be a reading club. We will hav readings and recitations about important subjects bearing upon science, art, and literature. But the name will be 'The Inquirendo Club,' suggested from Hudor Genone's book, 'Inquirendo Island.' Because the object of the club is to instruct; and I think it cannot be done better than by asking questions and studying up answers. We will hav a 'query-box,' which will be used for the purpose of receiving notes and queries deposited during the week. Our club will meet every Saturday afternoon, at which time we will open the box and answer the queries. If there be too many (and I foresee from former notes that the possibility is obvious) we will hav to let them go until next time. But if we hav only one or two questions upon entertaining and instructiv subjects—what we might call feasible subjects—our club will be a success. Now, do you all understand?" she asked, leaning back and surveying her little audience with self-satisfaction beaming in every feature and through her half-closed eyelids.

Before anyone could reply Arthur exclaimed in mock admiration: "So well do we understand and appreciate that the question arises in our bewildered minds, 'How one small head could carry all she knew?'"

After the laughter had subsided, Aunt Margaret said by way of approval: "Florence's plan is an excellent one, and offers a splendid opening for some good work and earnest thinking. If sufficient interest can be stimulated among our little group for such a purpose, it cannot help having a beneficial effect, even if we do not realize all the advantages we hope to. Our club will be a philosophical one, as well as interesting, for to present questions and analyze the various forms of literature, art, and science is the best phase of philosophy—the most perfect. I would also suggest that little preparatory essays be written by each member of the club upon some good subject, to be read before us at each meeting. Prizes can be awarded for the best essay, if you choose. It will cultivate a taste for writing and improve your composition."

She paused for a moment, and Mrs. Mass, who had come into the drawing-room—an interested listener—now seized the opportunity to announce what she had been wanting to for the last ten minutes: "I think you had better adjourn to the dining-room, as supper has been waiting some time."

They all arose and followed, a little noisily, into the next room. Arthur wanted to know with such evident anxiety who were the officers for the new club that they had to decide to hav the meeting held the following Saturday.

Correspondence.

DAIRY, OR., Feb. 11, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON AND FRIENDS OF THE CORNER: I will attempt to tell you of the Dairy religion.

We had protracted meetings here lasting a week, and I went once and the preacher would jump high and make all kinds of motions and every once in a while he would say, "ha yay." I don't know what he meant unless he was consulting the Lord in Dutch. Do all the preachers say that? If so, why? We hav not had anybody join in this precinct. They powwowed around some of the people here, but that is all the good it did. Hoping this is not too long, I will close.

Yours truly JIMMY MCCOUGAL.

LEE, N. D., Feb. 7, 1894.

DEAR FRIEND MISS WIXON: As I hav not seen any letters from this part of the country, I thought I would write: Mamma and papa are Freethinkers, and I am, too. I hav two brothers, Willie and Guy, and and I hav two sisters, Agnes and Elma, and they are Freethinkers also. I study reading, arithmetic, grammar, geography, physiology, and spelling, and I am eleven years old. We are having very nice weather here now. We are the only Freethinkers around here. We try to show THE TRUTH SEEKER to people, but we can not get them to read it. They are so afraid of it that they could not be more so if it were poison. Will some of the Freethinkers please write to me, and I will answer. I must close. Hoping this will escape the waste-basket, I remain,

Your Liberal Friend,
NELLIE GERTRUDE RUKKE.

[A good word from a true-hearted Liberal girl.—ED. C. C.]

BANGOR, MICH., Feb. 14, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I hav got well acquainted with you by reading it. I liv on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan, in the center of the great fruit belt, where peaches, pears, and apples grow in abundance. It is indeed a lovely country, especially in fruit time. Most all the fruit is shipped to Chicago.

Father and mother were at the fair while you were there, but did not see you.

Christianity is not thriving very well here. This is not the soil to raise Christians on, they grow better on poor soil. To educate, Liberalize, and civilize seems to be the best object in this life of the school to which we belong.

I would like to write more, but dare not for fear of the waste-basket, as this is my first attempt to correspond with you. Hoping to see this in print, I remain,

BROOKS WOOD, JR.

[And now we are acquainted with Brooks, whose ideas will always be welcome in the Corner.—ED. C. C.]

KALAMA, WASH., Jan. 10, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: In my last letter I said I would write and tell you how the dance came out. The church people had a candy-pulling in the church and the dance was put off till the next day and it (the dance) got the majority of the people. The devil is still ahead when it comes to dancing. I wonder why the preachers are down on dancing. I will tell you a story that some of the boys tell about an old lady that joined the church. There was once an old lady who always went to dances, but no one would dance with her, so she went and joined the church, and some of her friends asked her why she did not go to the dances any more. "Oh," says she, "when I go, no one will dance with me and so I joined the church." That's what is the matter with the preachers.

Is God married or is he a bachelor? In reading the first two books of the Bible, it seems to me as if God was a married man. We read, "The sons of God took unto them daughters of men for wives" (Gen. vi, 2). By reading this, I should judge that he surely must hav a wife or he could not hav any sons. I don't think he could. I wonder how he brought them down from heaven. They surely never rained down or they would be very badly bruised. I'd hate to hav them fall on me. Well, I don't think he had any sons. He told the children of Israel that he would rain bread from heaven (Ex. xvi, 4). Does he bake his own bread or has he a wife? If the Bible be the inspired word of God why don't he make things plain so no one can doubt it? I think it must be the inspired word of some devilish priest.

Yours truly, ALFRED F. STONE.

GOLDTHWAITE, TEX., Feb. 17, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As it has been some time since I last wrote, I take the pleasure of writing again. We hav been having some very bad weather the past few days. Our school was out the 26th of January, but it did not amount to much. We were examined at the end of the term to see if we could pass into a higher room, and as I passed, I will giv you my monthly report: Reading, 86; spelling, 99; writing, 80; grammar, 93; arithmetic, 92; physiology, 85; geography, 95; deportment. 100; average, 98½ per cent. Promoted to grade seven.

This is a sorry grade, I will admit, but as I had not much of anything else to tell you I thought I would tell you about our schools down here. As we hav been having some bad weather we lost a great many cattle, and they just keep dying, as there is not much for them to eat. It just keeps some of the people going to get a decent living, as times are so hard. Since our play school is out I get lonesome, but I hav employment enough to do, to tack carpet rags and piece quilts. I hav started me a worsted quilt, but don't get to piece much for cooking and dish-washing.

Well, I guess that it is about time that I was bringing my letter to a close, as the clock just struck 9. I would like to correspond with some readers of the Corner.

Your Liberal friend,
ROSA MCPHERSON.

[We call that a good average, showing that Rosa is bright and studious in school. It is too bad that the cattle are dying so. —ED. C. C.]

LEAD HILL, ARK., Feb. 7, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I will try to write to the Children's Corner for the first time. I will be fifteen years old on March 10th. My papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER; he likes it very much. I read the Corner every week and take great pleasure in reading the letters of little girls. My sister is eleven. She is taking music lessons and is getting along very well. I play the organ at Sunday-school when I go. I go about once a month. Every summer we go to a river four miles from here to fish. When we go we stay two or three days. Papa always catches a good many fish, and we all hav a good time. I spent Christmas in a little town ten miles from here by the name of Peel. It is a small place of about thirty houses and three stores. I had a very nice time. Papa owns the foundry here. My little brother, three years old, got his fingers mashed off in December. The accident happened at the foundry. We call him Bob Ingersoll. We think he favors Mr. Ingersoll's picture. Papa says he hopes he will be a Freethinker when he gets older. I go to singing school. I hav been going three weeks and like it very much. Our teacher's name is Mr. Barnes. We are about the only Freethinkers in this town. Some of the people think papa is going crazy because he does not believe in the Bible. Papa has not been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER a year yet. He says he has been looking for a paper like it all his life, but only found it last July. He thinks there never was anything that beats it. If I see this in print I will write again.

Your Liberal friend,
ROSA LEE.

[Your papa is right in his estimate of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are very sorry for the accident to your little brother.—ED C. C.]

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible: and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's "Man, Women, and Gods," and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria, the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portuguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America. Materials of Human History

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History. Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love.

Price reduced from $1.75 to $1.00. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place New York.

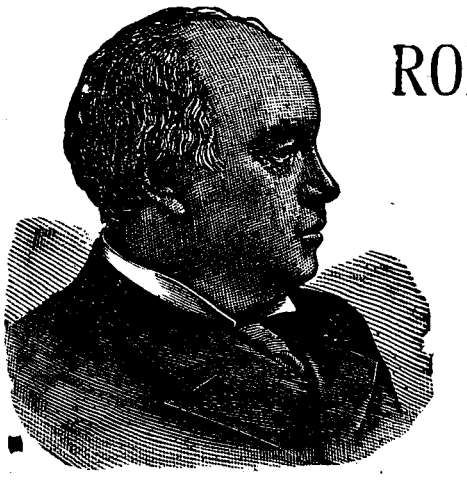
PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.



It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair ye given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around and the stay-at-home to see where he went.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

PROSE-POEMS AND SELECTIONS.
Fifth edition, enlarged and revised. A handsome quarto, containing 383 pages. This is, beyond question, the cheapest and most elegant volume in Liberal literature. Its mechanical finish is worthy of its intrinsic excellence. No expense has been spared to make it the thing of beauty it is. The type is large and clear, the paper heavy, highly calendered, and richly tinted, the presswork faultless, and the binding as perfect as the best materials and skill can make it.
As to the contents, it is enough to say that they include all of the choicest utterances of the greatest writer on the topics treated that has ever lived.
Those who have not the good fortune to own all of Mr. Ingersoll's published works, will have in this book of selections many bright samples of his lofty thought, his matchless eloquence, his wonderful imagery, and his epigrammatic and poetic power. The collection includes all of the "Tributes" that have become famous in literature—notably those to his brother E. C. Ingersoll, Lincoln, Grant, Beecher, Conkling, Courtlandt M. Palmer, Mary Fiske, Elizur Wright; his peerless monographs on "The Vision of War," Love, Liberty, Art and Morality, Science, Nature, The Imagination, Decoration Day Oration, What is Poetry, Music of Wagner, Origin and Destiny, "Leaves of Grass," and on the great heroes of intellectual Liberty. Besides these are innumerable gems taken here and there from the orations, speeches, arguments, toasts, lectures, letters, interviews, and day by day conversations of the author.
The book is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac-simile, has been prepared especially for it. In the more elegant styles of binding it is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.
PRICES.—In cloth, beveled boards, gilt edges, $2 50; in half morocco, gilt edges, $5; in half calf, mottled edges, library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible finish, $9.

Any of the above sent to any address, by express, prepaid, or mail, post free, on receipt of price. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

New Publications.

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE. By Moncure Daniel Conway, author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," and other works. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Cloth, octavo, gilt top, four vols $10. Vol. 1, 1774–1779.

To the greater number of the admirers of Thomas Paine the one-volume edition of his "Great Works Complete," published by the Truth Seeker Company, and retailing for $3, will appear to be all that is needed. And it is the book for the masses, because it is in a handy, compact form, and has between its covers "The Crisis," "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," and Age of Reason," the famous four "Great Works" of the Author-Hero, while its price puts it within the reach of all.

Nevertheless Moncure D. Conway's edition will undoubtedly hav a large sale, and it deserves it, for the large, clear type and the broad-margined, white pages of the publishers make it a delight to the eye, as the careful, systematic, sympathetic work of the learned editor causes it to be a joy to the mind of the lover of noble books which are given to the reader as the author wrote them. Every public library will need this edition of Paine's work. So will every writer who has occasion to quote from Paine, or to refer to the early literature of this country. So also will all lovers of the heroes of the revolutionary epoch, for Thomas Paine spoke their greatest thoughts and voiced their deepest aspirations, and in these volumes are included many magazine articles and other shorter papers which hav not before appeared in book form. One of these is an arraignment of slave dealers and a denunciation of slavery which first appeared in the Postscript to the Pennsylvania Journal and the Weekly Advertiser, March 8, 1775. Referring to this article, Mr. Conway says: "So far as I can discover, to Thomas Paine belongs the honor of being the first American Abolitionist." Paine also "partly drafted and signed the Act of Pennsylvania abolishing slavery, March 1, 1780—"the first legislativ measure of negro emancipation in Christendom."

One admirable feature of this edition of Paine's works is the arrangement of his productions in their chronological order. In reading volume after volume we realize that we are assimilating the history of one of the momentous periods of human development, that these chapters were written on the spot, and that we are getting them in their regular sequence. This is the best possible of "aids to the study of history."

The contents of the first volume are as follows:

"Introduction, Prefatory Note to Paine's First Essay, African Slavery in America, A Dialog between General Wolf and General Gage in a Wood near Boston, The Magazine in America, Useful and Entertaining Hints, New Anecdotes of Alexander the Great, Reflections on the Life and Death of Lord Clive, Cupid and Hymen, Dueling, Reflections on Titles, The Dream Interpreted, Reflections on Unhappy Marriages, Thoughts on Defensiv War, An Occasional Letter on the Female Sex, A Serious Thought, Common Sense, Epistle to Quakers, The Forrester's Letters, A Dialog, The American Crisis, Retreat Across the Delaware, Letter to Franklin in Paris, The Affair of Silas Deane, To the Public on Mr. Deane's Affair, Messrs. Deane, Jay, and Gérard."

The publishers say in their prospectus that "it was only natural, after Mr. Conway had completed his authoritativ biography of Paine, that the publishers should hav secured his services for the preparation of the definitiv edition of Paine's writings. Mr. Conway's researches for materials for the Life peculiarly fitted him to undertake the work of arranging and annotating the works of Paine. The editor has availed himself of the facilities of the libraries in London and in Paris, and has discovered much hitherto unpublished material.

"Mr. Conway has included this new material in his volumes. He has also followed the earliest editions in reprinting the better known essays, and has added valuable introductions and notes."

Writing of Paine's style, and of his influence, Mr. Conway naturally refers to the large number of "characteristic essays" which hav escaped all previous compilers, and he shows that familiarity with them cannot prudently be despised. In this connection I will quote one long paragraph of Mr. Conway's introduction:

"Possessed of a style which, as Edmund Randolph said, insinuated itself into the hearts of learned and unlearned, he wrote not for the sake of writing, penned no word for personal fame, cared not for the morrow of his own reputation. His Quaker forerunner, George Fox, was never more surrendered to the moving spirit of the moment. Absorbed in the point to be carried, discarding all rhetoric that did not feather his arrow, dealing with every detail as well as largest events and principles, his works are now invaluable to the student of American history. In them the course of political events from 1774 to 1787 may be followed almost from hour to hour, and even his military narrativs are of great importance. Previous editors of Paine's works, concerned mainly with his theories, hav overlooked many of these occasional writings; but the historian, for whom such occasions are never past, will find in these recovered writings testimony all the more valuable because not meant for any day beyond that which elicited it. Chief-Justice Jay confided to a friend his belief that the history of the American Revolution would never be written, on account of the reputations that would be affected were the truth fully told. That the history has not been really written is known to those who hav critically examined the Stevens 'Fac-similes,' the Letters of George III. and of George Washington. To these actual materials, awaiting the competent and courageous historian, are now added the writings of Thomas Paine, second to none in importance. Certainly there was no witness with better opportunities for information, one more sleeplessly vigilant or more thoroughly representativ of public sentiment during the twelve momentous years in which the American government was founded."

One word used by Mr. Conway in his Introduction more accurately than any other could describes this latest edition of the works of Thomas Paine. That word is "adequate." Others hav been "laborious and useful collections," but this is adequate, this is, equal to the task essayed, for it givs us what every painstaking student has long wanted, and what multitudes more will want as the years go by and Thomas Paine's character and services come out from under the clouds of religious bigotry and hatred. Literature, history, truth, and rational patriotism, are all deeply indebted to Moncure D. Conway for his "Life" and his compilation of the "Works" of Thomas Paine.

EDUCATION OF BUSINESS-MEN IN EUROPE. A Report to the American Bankers' Association through Its Committee on Schools of Finance and Economy. By Edmund J. James, Ph.D. New York: American Bankers' Association. Price, 50 cents.

This is Number 4 of the series, "Education of Business Men." It is one of the fruits of "a systematic effort to arouse public attention to the importance of providing for a more extensiv and more thorough professional education of our business classes." It appears to be just what is desired for the purpose named.

OUR NEED OF PHILOSOPHY. An Appeal to the American People. An address delivered on August 21, 1893, before the World's Congress of Philosophy at Chicago. By Dr. Paul Carus. Chicago: Open Court Publishing Company. 10 cents.

Dr. Carus is an able writer and in this pamphlet he has expressed some good thoughts, but we do not know what he means by his closing statement that this nation has a "great opportunity that a kind Providence has provided."

FIRST STEPS IN PHILOSOPHY. (Physical and Ethical.) By William Mackintire Salter. Chicago: Charles H. Kerr & Co. Cloth. Price, $1.

Mr. Salter, who is one of the most prominent promoters of the ethical culture movement, says in the preface to this book that philosophy, "whatever else it may mean, involves the clarification of our fundamental conceptions." "First Steps" is "an examination into two fundamental conceptions—Matter and Duty." Under the first head we hav an analysis of the definitions of matter, a consideration of the difficulties in realizing the idealistic view, and the reconciliation of that view with common sense. Under the second head Mr. Salter inquires, "What do we mean by duty?" and givs, as he sees them, the elements of the idea. He seeks for the rational basis of the idea of duty, and maintains that the realization of the nature of each being is the end for which we are to strive, and he tests other theories of duty, such as Intuitionism and Utilitarianism, by this.

Miss Wixon has taken as her mottoes in writing this beautiful book of 292 pages—which she has dedicated to the memory of her father and mother—these sentences from the works of a great synthetic philosopher and a gifted liberal minister:

As with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not.—Herbert Spencer.

Living is an Art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the Arts.—Thomas Starr King.

A COLLECTION was lifted in a Boston Sunday-school last Sunday for a foreign mission, and the pupils of one class were asked each to repeat a verse from the Bible appropriate to the occasion. The first boy said: "It is more blessed to giv than to receive." "Good!" cried all. And then they went on: "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," and so on. One boy staggered the teacher a bit by quoting: "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak," but a certain amount of appropriateness was recognized. "Giv the devil his due," lengthened some faces when the next boy blurted it out, but the climax was reached and the quotations ended when another boy shouted: "A fool and his money are soon parted."—Boston Traveller.

This was refused and the principal was not paid. Finally, one of the deacons of the church was sent to talk with the usurer. "You hav acted very badly," said the pillar of the church. "How's that?" "Six per cent was enough interest." "Nine is fair." "When the Lord looks down on that nine he will put a long black mark against your name." This staggered the old fellow for a moment, but suddenly recovering, he replied: "When the Lord looks down on that 9 he will think it's 6,"—Gosford Times.

Gems of Thought.

"PEACE hath her victories," and one of the greatest of them is won by people who overcome the desire to go to war.—Galveston News.

THE application of science, and above all of scientific skepticism, to history has yet to be made; it will be fruitful in results.—George Henry Lewes.

HONESTY that succeeds in business is not a question of religion or of religious belief. Honesty does not depend on any religious creed or dogma that was ever conceived.—Henry W. Bok.

MOST imaginativ people are radical, for even a bad man may sometimes uphold the side of right because he has intelligence enough to understand that things might be better managed in the future for all than they are in the present.—Grant Allen.

THE greatest evil of our times is the prevailing cowardice. We do not dare to assert our opinions, to bring our outward lives into harmony with our inward convictions; we believe it to be worldly policy to cling outwardly to relics of former ages, when at heart we are completely severed from them.—Max Nordau.

I CONFESS that I look forward to the international labor partnerships as the best prospects the world has of coercing those hateful instincts of governments, all alike irresponsible and indifferent, by which nations are perpetually armed against each other to the infinit detriment, loss, and demoralization of all.—Thorold Rogers.

MAN can only be a gainer, and not a loser, both intellectually and morally, by the spread of knowledge and education, and by the disappearance of superstitious ideas. To refuse to recognize this is to run counter to all reason and all history. Popular theories about the government of the world and immortality may change and take whatever forms they like; human society will not be changed for all that, and will not come to grief.—Büchner.

THE consciousness of having reflected seriously and conclusivly on important questions, whether social or spiritual, augments dignity while it does not lessen humanity. In this sense, taking thought can and does add a cubit to our stature. Opinions which we may not feel bound, or even permitted, to press on other people, are not the less forces for being latent. They shape ideals, and it is ideals that inspire conduct.—John Morley, "On Compromise."

MANNERS are of more importance than laws. Upon them, in a great measure, the laws depend. The law touches us but here and there, now and then; manners are what vex or soothe, corrupt or purify, exalt or debase, barbarize or refine us by a constant, steady, uniform, insensible operation like that of the air we breathe in. They giv their whole form and color to our lives. According to their quality, they aid morals, they supply them, or they totally destroy them.—Burke.

AND the church did lead the blind and appealing Polyphemus of humanity—led him for ages in the tenebrious cave, its floor ghastly with bones, its sides horrent with blood; and, in the darkness, humanity's hands touched the back of the indefinit anthronic monster, Superstition, and the shapeless bulk of the troglodyte dragon of Ignorance. The church led and the nations followed, and the track over which the leader led is known as the Dark Ages.—Saladin.

LET us be austere to ourselvs, but do not let us impoverish life. Let us not deprive humanity of its joys; let us take pleasure in beholding its enjoyment. The joy of others is a great part of our own; it constitutes that great recompense of a good life, which is gaiety. I hav been reproached with too much parade of this religion, so easy in appearance, but the most difficult of all in reality. Wishing will not make one gay. One must belong to an old race, not blasé; one must also be satisfied with one's life. My life has been what I should wish, what I conceive as the best. I would not alter much if I had to liv it over again. On the other hand, I hav little to fear of the future. I shall hav my biography and my legend. My legend? Yes. Having myself a little of the trick of ecclesiastical writers, I can trace it out in advance. The legends of the enemies of the official church are all cast in the same mold. The fate which the book of Acts attributes to Judas is its essential feature. For one party of tradition I shall finish like that, in a fashion compounded of Arius and Voltaire. God, how black I shall be! All the more because when the church feels herself lost, she will go down maliciously, biting like a mad dog. In spite of all I hav confidence in reason. The enlightened part of humanity, the only part I care for, will hold me in some esteem.—Renan.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Anricnlar Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth. 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

BOOKS

BY

SALADIN

(W. STEWART ROSS),

Editor of the

LONDON AGNOSTIC JOURNAL.

GOD AND HIS BOOK:

When he had read this book Colonel Ingersoll wrote to the author: "You have earned the thanks of all who really think." It is a work of vast research, of sound criticism, of caustic humor, of sledgehammer vehemence, of scathing satire, of pathos and eloquence. It is one of the heaviest iconoclastic broadsides ever fired at the Jewish God and the Bible.
Cloth, gold letters, $1.25.

WOMAN: HER GLORY, HER SHAME, AND HER GOD.

The Rev. Archdeacon Farrar said that "Christianity elevated the woman; it shrouded as with a halo of sacred innocence the tender years of the child." The object of Saladin's work is to show the archdeacon his error, and he has succeeded. An English writer said of it: "This certainly is one of the most marvelous books ever issued from the press. The authorities cited are unquestionable, and the result is convincing."
In two volumes, cloth, gilt lettered, $2.50.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE SLAVE TRADE.

A condensation of the known facts upon this subject, proving that Christianity did not abolish but aided this infamous traffic in human beings. To which are added such comments as only Saladin can make. In paper, 30 cents.

THE TRANSITION.

A consideration of the antagonism of the Bible and science, and of the question whether the veiled or allegorical portions of the Christian Bible can be interpreted by modern scie
In paper, 20 cents.

ROSES AND RUE.

Being Random Notes and Sketches. Some of its subjects are: A Last Interview with a Man of Genius; An Essay on Stirpiculture; Asceticism and Superstition; Capital Punishment; Poverty; God in the Constitution; Bruno; Gods; Witchcraft, etc. This may be called Saladin's own book, for it is poetry in prose, and is one of the books that lovers of strong literature like to read again and again. In cloth, gold- and silver-lettered, $1.50.

LAYS OF ROMANCE.

This book reminds one of Sir Walter Scott, being romantic, historic, and aglow in every page with the energy of a true and high poetic genius.
Cloth, gold-lettered, 75 cents.

ISAURE and OTHER POEMS.

The title poem is a story of intense passion, touchingly told. The other twenty poems are fresh, fragrant, thoughtful, and every verse reveals the thinker, observer, and reformer. Every page glows with passion and throbs with life.
Cloth, gold-lettered, 75 cents.

A FEARFUL FLOGGING.

By one who endured it. Based upon a manuscript in the possession of Saladin
In paper, 10 cents.

THE AGONIES OF HANGING.

Studies in Psychology. By one who was cut down from the gallows. Printed from manuscript in the hands of Saladin. In paper, 10 cents.

WHIRLWIND SOWN and REAPED.

A short story of clerical crime and villainy founded on fact. Of this book the Open Court said: "This novel will command the same, or more, interest than Helen Gardener's story, 'Is This Your Son, My Lord?'" In paper, 25 cents.

THE CONFESSIONAL.

Being an exposure of that infamous religious rite. Contents: Lic[en]tiousness of the Pre-Reformation Church; Lechery of the Confessional; The Priest in Absolution; Confessions of the Escaped Nun; Extracts from Dens and Liguori; Examination of the Church's Claim to have Fostered Learning; Her Attempts at Continency even more Ruinous than Her Self-Indulgence; The Relative Criminal Statistics of Catholicism and Protestantism
In paper, 25 cents.

For all of these works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

"INFIDELS AND CHARITY."

A Leaflet showing that the oft-repeated Christian statement that Infidels do not contribute to nor found charities is a falsehood. It ought to be widely circulated to meet the calumny. Price, 5 cents; 50 cents a dozen. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

News of the Week.

A PAPER trust is in process of formation.

JANE P. AUSTIN, the well-known author, died in Boston last week.

GORGE TICKNOR CURTIS, at one time a prominent politician, died last week.

IT is said that Protestants are increasing and Catholics decreasing in numbers in Germany.

THE Senate began debate on the tariff bill April 2, seven weeks after it was sent up from the House.

J. HERON FOSTER has been forced by ill-health to suspend the publication of his Pennsylvania Nationalist.

VIKTOR E. LENNSTRAND, the Swedish Freethinker, has recently submitted to the fifth surgical operation and is in precarious health.

THE Russian-German commercial treaty passed the German Reichstag by a strong majority. It is a step in the interest of peace and progress.

A SPECIAL bill was rushed through the New York legislature and signed by the governor providing that when a fishing season begins on Sunday it shall be lawful to fish on the preceding Saturday.

THE City of Mexico is more than one hundred years ahead of New York in having a pawnshop established on humane principles—the Monte de Pieda, founded in 1775 by a gift of $300,000 from Senor Don Pedro Romero de Terreros.

THE jury in the case of Laidlaw vs. Sage gives $25,000 to the plaintiff. Laidlaw was a clerk in Russell Sage's office at the time that Norcross attempted to blow up the latter with dynamite and claims that Sage seized and held him, Laidlaw, between Norcross and himself.

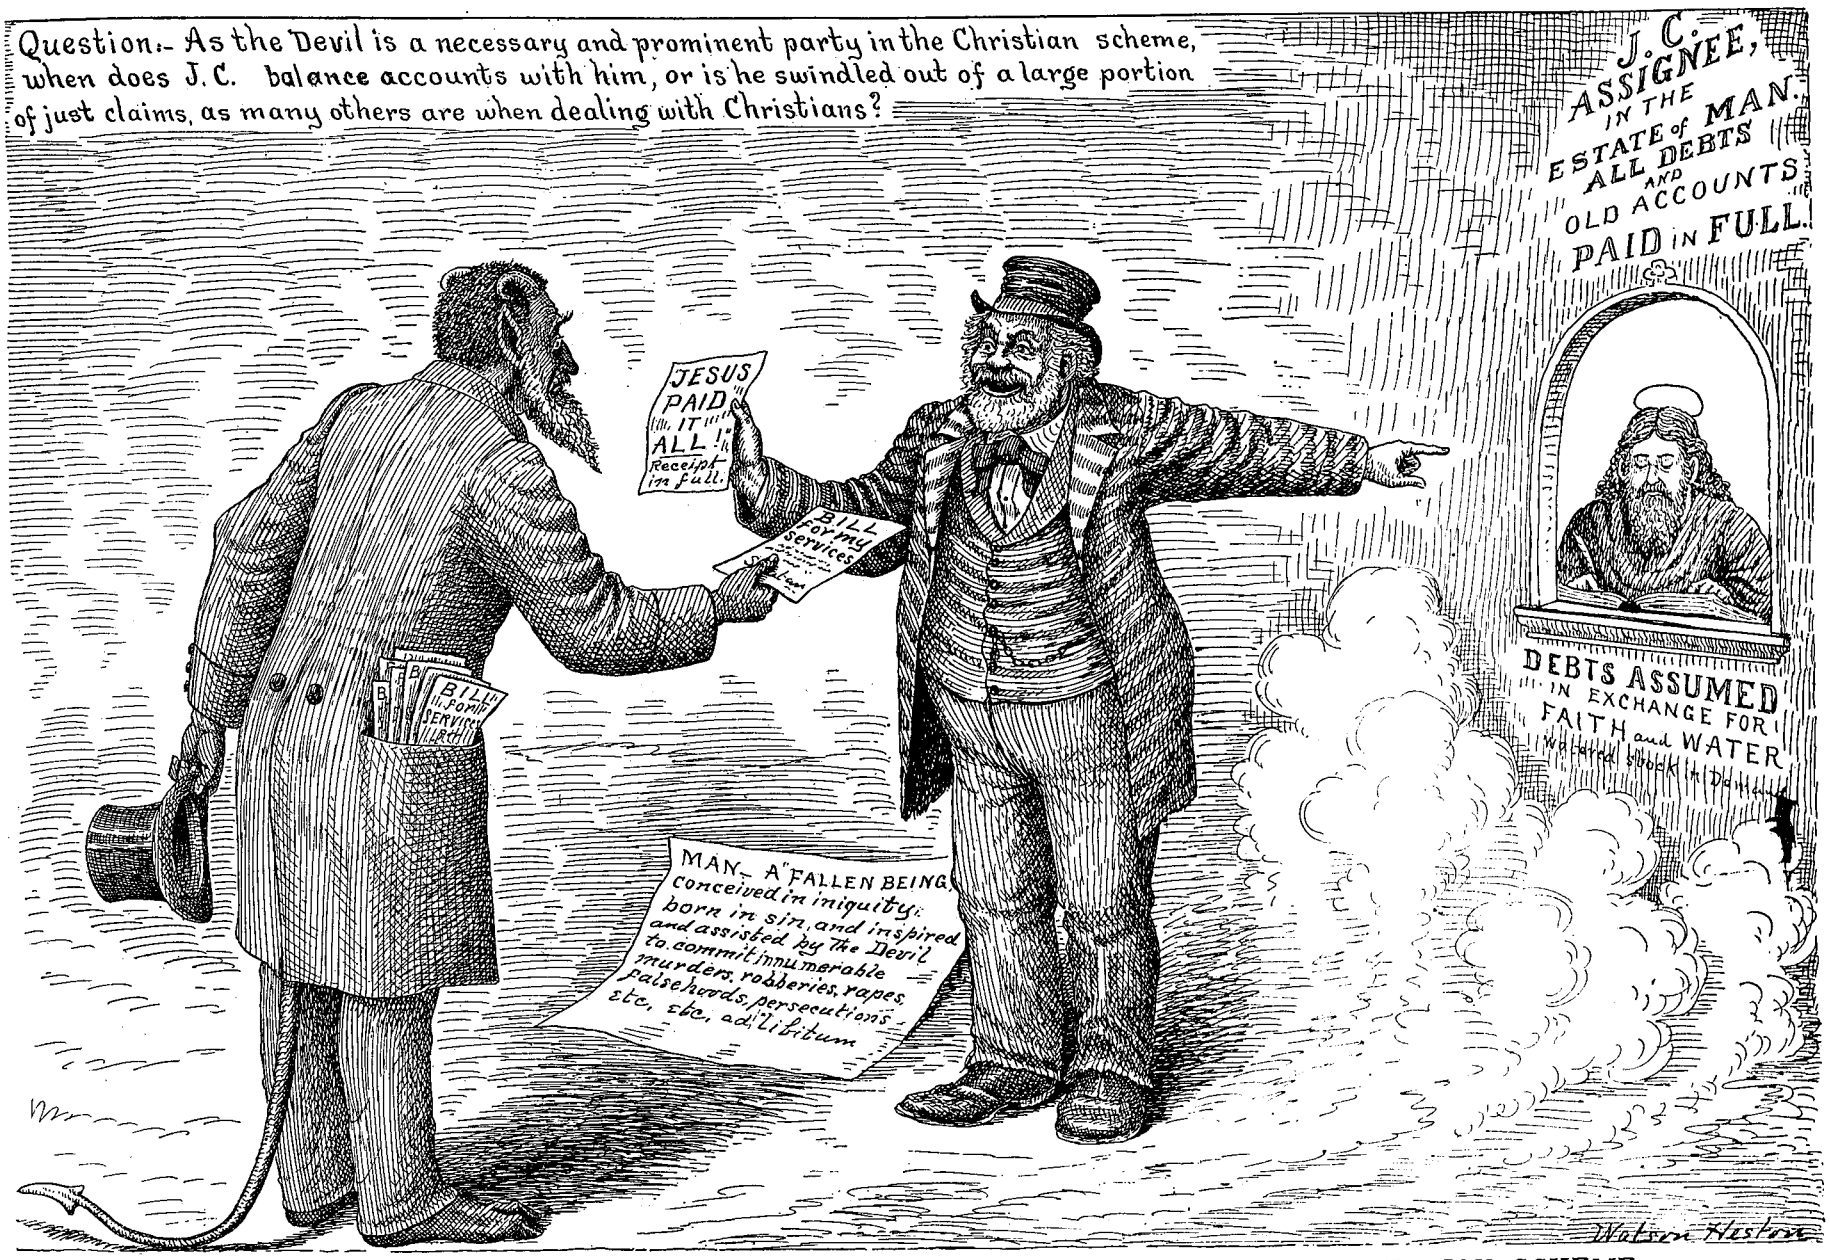
THE new treaty with China, pending in the Senate, mitigates some of the inhuman features of the Geary law, but does not deny the right to exclude, China asking only that she hav the right to exclude United States laborers from China, if such exclusion seems desirable to her.

GOVERNOR NORTHEN of Georgia appointed Speaker Crisp to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Colquitt. Mr. Crisp declines, deeming that the interests of the party demand his retention of the office he now holds. The governor has substituted Patrick Walsh, an Atlanta editor, who accepts.

SIXTEEN more Gravesenders hav been sentenced to imprisonment and it is probable that there will be another extraordinary session of the grand jury to secure indictments against persons hitherto unsuspected, but who were implicated in the election frauds by the confessions of some of the last batch of convicts.

LOUIS KOSSUTH was buried at Budapest on Sunday last. More than 100,000 peasants came into the city, mostly on foot, and 300,000 people crowded the streets during the ceremonies, singing the revolutionary air "Szozat." Maurice Jokai delivered the chief address. In the procession the Honveds of 1848 led the lines carrying with them their old standard, and flags.

AT Milwaukee on April 1st about thirty members of the Polish A.P.A. broke down the doors of the St. Vincent Catholic school house and attacked the St. Vincent branch of the Catholic Columbian League with axes, hatchets, and knives. Several persons were badly injured, one fatally. The Columbian League is a society organized to counteract the A. P. A., and was holding a meeting behind closed doors.



IN a car on the Pennsylvania road were fifty-two tramps. On the Wilson bill they stood twenty-seven in favor of the bill and ten against it, and fifteen had no choice, as they would not work if they had a chance, as they do not believe in it. The nationalities were then taken up, which showed the crowd consisted of ten Irish-born, twelve German, seven English, three French, and seventeen American, which included most of the fifteen who would not work. The others present were a Dane, a Swede, and a Hungarian.

THERE is serious trouble in South Carolina over the attempt to enforce the dispensary law. The searching by state spies of private houses for concealed liquors caused a number of deaths at Darlington. Governor Tillman called out several companies of militia, most of whom refused to obey orders, and hav disbanded. Tillman seized the Coast Line railroad and established a censorship of the telegraph companies. The citizens of Florence offered to send assistance to Darlington in its fight against the spies and probable conflict with country volunteers who hav come to the governor's aid. But the Darlington authorities seem to hav restored order. Florence and Darlington are under martial law.

OF

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

COLLECTED, EDITED, AND CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED

By MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY.

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," "Omitted Chapters of History Disclosed in the Life and Papers of Edmund Randolph," etc.

Four Volumes, Royal Octavo, Gilt Tops, Uniform with the Editor's "Life of Paine." Price per Volume, $2.50.

An edition of one hundred and fifty numbered copies, bound in half leather, gil tops, uniform with the limited editions of "The Writings of Washington," "The Writings of Jefferson," etc. Price, per volume, $4.

For the general reader the $3 edition of Paine's works is sufficient, as it contains all of his writings upon which his fame substantially rests. But for those who desire to go deeper into the subject of the man and polemic we can most unreservedly commend the "Life of Paine" by Mr. Conway, and this edition of Paine's works edited by him. It is the fullest that we are likely to have, and the student of history, and particularly the writer, should have it upon his shelves.

The work will consist of four volumes, and will be arranged chronologically. The cause of America, as Paine said, made him an author, and the first volume will cover the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1774. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay, and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvania Magazine; these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The second volume will consist mainly of the "Rights of Man," and pamphlets relating to English politics, but will also contain certain papers on French affairs.

The third and fourth volumes will consist mainly of Paine's religious writings, but will also contain some essays relating to American affairs, written in his last years. At the close will be given Paine's poems.

The first volume is now ready for delivery, and the others will follow soon. Orders for the whole set will be taken and filled as the volumes appear, or the volumes can be purchased separately. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of 'FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

For $3.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers ($1).

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

Catholic and Protestant and Biblical Inerrancy.

In reading the history of the struggle precipitated by the discoveries and theories of Copernicus and Galileo one is strongly impressed with the fact that the Catholic church blundered fatally in staking her reputation for infallibility upon the literal truth of certain passages in the Bible. She risked all upon the inerrancy of the scriptures, and she lost. To-day she would giv very much indeed if she could wipe out the record she made in that cruel but futil attempt to put the new wine of science into the old bottles of Biblical legend, to bind the growing brain of the world in the stifling compresses fashioned by men whose conceptions of the universe and of man were exceedingly primitiv and almost wholly misleading. She did not forget that lesson. To her Protestant children was left most of the burden of maintaining the inspiration of the Bible writers against the assaults of the geologists. Her more astute leaders did not wish to identify their reputations with another losing struggle like that in which Urban VIII. and Alexander VII., with Bellarmin and a host of other prelates, had fought against Galileo and his successors. They saw that the dogma of an infallible book was a dangerous one to hold in the face of a critical world. Almost always better strategists than the Protestants, the Roman Catholic dignitaries and apologists hav generally prudently declined, since the Galileo episode, to hazard much upon the asserted divinity of the Bible. It was far less risky to defend the church's traditions than the Bible's statements. The latter are there in black and white and they cannot be got away from easily. An infallible Pope is far better for any church than is an infallible book, if the church wishes to maintain its power and prestige in a world of study and science.

Never was the Catholic church more far-seeing and wise than when she resolved to send her inquiring children to the Pope instead of to the Bible, and so we cannot help wondering what Leo XIII. had in mind when he issued his recent encyclical enjoining the study of the Bible upon the priesthood. Did he think that Catholic sophistry could do what Protestant sophistry has so ignobly failed to do—nullify the effects of scientific investigation and cancel the results of the Higher Criticism? If he did, he has fooled himself as signally as did his predecessors when they attempted to put the earth back as the center of our solar system after the telescope of Galileo had revealed that the sun occupied that position and that, consequently, the Bible writers did not know anything about astronomy. An "open Bible" is the bane of Protestantism and the efficient auxiliary of Freethought. We want the Bible to be read and studied by all. The Christian who lets his priest or preacher read and interpret the scriptures for him is not on the highway that leads to Liberalism, but when he reads them for himself he is in danger of losing his faith in them, if he has fair reasoning powers. If Leo could put the Bible into the hands of all members of his church who can read and induce them to study it carefully it would be the heaviest blow that ecclesiastical organization has ever received. The Roman church rests by tradition on the Bible, and to hav that foundation examined by tens of millions of people to whom its contradictions and absurdities had not become familiar by long association would hav the effect of a score of powerful bombs exploded at the base of the pillars of the temple.

That scholarly Catholics realize this there are not lacking plenty of indications. The New York Tribune of Sunday, April 1st, quotes at great length from advance sheets of an article written for the April number of the Contemporary Review by the learned Catholic who, in 1892 and 1893, contributed to the same review a series of articles on the Papal policy. This writer, who conceals his identity under a pen name, remarks:

"Why we Catholics, of all Christians, should expose our church to such terrible and needless risks, merely in order to compel men to believe that the Bible we so seldom open is absolutely free from error, is one of those profound mysteries which it is hopeless to try to solve; for we can never convince outsiders of the truth of this assertion, and for them alone is it a matter of real importance. For the needs of members of the true fold this doctrin possesses no inherent fitness. The vast majority of them never open a Bible. To them a text from Genesis is the same as one from Isaiah or Esther, and no text has any intrinsic weight of its own, being dependent for its force upon the teaching of the church. When in search of light and guidance, as many of us are at present, it is not to the Bible that we hav recourse, but directly to the church or its venerable head."

Continuing, this writer says that in his previous papers he had emphasized these facts, and had humbly called upon the Pope to "interpose his infallible authority." Then came the report that Leo was preparing an encyclical upon Biblical studies "which would set all our doubts and misgivings at rest."

"But our joy was singularly short-lived. It soon leaked out that the sovereign pontiff, whose infallibility providentially stops short at definitions, was being inspired solely by theologians who pride themselvs on their ability to tackle the most intricate Biblical problems in the off-hand manner in which Hegel was wont to deal with all scientific questions—a priori. Further inquiries made it clear that our holy father had shut his ears to the suggestions and warnings of the very few Catholics who are entitled to speak with authority on Bible criticism, and was constituting himself the spokesman of their accusers."

It will be observed that, in the estimation of this essayist, there are but few Catholics "who are entitled to speak with authority on Bible criticism;" that is, there are but few who know that it is utterly impossible to reconcile the Bible with science, history, and the fruits of comparativ criticism. Evidently the present Pope is not one of these few competent Catholic students of the Bible, else he would not hav issued this rash encyclical. The Contemporary's contributor continues to score the infallible head of his church in this caustic fashion:

"Having enumerated the services of theologians of past ages, his holiness givs expression to his solicitude that the clergy of to-day should follow in their footsteps, and with this object in view ordains that the study of the Bible be prosecuted in a manner befitting the importance of the subject and the needs of the time. What he understands by this is made perfectly clear by the rules he lays down for their guidance, which are in truth admirably calculated to render all conflict between science and revelation impossible. · · · They are all summed up in Augustine's comprehensiv rule, upon which the sovereign pontiff dwells with manifest admiration—that whenever a new fact is discovered by science, and so conclusivly established that it cannot be called in question, it behooves us to set about proving that it does not run counter to holy writ; but if a new scientific proposition be found incompatible with the testimony of the Bible, then it is our bounden duty to demonstrate that it is most false, or if we cannot accomplish this, we must at least firmly believe—without the shadow of a doubt—that it is so."

Now follows some delicious sarcasm:

"Nor do these wholesome restrictions in any way fetter the liberty or retard the progress of the student. He still has a vast field for his research, which he can plow in perfect safety under the protecting wing of theology. For theology is the one science whose conclusions we can accept with a light heart and an easy conscience. Superior to all others, 'she employs them all as her inferiors and handmaids.' And according to the teaching of theologians and the Fathers, there is no error in the Bible which in its entirety, as in each of its parts, was written by divine inspiration. Although not intended to initiate us into the mysteries of profane sciences, it is nevertheless infallible even with respect to these; for God is the author of holy writ, the individual writers being his instruments in the same sense as our hands, when we write, are the instruments of our brains. Consequently, those who hold that there is or can be in the scriptures any error of any kind on any subject whatsoever, 'either pervert the Catholic notion of divine inspiration, or else accuse God himself of error.'"

Touching the inerrancy of the Bible, as maintained by the Pope, we quote this:

"I now proceed to offer a few remarks on the two main propositions of the encyclical: First, that the Bible is wholly free from all admixture of error, because error must spring from a human source, and all human sources are eliminated by the doctrin that God is not merely the inspirer, but also the actual author of the scriptures; and secondly, that it is as possible as it is necessary to study the text scientifically without ever being confronted by any of the inconvenient problems of 'Higher Criticism.'

"The first of these two theses is calculated to astonish the unbiased reader of the encyclical more than aught else it contains. For not only does it eliminate all errors contrary to the doctrins of the church, but likewise all mistakes and inaccuracies in matters of science and history, and categorically denies the possibility of any contradictions, discrepancies, or even inconsistencies between the various writers of the scriptures. The pious Catholic will discern and respect the noble sentiment that prompted this belief, and most Christians feel that it would hav been more in harmony with our human notions of what a book written by an omniscient being for the purpose of revealing himself to mankind should be, had it been preserved from all admixture of error, contradiction, and obscurity. But surely the inscrutability of God's ways, which we hav already laden with weighty mysteries and seeming impossibilities, will easily bear the further strain of the many contradictions in secondary matters which we find in the Bible. That they cannot be lightly brushed aside nor otherwise disposed of will appear manifest from a few concrete instances taken at random."

Of course this givs away the whole case for the Bible, but the writer is more honest than most of the apologists of the Protestant churches, for he admits that there are contradictions which "cannot be lightly brushed aside" and he does not want to be placed in a position where, as a faithful Catholic, he must contend that the contradictions are nonexistent. He prefers to throw upon the already overburdened scapegoat—"the inscrutability of God's ways"—the additional load of Bible contradictions, inaccuracies, and nescience. Commenting upon contradictions in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, our author passes to Daniel and points out some historical errors

"with which the papal encyclical no longer allows us to saddle the writer of the book of Daniel. We are to hold that God is the author of the book, and that the error forthwith becomes a lucid statement of fact."

Poor Leo! And after that merciless cut his undutiful son gets after him in this way:

"When enacting laws concerning the food that was to be regarded as clean or unclean Jahveh strictly forbade his chosen people to partake of the flesh of the hare. And he said in very clear and absolutely unmistakable terms: 'And the hare, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you.' Now it is not true that the hare chews the cud; it is an error. And the only way to prove that it was not an error then would be to show that hares in those days did chew the cud but hav since abandoned the practice. We hitherto explained this by saying the statement was made by the authors of Leviticus and Deuteronomy, and is of no account from a religious point of view; otherwise it would not be found in the Bible. To-day our attitude is different. We are now to say: 'These words hav not a man but God himself for author. It is not perhaps true that the hare chews the cud, but it is no error to maintain that it does, if it be God who puts forward the thesis. · · ·

"Jahveh himself thought, acted, and lived like an apotheosized son of Israel. He dwells at one time in Paradise, where he takes his walks in the cool of the evening, graciously conversing with its human inhabitants. He does not know exactly what is going on at the tower of Babel, or what wicked lives the men of Sodom are leading, until he has visited them in person and inquired into their doings on the spot. He is a true friend to his own people, but while furthering their interests, he is likewise materially advancing his own, for he and they are mutually dependent on each other, their disappearance from the scene inevitably entailing his own."

Now comes the summing up of the whole question:

"The papal encyclical tends to effect neither more nor less than a revolution in our attitude toward the Bible, without any sufficient cause. In the name of reason it lands us in a maze of difficulties and contradictions, whence the wit of man is unable to find an issue. In the name of religion it undermines our sentiment of awe for the divine attributes by shifting the burden of error from the shoulders of fallible men, and declaring that we must either deny its existence or else tax God himself with ignorance. And what is the object of this startling innovation? What does our church gain by the change? It gains nothing and risks everything. To us the Bible has never been an object of worship. We are independent of its authority. The vast majority of our co-religionists never read ten pages of it in their lives, and never will. Our faith would, therefore, lose absolutely nothing if we continued to say as before: 'The errors and inconsistencies to be found in the Bible are but the signs manual of the human workman. They are of no real moment, and leave the spirit untouched. And the spirit is of God.' · · ·

"But now we are called upon to believe that this book, destined for men as untutored and gross-minded as a Yorkshire tike, was written by God himself, who, in order to bring it down to the level of their shallow understanding, condescended to make use of their incorrect language. Such was the importance attributed by God to this message, such his desire to hav it understood by the most dull-witted of mortals. And was his intention fulfilled? The papal encyclical replies by affirming that the bulk of mankind do not understand it. But, perhaps, it is their own fault? No, because they who study it most are furthest from grasping its true meaning. But surely God who himself wrote his message adequately adjusted the means to the end he had in view, so that mankind could understand it, if they would? No man, replies our holy father, can ever hope to grasp its true meaning unless he hav faith. Mankind may read it and study it from the schoolroom to the grave, but it is utterly impossible that they should ever do more than gnaw at the rind; it is a hopeless task for them to endeavor to reach the marrow. And yet these are precisely the ill-starred people for whom the message was composed by God himself. Who, then, are the privileged who alone feed on the marrow, who alone understand the scriptures? None but the members of the true church. This is to say, none but those who no longer need them, who never open or read them, and who, like Mr. Lilly, frankly confess that such matters possess little interest for them. And we are bidden to discern in this method of procedure a sure sign of the divine omniscience, and a signal mark of God's goodness to man. Now, of these two things one must be true: Either the Bible was written only for an infallible church, and therefore without sufficient reason; or else it was written for the bulk of mankind, and in this case God defeated his own purpose. The fact is that if these doctrins are to be forced upon our acceptance, we shall not only hav to learn a new Caliban language in which to express them, but we must first get some orthodox Theodorus canonically to purge our minds with anticyrian hellebore, in order to drive away all rational cobwebs from our overburdened brains."

Our Protestant friends must hav effectually purged their minds and driven away all rational cobwebs, for this is precisely the colossal absurdity which they accept and swear is the ripest, most perfect fruit of the reason.

Censor, or Advertising Agent?

If liberty of speech and of press is ultimately destroyed in this country, it will be because of the cowardice and treachery of the newspapers. Read this from the New York Recorder:

"The American News Company and the Union News Company of this city hav resolved not to sell W. T. Stead's sensational book entitled, 'If Christ Came to Chicago.' The ground on which they decline to do so is that the title is blasphemous, and that the publication is a directory of sin. 'The book is not,' says Manager Williams of the Union News Company, 'proper reading to go into the family, and the reputation of the author does not palliate the offense in any way, in our opinion.' That is the high, sound, moral ground to take in regard to this outrageous publication, and the two companies will hav the commendation of all pure and right-minded people in the lofty position they hav assumed. Financially they will be the losers, but money coined out of immorality invariably goes back to the Evil One from whom it came. This is a magnificent precedent which the two great news-dealing and book-dealing companies hav set. It is superb service to the cause of public morality, to religion, to law, and to order. The title of the book is 'blasphemous;' the matter it contains is, for the most part, a moral pestilence. It should not be allowed to circulate through the mails. It should be confiscated on every counter where it is exposed for sale. The man who offers to sell it surreptitiously should be sent to the penitentiary. Where is Mr. Comstock?"

We are not concerned to defend W. T. Stead, nor his motivs, nor his book. He is a Christian sensationalist, with whose methods we hav little sympathy, although we are bound in common fairness to say that they are immeasurably superior to those of his would-be suppressors. But we are concerned to defend the liberty of speech, of press, and of transmission. It is not a question of the truth or reverence or good or bad taste of Stead's book. Neither are the news companies transcending their rights in refusing to handle "If Christ Came to Chicago." They must determin for themselvs what works they will sell. But when the Recorder demands that it be excluded from the mails and confiscated whenever offered for sale, and that those who deal in it "surreptitiously" be sent to the penitentiary, it is time to emphatically call a halt. Of course when the news managers talk of "blasphemy," they show their bigot's ears, as does the Recorder when it echoes the epithet. Has it come to this that the news agencies can be applauded for suppressing books at the behest of and in the interest of religion, and the post-office department be called upon to join in the crusade? Where is this thing to stop? Hav American editors neither common honesty nor common sense?

Against these disciples of Comstock, these descendants of the oldtime heresy hunters, we array the framers of the Constitution of New Hampshire, who wrote: "The liberty of the press is [an] essential of freedom in a state; it ought, therefore, to be inviolably preserved." With the old Granite state men stand those who, in 1776, put into the Constitution of North Carolina these unequivocal words: "The freedom of the press is one of the great bulwarks of liberty, and therefore ought never to be restrained." And beside these stand the Virginia Constitution-makers, who said, in the same great year, in almost identical words: "The freedom of the press is one of the great bulwarks of liberty, and can never be restrained but by despotic governments." Referring to these declarations, the Omaha Bee says: "These citations should afford abundant material for reflection to public men and courts that undertake to tyrannize over the press, or seek to abridge its freedom by threats of summary punishment of editors, reporters, and publishers. Such a course is not compatible with modern ideas of public rights, and free discussion of public servants, even though they wear the ermine and occupy the judgment seat."

And what is true as concerns criticism of public servants is equally true of criticisms of other men and of creeds and Bibles.

We are bothered by a doubt, so far as the Recorder is involved in this suppression business. Is that paper in earnest, or is it merely an advertising agent for Stead's publishers? This is what leads us to ask such a question: Some weeks ago the New York World advertised that the next Sunday it would print advance sheets of "If Christ Came to Chicago." The Recorder, thus forewarned, determined to make a "scoop," and so it printed advance sheets of this "moral pestilence" in its edition of the Saturday evening preceding the Sunday on which the World containing them appeared. This was a good business stroke for the Recorder. It probably made a snug little sum out of the job, and can now afford to be virtuous! At that time it advertised Stead's book in one way to its own advantage; is it now advertising it in another way with equal profit to itself? Whether censor or advertising agent, it is equally contemptible.

"Squeamishness, mock modesty, and narrowness of vision," truly observes the New York Times, "are qualities not singular to such Americans as sit in judgment on art matters. In Australia there is a fine showing of literary ignoramuses." The trustees of the Melbourne Free Library exclude from the shelves of that institution the works of Kipling, Haggard, Ouida, Mrs. Wood, and Miss Braddon. Here is a valuable pointer for the Recorder and the news companies.

Some of our reformatory friends who hav lately been holding the Recorder to their breasts may now drop it before it sinks its fangs into their flesh again. And it is more than ever apparent that the censorship of the press, begun in the asserted interest of "morality," has for its ultimate goal the suppression of all publications which do not do obeisance to the idols of popular superstition. Works "objectionable" to the Christians or "blasphemous" in their estimation are to be suppressed by law wherever they can revive old statutes or secure the enactment of new ones.

Governor Morris of Connecticut recently issued a proclamation in which he called upon the people of that state to fast and pray on March 23d. Here follow some of the grotesque things he wrote:

"The minds of the people seem so greatly at variance concerning the things needful for their happiness, that it would be well for them to continue the custom of observing this day, and in their invocation say, 'O Jesu, hominem salvator, with thy gracious light illumin the minds of thy children, who, groping in darkness, are unable to see the truth when it is presented to them."

His excellency should provide some one to translate into the Connecticut dialect the Latin with which he has enriched his lucid proclamation, or does he expect God to so illumin the minds of his parishioners that they will "see the truth when it is presented to them," even if disguised in a dead tongue? It would appear that Mr. Morris thinks prayer and fasting could be dispensed with if the people could only agree "concerning the things needful for their happiness," which is only a circuitous way of stating the world-old truth that man's extremity is God's (the priest's) opportunity. By the by, did the Nutmegers elect Morris to preach or to attend to the secular duties of governor?

"THE TRUTH SEEKER, organ of the Atheists, is coming to the help of those preachers who consider it their duty to prove that Christ made intoxicating liquor to be given to those who had already 'well drunk.' We are not surprised that THE TRUTH SEEKER should seize upon such a position with avidity; but that so many preachers should lend themselvs to the effort is somewhat surprising."—Voice.

The Voice is as complimentary to us as it is uncomplimentary to the preachers. It takes it as a matter of course that we should maintain the truth of history and honestly quote the Bible, but it is surprised that any ministers can be found who are candid in dealing with the subject of the Bible's attitude toward liquor drinking. Considering the records of the church writers and theological teachers this conclusion is natural enough, but we entertain a hope (tentativly and dubiously, we confess,) that a few years' service in the pulpit does not invariably crush all the truth out of a man. Dr. Funk should hav more charity for his fellow-workers in the Lord's vinyard. He used to be a preacher himself.

James E. Stone, the murderer of the Wratten family in Indiana, furnishes us with another timely text on the barren nature of Christian morality. This was written of him the day before his death:

"Stone has expressed no contrition for the horrible deed other than mere regret that his victims were sent out of the world unshriven. He is sorry they should hav been sent before their maker unprepared, but does not regret the butchery itself. Because of this and other peculiar features of the crime, there exists considerable doubt as to his sanity."

If Stone must be held to hav been insane because he was sorry his victims went to hell, but not sorry because he killed them, then Christendom was for ages a vast insane asylum. Millions of men, women, and children hav been murdered that their souls or the souls of others might be saved. Lynchers usually and legal executioners always giv their victims time to pray and make their peace with God before they kill them. It is a fundamental idea of the church that a man's "soul" is of infinitly more importance than his body. Stone was a logical Christian.

That usually very reasonable paper, the Oakland Times, gets into hot water beyond its depth when it attempts to defend the persecution of the participants in the Passion Play at Winfield, in this state. It says that "the sentiment of the majority of the people in this country is against the theatrical presentation of the scenes recorded in the early books of the New Testament." What of that? What has the majority to do about it? It could as pertinently be said that the sentiment of a majority of the people of England was at one time in favor of "blasphemy" laws, but that would not be a valid argument in justification of those laws. The majority then had no right to enact blasphemy laws, nor has a majority here and now any right to meddle with the exhibition of the Passion Play. The Times adds:

"The question as to whether there might be a logical justification for a play of this sort is of no importance so long as sentiment is offended by the actual production. Both the orthodox Jew and the orthodox Christian are offended by such performances, and it is the spirit of our laws that such sentiments, be they capable of logical explanation or not, shall be represented."

The lawmakers hav nothing to do with the "logical justification" for this play. "Orthodox people" are "offended" by the holding of Freethought meetings and the publication of Liberal papers, and hence, according to the logic of the Times, the "sentiments" of these pious people should be "represented" in "our laws" and the Freethought papers and meetings suppressed. The fact is, it is this meddling with questions of belief, the practice of worship, and the recreations of the people, that has no logical justification. It is unconstitutional, invasiv, and cruel. The Times should know better than to giv it the slightest encouragement.

The article upon church property which appears in this and the next issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be made into a pamphlet immediately upon completion. The book will be a vade mecum, as the pedants say, upon the subject, and is designed as a handbook for those who object to being held up by the tax gatherer and forced to pay other people's taxes.

This question will be brought before the New York Constitutional Convention, which meets in May, and every delegate shall be supplied with this pamphlet. We also desire to place it in the hands of every editor and legislator in the state—and in the country, if we can—with requests for notice and discussion. We also want to circulate it generally and generously. The price for single copies will be low (we will announce it as soon as the cost is determined) and in quantities still lower.

To distribute it as it should be we want help, particularly from the Liberals of New York state, though it will not be refused from anybody. It is a national question and work done in one state helps in others. Those who feel like helping can send such sums as they can spare and will receive pamphlets to the amount of their donation.

The more we receive the wider will be the circulation of the pamphlet. Every Liberal is interested in this question, and we hope will help us to distribute thousands.

Obituary.

JOHN M. L. BABCOCK.

One of the best known of the Freethinkers of Boston has met a tragic end. J. M. L. Babcock perished in a fire which occurred at 5 Dover street, in that city, at 3 o'clock on Tuesday morning, April 3d. He was suffocated and partially burned. One of the city papers states that when the fire was extinguished he was found dead in his bed, which would indicate that he escaped the agony of death by fire. Such, at least, is our hope.

Mr. Babcock's tall, commanding, and portly figure was a familiar one at all Liberal gatherings in Boston, and his full white beard and resonant voice made him a marked man anywhere. He was liked by all who knew him, for he was hospitable, generous, genial, and an excellent conversationalist.

Rev. J. M. L. Babcock first saw the light in New Hampshire, at Andover. His family were Baptists and he entered the ministry of that church in 1854. Here he remained for seventeen years, when he joined the Unitarians, preaching for the church of that faith at Groton, Massachusetts. In a few years he abandoned the ministry for good. The New Age was started by him in 1877. It was in the interest of labor and other reforms, but survived for only eighteen months, dying of the ailment so fatal to progressiv journals—lack of support. Subsequently Mr. Babcock took part in several political campaigns in behalf of the labor cause, and he wrote a novel, "The Dawning," to aid the development of Socialistic thought. He was a Freethinker for a number of years before his untimely and terrible death.

Four daughters and two sons survivo him. Funeral services were held in Parker Memorial Hall on Friday, April 6th, the liberal preacher, Rev. James K. Appleby, officiating. It is a pity that the preacher had not respect enough for the dead to forego prayer. His body was taken to Wilmot, New Hampshire, for interment.

From our personal acquaintance with him we cheerfully bear witness to his many good qualities, but for the dates here given and other biographical matter we are indebted to the Investigator, whose editor pays a tender tribute to his old friend.

DR. DWIGHT RUSSELL.

Dr. Dwight Russell, of Milford, Massachusetts, died in that city, March 24th, aged seventy-four years and eleven months. He was a man of unblemished character and he was not afraid to express his thoughts. L. K. Washburn delivered the funeral address.

The Constitutional Amendment Must be Indorsed by Congress.

I see it stated by Mr. Putnam that an effort will be made to hav the committee report the God-in-the Constitution amendment, in order that the people may hav a chance to act upon it; and it is urged that Congressmen can do this without committing themselvs in favor of it.

But they cannot. That is a great mistake; or else, what is worse, it is an attempt to deceive on the part of those who use this argument.

The Constitution, Article V., says: "The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments," etc. No Congressman has a right to vote to submit an amendment to the people unless he indorses it. The Constitution does not mean, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary to submit the amendment to the people, but when they shall deem it necessary that the amendment be made.

No, I seldom read any book by English Infidels. They never write anything worth reading! If I wish to know the worst and the ablest that has been said against Christianity, I send to the Truth Seeker Company, Lafayette place, New York, and I am sure to get there the ablest assaults on Christian truth. The three unbound volumes lying there, "Handbook of Freethought," "The Resurrection of Jesus Christ," and "The Creation of God," are all from that firm. They are fresh, trenchant, able, and uncompromising, and are useful in showing us what are some of the ideas and facts which make and keep some men Infidels.—Rev. George Duncan, Editor Gentlemen's Journal, London.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

Should It Be Exempt from Just and Impartial Taxation?

REASONS WHY IT SHOULD NOT.

An Argument for Eqnality of Taxation, and a Statement of Facts, Giving, from the Census of 1890, the Valne, by Denominations, of Church Property in the United States and in the Several States and Territories and in All Cities Having 25,000 or More Inhabitants; so Arranged as to Show at a Glance the Relative Standing as to Wealth of the Leading Denominations and Denominational Groups.—Also, Much Other Matter of Especial Interest to Certain Cities, States, and Sections.—All Comparisons and Percentages Based Upon Official Figures.

IV.

Kentucky.

Here we find ecclesiastical property valued at $12,112,320. Once more we list the leading denominations with their holdings:

Baptist	$3,020,742	Ger. Evan. Synod	$137,400
Methodist	2,718,518	Unitarian	70,000
Presbyterian	2,045,870	Lutheran	60,300
Catholic	1,800,550	Ger. Evan. Prot.	51,000
Disciples of Christ	1,331,510	Reformed	37,500
Prot. Episcopal	758,800	Congregationalist	20,200

One denomination holds about one-fourth of the total, three denominations considerably less than two-thirds, and five nearly eleven-twelfths.

Church property in Louisville is valued at $3,332,750, of which the Catholics own $889.200; the Baptists, $686,650; Presbyterians, $575,500; Episcopalians, $376,300; Methodists, $373,500; Lutherans, $40,800; Reformed, $25,000; Miscellaneous, $365,800. Covington, total, $574,600; Methodist, $200,000; Catholic, $165,000; Presbyterian, $80,000; Baptist, $60,600; Episcopalian, $45,000; Miscellaneous, $24,000. Total in two cities, $3,907,350.

As Newport is eighty-two inhabitants short of 25,000 it is not a city of the third class, and therefore its church statistics are not given by Dr. Carroll.

Louisiana.

In the Pelican state the value of church property is put at $5,032,194. These are the most prosperous denominations:

Catholic	$1,573,200	Lutheran	$64,400
Methodist	1,134,992	Ger. Evan. Prot.	40,000
Baptist	988,967	Unitarian	40,000
Presbyterian	454,035	Ger. Evan. Synod	26,450
Prot. Episcopal	387,950	Congregationalist	23,800
Jewish Cong.	275,000	Disciples of Christ	22,300

One denomination holds somewhat less than one-third of the total, and five denominations nine-tenths.

The total value of church property in New Orleans is $2,553,107, or considerably more than half of the total amount in the state. Of this the Catholics own $970,400; the Methodists, $438,607, Presbyterians, $337,000; Jewish Congregations, $235,000; Episcopalians, $231,500; Baptists, $137,850; Lutherans, $60,200; Miscellaneous, $142,550.

Maine.

In this state the census found church property to the value of $6,198,400. Most of it is divided among these denominations:

Congregationalist	$1,512,030	The Christians	$76,380
Baptist	1,511,000	Adventist	46,750
Methodist	1,152,875	Friends	35,975
Catholic	597,550	New Jerusalem	33,000
Universalist	542,900	Independ'nt Cong	17,500
Prot. Episcopal	406,590	Spiritualist	15,650
Unitarian	216,700	Presbyterian	12,000

One denomination owns approximately one-fourth of the church property in the state, two denominations own something less than one-half, while five own more than five-sixths.

The listed value of church property in Portland is $919,700, of which the Congregationalists own $221,000; the Episcopalians, $159,000; Catholics, $150,000; Methodists, $122,500; Baptists, $95,000; Miscellaneous, $172,200.

Maryland.

The church property in Maryland figures up to the comfortable total of $15,445,946. These are the denominations which should pay the state for protecting the greater part of this wealth:

Methodist	$5,347,527	Evangelical Ass'n	$123,900
Prot. Episcopal	2,427,406	United Brethren	113,789
Catholic	2,108,670	Unitarian	107,000
Presbyterian	1,752,424	Congregationalist	71,500
Lutheran	1,081,925	Disciples of Christ	66,200
Baptist	831,275	Dunkards	65,800
Reformed	484,225	New Jerusalem	44,600
Jewish Cong	266,500	Independent Cong	40,000
Ger. Evan. Synod	223,500	Universalist	30,000
Friends	210,850	Church of God	25,700

One denomination holds more than one-third of the total amount, two denominations own more than one-half, and five own more than four-fifths.

The total of church property in Baltimore is $9,528,838, of which the Methodists own $2,741,400; the Catholics, $1,462,920; Episcopalians, $1,418,544; Presbyterians, $1,191,324; Baptists, $804,150; Lutherans, $585,800; Jewish Congregations, $263,000; Reformed, $185,500; Congregationalists, $68,000; Miscellaneous, $808,200.

More than three-fifths of the church property in the state of Maryland is congested in the city of Baltimore.

Massachnsetts.

The total of church property in the Bay state is $46,835,014. The denominations responsible for the taxes upon nearly all this great wealth are given in the order of the magnitude of their delinquency:

Congregation'ist	$11,030,890	Spiritualist	$269,710
Catholic	9,816,003	Jewish Cong	245,500
Baptist	6,301,530	The Christians	160,300
Methodist	5,398,825	Friends	122,200
Unitarian	5,278,370	Independent Cong.	121,550
Prot. Episcopal	4,720,193	Lutheran	114,400
Universalist	2,110,193	Adventist	82,900
Presbyterian	530,500	Disciples of Christ	67,200
New Jerusalem	368,500	Reformed	56,000

One denomination owns less than one-fourth of the total amount, two denominations own about thirteen-twenty-ninths, and five own approximately nineteen-twenty-thirds.

The value of church property in Boston is $14,671,375, of which the Catholics own $3,296,700; the Congregationalists, $2,318,100; Episcopalians, $2,144,175; Baptists, $1,537,000; Methodists, $1,190,000; Presbyterians, $350,000; Jewish Congregations, $243,000; Lutherans, $72,000; Reformed, $56,000; Miscellaneous, $3,464,400. Worcester has church property valued at $1,986,004, of which the Congregationalists own $740,354; the Catholics, $402,000; Baptists, $247,350; Methodists, $206,900; Episcopalians, $148,000; Miscellaneous, $241,400. In Cambridge there is church property valued at $1,535,500, of which the Baptists own $401,500; the Catholics, $342,000; Congregationalists, $300,000; Episcopalians, $184,500; Methodists, $132,000; Miscellaneous, $175,500. In Springfield church property to the value of $1,219,300 is listed, of which the Congregationalists own $404,300; the Methodists, $221,500; Baptists, $185,000; Catholics, $93,500; Episcopalians, $70,000; Miscellaneous, $245,000. In Lowell there is ecclesiastical wealth to the amount of $1,162,000, of which the Catholics own $292,700; the Congregationalists, $280,000; Baptists, $186,500; Methodists, $143,900; Episcopalians, $77,000; Presbyterians, $25,000; Miscellaneous, $156,900. The value of church property in Lynn is given as $1,152,700, of which the Episcopalians own $236,000; the Methodists, $225,000; Baptists, $197,000; Catholics, $130,200; Congregationalists, $122,000; Miscellaneous, $242,500. Fall River is credited with church property valued at $1,141,407, of which the Catholics own $469,000; the Baptists, $192,850; Congregationalists, $155,400; Methodists, $116,800; Episcopalians, $98.657; Presbyterians, $28,000; Miscellaneous, $80,700. The value of church property listed in Somerville is $713,245, of which the Congregationalists own $217.000; the Baptists, 113,855; the Methodists, $113,000; Catholics, $75,500; Episcopalians, $38,000; Miscellaneous, $155,890. New Bedford has church property amounting to $668,750, of which the Catholics own $222,000; the Congregationalists, $85,000; Methodists, $79,600; Episcopalians, $66,900; Baptists, $44,600; Miscellaneous, $170,650 The value of church property in Lawrence is $594,600, of which the Catholics own $279,000; the Congregationalists $83,500; Baptists, $82,000; Methodists, $58,900; Episcopalians, 33,500; Miscellaneous, $57,700. Salem, the "Witch City," has church property listed at $572,900, of which the Catholics own $100,900; the Congregationalists, $82,000; Episcopalians, $60,000; Methodists, $58,000; Baptists, $41,000; Miscellaneous, $231,000. Holyoake, total, $546,976; Catholic, $185,000; Congregationalist, $117,976; Baptist, $104,000; Methodist, $62,000; Presbyterian, $30,000; Episcopalian, $20,000; Miscellaneous, $28,000. Taunton, total, $525,000; Catholic, $154,000; Episcopalian, $85,000; Congregationalist, $75,700; Baptist, $52,500; Methodist, $47,800; Presbyterian, $20,000; Miscellaneous, $90,000. Haverhill, total, $470,200; Baptist, $161,000; Catholic, $79,000; Congregationalist, $76,000; Methodist, $65,000; Episcopalian, $15,000; Miscellaneous, $74,200. Chelsea, total, $391,900; Congregationalist, $124,000; Baptist, $115,000; Methodist, $61,500; Catholic, $20,000; Episcopalian, $16,400; Miscellaneous, $55,000. Brockton, total, $387,600; Congregationalist, $130,000; Methodist, $65,600; Baptist, 45,500; Catholic, $40,000; Miscellaneous, $106,500. Total in sixteen cities, $27,739,457.

Mr. Carroll, in his compilation of church statistics, from which all our figures are taken, has, in dealing with cities of the third class, provided columns for Baptists, Catholics, Congregationalists, Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and "Miscellaneous" only. In tables of cities of the second class he has in addition columns for Jews and Reformed churches. The consequence is that in several of the cities of Massachusetts, as well as in some other cities, the "Miscellaneous" column contains some very large aggregates, as in the case of Salem, where $231,000, or more than two-fifths of the entire value of church property in that city, is lumped together. It is quite probable that the separation of these unclassified sums into their denominational component parts would show that the Unitarians, Universalists, Disciples, and perhaps other denominations would, in certain cities in the East and West and South, take the positions of the sects which, so far as the figures we have been able to give reveal, now occupy first, second, third, or fourth places. It is not very likely, however, that such an analysis of the "Miscellaneous" totals would, except possibly in a very few instances, result in relegating the denominations now in the first and second ranks, to subordinate ones. Most of the changes would be made in the third and fourth ranks. These probabilities are to be borne in mind in estimating the relative urban wealth and importance of the different denominations as exhibited below for Massachusetts and in the proper places for other states.

The Catholics hold first place eight times, second place three times, and fourth, five times; the Congregationalists hold first place five times, second place, six times, and third, four times; the Baptists hold first place twice, second place three times, third, seven times, and fourth, twice; the Episcopalians hold first and second places once each, and third and fourth places twice each; the Methodists hold second and third places three times each, and fourth, seven times.

First place is held eight times by the Catholics, five times by the Congregationalists, twice by the Baptists, and once by the Episcopalians. Second place is held six times by the Congregationalists, three times each by the Baptists, Catholics, and Methodists, and once by the Episcopalians. Third place is held seven times by the Baptists, four times by the Congregationalists, three times by the Methodists, and twice by the Epicopalians. Fourth place is held seven times by the Methodists, five times by the Catholics, and twice each by the Baptists and Episcopalians.

Although the Catholic church is the wealthiest ecclesiastical organization in eight of the sixteen larger cities of Massachusetts, its wealth in the entire state is much less than that of the Congregational church. A similar phenomenon is observable in New York and some other states.

Michigan.

Michigan churches own property to the amount of $18,682,971. The bulk of this wealth is divided among these denominations:

Methodist	$4,144,427	Universalist	$221,800
Catholic	3,671,350	Evangelical Ass'n.	188,450
Presbyterian	2,242,236	Unitarian	168,500
Baptist	2,135,694	Disciples of Christ	160,650
Prot. Episcopal	1,653,651	Jewish Cong.	154,000
Congregationalist	1,533,055	Adventist	118,275
Lutheran	1,109,058	The Christians	62,200
Reformed	484,800	New Jerusalem	34,600
United Brethren	252,800	Friends	26,900
Ger. Evan. Synod	242,450

One denomination holds a little less than two-ninths of the total amount of church property in the state, and five denominations hold about two-thirds.

The value of church property in Detroit is $4,119,150, of which the Catholics own $1,050,800; the Presbyterians, $875,000; Episcopalians, $621,600; Methodists, $397,200; Baptists, $344.200; Lutherans, $181,250; Congregationalists, $161,500; Jewish Congregations, $107,000; Miscellaneous, $380,600. Grand Rapids, total, $1.110,700; Catholic, $225,000; Congregationalist, $161.000; Methodist, $138,800; Baptist, $132,600; Episcopalian, $85,300; Presbyterian, $64,500; Lutheran, $54,000; Miscellaneous, $249.500. Bay City, total, $492,600; Catholic, $139,000; Methodist, $100,000; Episcopalian, $78,300; Baptist, $68,300; Presbyterian, $35,000; Lutheran, $23,500; Miscellaneous, $48 500. Saginaw, total, $488.800; Methodist, $131,000; Episcopalian, $104,500; Presbyterian, $70,300; Lutheran, $57,400; Catholic, $55,000; Baptist, $44,000; Miscellaneous, $26,600. Total in four cities, $6,211,250. The Catholics hold first place three times; the Methodists first, second, and fourth places once each; Episcopalians second place once and third place twice; Presbyterians second and third places once each; Baptists fourth place twice; Congregationalists second place once; Lutherans fourth place once.

Minnesota.

Church property in Minnesota is valued at $12,940,152. Most of it is owned by these denominations:

Catholic	$3,517,325	Ger. Evan. Synod	$97,900
Lutheran	2,143,805	Disciples of Christ	73,000
Methodist	1,764,493	Jewish Cong.	70,000
Presbyterian	1,329,910	Adventist	55,700
Baptist	1,204,889	Friends	35,500
Congregationalist	1,114,800	New Jerusalem	29,000
Prot. Episcopal	931,100	Reformed	28,620
Universalist	192,900	United Brethren	23 375
Evangelical Ass'n.	170,550	Moravians	20,600
Unitarian	126,600

One denomination owns more than one-fourth of the total amount, and five denominations own a little more than three-fourths.

The valuation of church property in Minneapolis is $3,446,828, of which the Catholics own $625,115; the Presbyterians, $546,000; Baptists, $513,863; Methodists, $485,200; Congregationalists, $465,250; Episcopalians, $246,200; Lutherans, $203,000; Jewish Congregations, $20,000; Miscellaneous, $342,200. St. Paul, total, $2,499,300; Catholic, $683,300; Methodist, $407,200; Presbyterian, $395,000; Lutheran, $269,300; Baptist, $250,400; Episcopalian, $193,700; Congregationalist, $133,200; Jewish Congregations, $50,000; Miscellaneous, $117,200. Freethought and Secular Notes from England.

THE CLERGY AND EDUCATION.

The clergy are in arms and are still fighting with all their might against our national system of secular education. The Education act of 1870 has been understood by the majority of the school boards as allowing the Bible to be read and explained in our public schools. For years this has been the case, but now the clerical party want more. They desire that in addition to the Bible "the principles of the Christian religion and morality shall be taught." Such is the singular wording of a proposal that has been discussed for some weeks in the London school board. The proposal was introduced by its clerical members, and at several meetings of the board all useful work had to giv way to the debating of this theological attempt to subvert the original object of the act. The clerical party are insisting upon the children being taught to believe in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. Thus it is sought to transform our schools into "Little Bethels" and the teachers into missionaries of the faith of the Church of England. The Unitarians, the Rationalists, and others on the board, are opposed to this innovation and hav made a determined stand against it. The curious features in the controversy are the efforts of the parsons to make it appear that their proposal does not mean the teaching of sectarianism! Impartial minds, however, cannot see it in that light. If the doctrin of the trinity is not sectarian, in the name of common sense what is? Obviously it is that which divides the Unitarian from the Trinitarian. But apart from the absurdity which such doctrins involve, there is the fact that the time which should be devoted to teaching the children their secular duties is taken up in submitting to them subjects that hav puzzled and divided mankind for ages, and which will continue to do so "while memory holds a seat" in a theologically distracted brain.

A REBUFF TO BIGOTRY.

It is evident that the bigots upon the Sunday question are not to be allowed to hav it all their own way. The Sunday Society has just scored a notable victory. Mr. Alderman Treloar's motion for the opening of the forthcoming Loan Exhibition at the London Guildhall Art Gallery on Sunday afternoons has been carried by the casting vote of the lord mayor in a full court. Every attempt was made by the Sabbatarian party in the corporation to frustrate the alderman's object, and not only was the court flooded with literature, but special whips were sent out to insure a large attendance in favor of Sunday closing. Petitioners against the motion were in the precincts of the Guildhall, but the court refused to hear them, as only one side was represented. The lord mayor has done a popular thing in enabling the corporation for the first time to try the experiment of Sunday opening, and all the work that is needed will be done by volunteers.

THE DEFEAT OF THE BISHOPS.

In my previous "Notes" I drew attention to the "Parish Councils bill," which was then being discussed in the British House of Commons. The object of the bill was to rescue the rural population from the power of the priests and of the aristocracy. After a protracted debate in the Commons the bill passed up to the House of Lords. Here it met with the fierce opposition of the bishops, who are supposed to be the successors of tent-makers, fishermen, and tax-gatherers. These preachers of poverty, but who are personally accumulators of wealth, did did not like to giv up the control of the poor Hence they persistently fought to the last to remain masters and administrators of the money left to aid the sick and the needy. This, which they hav held until recently, and which their predecessors hav for centuries held before them, has given them an influence over the poor which all their preaching failed to command. Fortunately, however, these servants of the Lord hav been defeated, and the bill has now been inscribed upon the statute book of England, giving the people in each parish absolute control over their local affairs. It is the most democratic measure that has been passed in England since the Great Reform bill of 1832. How it will work, and the extent of good it will effect, of course remains to be seen, but surely it will at once giv life to society in small places where hitherto the inhabitants hav had to exist under the rule of dull parsons and sleepy squires. This is indeed a noble triumph for Freethought and for personal freedom. Until recently the dwellers in our counties had no more to do with their own local, or with national affairs, than had the negroes of the South in America, but now Hodge is his own master, and the clergy of our rural population will henceforth be comparativly ciphers. This is secular progress of which we are justly proud. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear."

CRIME AMONG THE CLERGY.

During the past month crime has been rife among the clergy in England. The latest case is that of the Rev. Alexander Blair, vicar of Allerton Bywater, Yorkshire, who was recently charged with being intoxicated while officiating at a funeral. On March 14th he was deprived of his vicarage and benefice and all the privileges thereto belonging, by the bishop of Ripon, at a consistory court held in Ripon cathedral.

LATEST INFORMATION.

Just upon the eve of mailing these "Notes" the vote has been taken in the London School board upon the proposal referred to above. The clerical party hav carried their point by a majority of twenty-one. Notice has been given that next month a resolution will be moved to set the vote aside. Probably, however, the matter will not be settled until the election in November, when the work of the Freethinkers will be to secure a majority on the board in favor of purely Secular education.

London. CHARLES WATTS.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

I suppose some wonder if this book will ever be completed, but there is an end to all things, even to "Four Hundred Years," and the big book is almost ready. I hope my readers sufficiently appreciate the task which has been performed, and that their patient waiting has not been in vain. So far as the size of the book is concerned, they will certainly gain by the delay, for there will be eight hundred and fifty pages of reading matter instead of the six hundred I originally promised, and I believe that all the matter presented is valuable and helps to elucidate the subject, for I hav had to condense these pages out of twelve hundred pages prepared; and if I had written all that was in my mind I should hav had twice that amount. The material is immense. I had to read hundreds of books, as will be easily seen when the scope of the subject is understood. I hav not only had to read these books, but to arrange the matter in an original way, for this is the history of a movement and not a set of biographies. It is much more difficult to write of a movement than of a person, for not only must the movement itself be understood, but the relations of persons to its development. I hope my readers will thoroughly understand what I hav tried to do, and that this book is not a compilation of material ready at hand, but a digging up of new material and an interpretation of history which has not been given before. If this book had been merely a compilation I could hav finished it in a month; but being something radically different from anything before published, it could not be hurried through in any such manner.

I hav satisfied my intellectual conscience in this book. I feel that I hav done the best I could do in the space allowed; that all I hav given is valuable as matter of history. I do not know of anything that I would strike out or alter, for I hav written this book first of all as a matter of love, and not for any fame or fortune connected with it. However, I hav felt keenly the limitations of space, for great worlds of thought hav been open before me which I hav not been able to express. I hav satisfied my conscience but not my ideal. It has been hard for me to forego many things, to avoid tempting regions simply because of the limitations of time and space. If any miss things in this book which they would like to see, it is not because I hav not seen or desired them, but because I could not write in eight hundred and fifty pages what would occupy two or three thousand pages. I hav endeavored to select the best in reference to the history of Freethought.

Now I hope that those who hav delayed about subscribing for the book will send in their names at once. I hav at present over five hundred and fifty names enrolled who hav subscribed and paid for the book. I hav one hundred names who hav subscribed, but not paid. Now, according to agreement, I am not to enroll in the book the names of those who do not pay beforehand. To do so would be hardly fair. I want a solid list of subscribers to show the world those who hav not merely said they were going to take the book, but who hav really paid the cash; and this is the rule I mean to adopt —to enroll only cash subscribers, for I think that one can pay five dollars now as easily as a month hence if he really wants to do it. If these one hundred pay up, and I hope they will, for there will never be a better chance to go upon the roll of honor, I shall hav nearly seven hundred names to enroll. I would like a thousand, and I hope that at this eleventh hour when the book is ready to be ushered upon the world there will be a rush of subscribers to make up the one thousand. I want my friends to understand that I hav spent about one year's hard work on this book, and meantime I hav had practically to abandon the lecture-field, and therefore I need all the substantial aid I can get for this undertaking. Taking all expenses together it will cost pretty near four thousand dollars to publish this souvenir edition of one thousand copies. I can assure my friends that the price of this book will never be any less than five dollars. How can it be, with eight hundred and fifty printed pages and nearly one hundred and fifty portraits, making in all a volume of over one thousand pages? I hav given one-third more than I bargained for at the beginning. I hav done this because I wanted to do the work well, money or no money. I hav wanted to giv as far as possible a vast and inspiring picture of Freethought—Freethought in history, in the grandeur of philosophy, in the splendor of poetry, and Freethought also among the masses of the people; Freethought as home life and social development.

Now, friends, since my arduous task is done I want one grand rally at the last, and a pioneer roll-call of one thousand. Write to me, or directly to THE TRUTH SEEKER. S. P. PUTNAM.

Notes of Work.

I hope that the friends of Freethought will not cease their contributions to the fund, for undoubtedly I shall hav to go to Washington again to look after the Sunday bill. It will not do to neglect these things. The enemy are busy as bees, and if we are not careful they will get some advantage over us. Don't fail to send your contributions right along to E. C. Reichwald, 165 South Water street, Chicago. I want especially to call upon New York Liberals to supply the means for work, for the Constitutional Convention is near at hand, and I shall attend that to push the cause of impartial taxation; and besides, I want to be armed with that bristling pamphlet—bristling with facts and arguments—on church taxation just published by the Truth Seeker Company. I want to distribute thousands of copies of that pamphlet; I want to giv a copy to every member of the convention. This is important, and to New York Liberals I say, attention. Giv us the means of work. If more convenient, New York Liberals can send directly to me at New York city, or to THE TRUTH SEEKER itself. The money will be accounted for to the treasury of the Federation, and the receipts will be published. One little country church raised $250 to put "God" in the Constitution. Let us learn from the enemy. If money is raised to put God in, we must also raise money to keep him out. We must hav plenty of ammunition for this fight.

I shall begin my Western tour about June. I hav some communications from Wisconsin. I shall deliver lectures in that state at Neilsville and other places on the plan of the "Press and Platform Campaign." I hope that Liberal friends in Wisconsin will join in the work. I want a good circuit in that state. There is Bangor City, Michigan. I expect to journey that way; so I hope that friends in Michigan will stir up matters. Since the decision of its supreme court on Sunday laws there is need of education. Clinton and Nevinsville, Iowa, and Ord, Nebraska, are among my appointments, and I want more in these states; and then I shall push on to the Coast. Northport, De Ruyter, and Elmira, New York, are also points where I expect to labor, and I hope New York Liberals will make a good rally. I want this campaign to tell. We must not only secularize the state, we must also secularize the people. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Observations.

One of the daily papers last Sunday printed a picture over the line, "Will Somebody Please Build a Fire Under This Donkey?" It represented a donkey standing crosswise, and so obstructing, the road in front of a stagecoach; the donkey being the United States Senate and the coach the business interests of the country. The picture tells the whole story, but I do not see how those who believe in business legislation can draw any moral from it consistent with their line of thought. Having admitted that Congress may interfere with the natural course of trade, the people are in the position of theologians who teach that God, having bestowed life or any other blessing upon us, has a right to withdraw it, and we must bow in resignation to his will without entering any complaint. I reject that notion, and I reject also the notion that the national legislature has anything to do properly with encouraging or discouraging private enterprise. I can imagin that a Senator or Congressman familiar with all the branches of industry, from picking up cigar stumps to managing a railroad, might hit upon a law to protect some universal principle from violation, which would be a good thing. We know, however, from experience and observation, that no such Senator or Congressman has asserted himself; and we discover that when any commercial measure comes before a legislativ body, each member votes for or against it according as its passage or rejection would affect his own individual interests. This is perfectly natural—so natural, in fact, that if he should profess to hav voted otherwise no one would believe him, although his general reputation for truth and veracity might be good. Thus those who vote for the Wilson bill, with its income-tax rider, do so because they know, or think they know, that the bill will put more money in their pockets than the rider will take out. Thus, also, the members of the Senate delay action on the tariff bill in order that they may realize all there is in it for them. From the point of view of exact justice a discriminating tariff schedule—stimulating one established industry and depressing another—is as obnoxious as the religious amendment to the Constitution or the exemption of ecclesiastical property from taxation. Anybody who cannot see this is certainly blind in one eye. Such measures are out of place in House or Senate. They are the thick part of the paternal-government wedge, which, when driven home, will split the body politic all the way up the back.

Notice has been served on Mohammed Charles Chilton Moore, editor of the Blue Grass Blade, Lexington, Ky., that suit will be filed against him in the civil court for blasphemy. His prosecutor is the Rev. E. L. Southgate. Mr. Moore was once a preacher, but some years ago exchanged belief for unbelief, adopting Prohibition as an efficient substitute for the invasiv bigotry of religion. But he is not to be prosecuted for being a Prohibitionist, for it is the peculiarity of laws framed after the fashion of blasphemy statutes, that they aim at repressing that which makes for good in a man rather than that which tends to constitute him a public nuisance. As a Prohibitionist Mohammed Moore is one of that undesirable class of persons who would invoke the aid of the law in enforcing upon all others their own methods of pursuing pleasure and attaining happiness. As such he belongs with the church, and as such he could consistently prosecute those whose system of worship is not the one he would prefer that they should practice. In being prosecuted for blasphemy, therefore, he is suffering in his own person the pains which he seeks to inflict upon his neighbor by means of a law identical in character with that invoked against him. But two wrongs cannot make a right. Though blessed by the church and licensed by the state, their progeny is still wrong. It is not a crime to sell what another desires to buy, whether injurious or otherwise; neither is it a crime to express any opinion, whether honest or not, and the prosecution of Moore for blasphemy is as wicked as the prosecutions he contemplates under the Prohibition law when he gets one.

The communication from Mr. E. O. Roscoe on page 235 of this volume contains a startling proposition, to wit:

> Either Macdonald is or I am misleading the people—certainly unwittingly—to the best of our ability; and being directly opposed to one another regarding the question of finance, it is certain that one or the other of us should—in the interest of that portion of the public we reach—stop.

If I were to write the foregoing sentence I should throw the last part of it into another form, as, "it is certain that, in the interest of that portion of the public we reach, one or the other of us should stop"—thus bringing the auxiliary "should" into closer relation with its principal "stop"—but that may pass. The proposition in any form would be novel. Stop? I know not what course the Prophet may take, but so long as any crude remarks of mine can call forth a bi-weekly communication from Gowanus, they will be continued in our next. Besides, the principle is wrong. Nothing displays the proportions of truth to so much advantage as to set it up beside a dwarfed and shriveled error. The mistakes of Moses and the blunders of the church hav done more than anything else to stimulate scientific research. Then let the Prophet continue to oppose his yellow dollar to the silver one which I present, and if it looks the better, the larger, the more glorious, and generally more respectable, persons with a clear vision, like that portion of the public we reach, will not be slow to see it.

But to come back to what has been written, I wish to suggest to Mr. Roscoe that when a discussion is in progress, and all the knowledge of the subject is on one side, it is scarcely considerate in the party so favored to repeatedly recur to the ignorance of the other. I am almost persuaded that to wait until such ignorance is revealed is more judicious than to assume its existence at the outset and without citing evidence in proof. And again, an unlettered block will serve as well as any for him to chop logic on.

Mr. Roscoe has asked whether certain facts as to cents—including the government monopoly of coining them, and their exchangeability for other money—do not account for their passing at their face value. It is true, as he says, that such governmental monopoly is a fact in any section of the country; but he knows of no section of the country where they are refused. He has not heard of the Pacific slope, where government monopoly and other accidents of the cent-piece cut no figure. Not only are they not receivable there in sums which "the law allows as a legal tender," but a passenger on a street car in San Francisco cannot force them upon the conductor in payment of a five-cent fare. This is true also of two-cent and three-cent pieces. While I was a resident of San Francisco an Eastern man who tendered two of the latter coins for his fare was ejected from the car, and when he brought suit for damages the courts sustained the railway company. This occurred, too, within a few minutes' ride of the sub-treasury. I argued from these circumstances that since government monopoly of making coins and their exchangeability for money in other forms did not secure currency to cents in quarters where they are not useful in commercial transactions, we must look to some other cause for their currency in other localities. I cannot blame Mr. Roscoe for not accepting the argument, since he was ignorant of the facts upon which it was based.

Mr. Roscoe explains the circulation at par of dollars based on twelve and one-half cents' worth of gold by saying that few want the gold so long as it is to be had for the asking. It is plain, then, that one dollar of one hundred cents' intrinsic value will float twelve and one-half of no intrinsic value. I am no hand at planning, but it strikes me that a twelve-and-one-half per cent seigniorage would protect the government credit under free coinage as efficiently as the same percentage of gold now sustains the government's paper promises to pay. The Prophet will see that every twelfth dollar might be coined to contain one hundred cents' intrinsic value of silver, and as not even one person in twelve seems to want his money redeemed, and as the big dollar would pass for no more than the ordinary size, it would, for obvious reasons, remain in the treasury.

As a reason for not believing that free coinage would raise the commercial value of the silver dollar to that of gold, Mr. Roscoe submits that it costs thirty-four times as much to produce an ounce of gold as it does to produce an ounce of silver. A report prepared and published by the Western miners' association about a year ago gave the cost of silver production at $1.20 an ounce, and of gold at about $20 an ounce, as nearly as I can remember the figures. This expense of course includes the capital invested in unsuccessful mining ventures, which can only be roughly estimated. There are mines that turn out gold or silver almost as cheaply as it could be coined, and others that, after an investment of perhaps a million, turn out nothing. From conversation with practical miners and from the perusal of treatises on the subject, I doubt whether the ratio of cost to value of gold and silver is approximately known, or whether their ratio to each other, as to cost of production, can be more than guessed at. The Prophet's cocksure and mathematical statement of the ratio as 34:1, therefore, causes me to wonder at the extent of his information. Perhaps the wisest remark to be made upon this branch of the subject is that what we know about the expense of gold and silver mining can only convince us that both metals cost a good deal more than they are worth. But however that may be, it is a contradiction in terms to say that a dollar which is a legal tender, and which is receivable for taxes, can fall below par, at least in this country. As for other countries, when the choice comes between keeping their goods, and accepting American money for them, I doubt if it will take them long to decide. Mr. Roscoe's statement that "our gold and silver money is accepted abroad by weight, and our other money not at all," should be entertained only as a theory. The testimony of travelers is that our money, paper preferred, stands next to the English bank-note, which in most civilized countries has commanded a premium over gold.

My valued opponent, in closing, fears I shall accuse him of lacking the sense of humor if he takes my method of redeeming Mr. Peck's note seriously. His apprehension is groundless, for it is not humor that he lacks, but fairness; otherwise he would admit that when a note is accepted by its author in payment of an obligation due him, it is redeemed.

The New York Sorosis, a women's society, last week discussed the proprietry of telling fairy stories to children, with frequent reference to the Christmas myth, Santa Claus. The remarks of Mrs. Merriman showed that at least one member of the club believes in imposing upon children the double task of learning and unlearning. This lady said:

> "As for Santa Claus not being real, why there are people to whom the Christ child is not real either. Does it matter much? There will come a time, when we reach another stage of existence, when some one will say, these things you took for vital truths were but parables. That reminds me that a school-girl not long ago gave this definition of a parable: 'A heavenly truth with no earthly meaning in it.' People may sav that angels are physical monstrosities; that a child cannot be born of a divine parent; that the story of the wise men following the star is but a parable of wisdom leading the way. Yet, I put it to you, is not the world better for being nourished in its spiritual infancy on these fictions?"

So it goes. Just as we are beginning to think that the women are achieving a degree of good sense unknown to the majority of the male population, some such break as this is made by one of their representativs, and down goes the fair conceit.. For to say that children are made better if taught fables by parents is equivalent to affirming that parents are improved by having liars for children. The parent who sustains a child's intellect with the literature of miracle and myth is about as culpable as though he restricted its physical nourishment to wind.

Recent events hav given a set-back to the socialistic proposition that the general government should own and control railroads and telegraph lines. The ministry now in power in Newfoundland are all in court for bribing voters by hiring them with public funds to do useless work on interior railway construction, which may be regarded as a fair sample of what would occur when the spoils system now prevalent in this country is extended to include all the larger industries. Governor Tillman, of South Carolina, by seizing a telegraph line and dictating press dispatches, has further exhibited the beauties of complete government control of the means of communication, of which the Comstock censorship of the mails had given us a foretaste.

Religious surveillance of scientific investigation, as exemplified in the expurgated reports of the Smithsonian Institute; governmental railroad building as exemplified in Newfoundland; governmental control of liquor selling, as illustrated in South Carolina, and government seizure of telegraph lines as exemplified by Tillman; governmental espionage over the moral qualities of mail matter as exemplified by the Comstock laws—how do the Socialists like it as far as they hav got?

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

EDWARD KING lectured last Sunday before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association on "What Labor Demands of the Constitutional Convention." The lecture was an able, earnest, and to many minds, a convincing one. Among the numerous things labor wants is the repeal of all the so-called conspiracy laws, an employers' liability act, making employers responsible for all accidents to employees resulting from their negligence; home rule for all municipalities and villages, and the referendum, whereby people will be able to vote direct on all questions of reform and otherwise.

FRANKLIN STEINER, of Des Moines, Iowa, delivered his celebrated lecture on "Evidences of Christianity Tested," to a crowded house in Marks' Hall last evening. He is an eloquent and forceful speaker, and held the audience spellbound. The ideas advanced being Infidel in their character, were with many "let in at the one ear and out at the other." To-night he will lecture on "The Great Conspiracy."—Greensburg Tribune.

Letters of Friends.

Wants "Four Hundred Years."

LEAD HILL, ARK., March 16, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1.50 for the continuance of THE TRUTH SEEKER to my address, and when the "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" is completed I will send $5 for the book. F. R. LEE.

Cannot Do Without Their Friend.

RIVERSIDE, CAL., March 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You will please find inclosed $3 to pay for the good old TRUTH SEEKER another year, as we cannot do without our old friend in this hypocritical town. W. CUNNINGHAM.

He Lends a Helping Hand.

DUNDER, N. Y., March 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find draft for $6 to renew my subscription to the grand old TRUTH SEEKER; $2 to help keep God from interfering with our Constitution and $1 to the picture man Heston. We cannot get along without him, and why should not every Liberal that can afford to, send him $1? I make the draft $6.10, so you will not hav postage to pay sending money as directed. W. C. SWORTS.

May He Stray No More.

EAST OTTO, N. Y., March 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please excuse delay and accept many thanks for your very valuable paper, which I do not mean to do without. A word of welcome to the Man with the Badge-pin, and all the Pledges that he can keep. I hope that no western fever will ever cause him to again stray from your side.

Find inclosed money order for $6, for which send THE TRUTH SEEKER to address given, and Remsburg's "Lincoln," cloth. CLARK BURCHARD.

A Look Over the Shoulder.

OMAHA, NEB., March 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2.25, which will pay my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER until Dec. 31, 1894. I am pleased with the paper in every respect so far.

The cartoons are immense. It frequently amuses me while I am reading during noon hour to hav some pious believer or holy fakir sneak up behind me to see what the cartoons look like, in which case I never forget to let him see them. Wishing your splendid paper a successful career, I am yours truly, JOHN MCARDLE.

Will Want a "Host" of Books.

BERNIC, MONT., Feb. 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I would be glad to send some new subscribers, but hav failed so far to get any. Your letter reminds me of the fact that I am behind on my own subscription, though you were too modest to say so. I cannot do without THE TRUTH SEEKER. Send it along and inclosed you will find pay for another year.

I am teaming in this country and hav no settled place, but when I stop for good I will order a host of your books.

Yours for liberty, GEO. W. SCOBEE.

Not to Preserve but to Acquire Liberty.

DANSVILLE, N. Y., March 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith I inclose copies of petition, etc., with twenty names. I wish it were as many thousand. I havn't strength and time to spare to canvass the town and am not acquainted at all except on the hillside. I hope there will be a powerful protest presented to Congress. No one to whom I hav presented it has hesitated to sign. There is a tremendous struggle before us to preserve our republic and acquire liberty. Respectfully, LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

Liberal Societies Wanted.

BLAINE, WASH., March 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: There are a great many Liberals here, but only a few who speak out. I would be glad to see a Liberal League in every city and village in the country. I am sorry I hav kept you waiting for your money so long, but I was hoping to get a new subscriber or two. I will send the money for renewal and for "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." If you hav tracts for free distribution I will scatter some where I think they will do the most good. Wishing all friends of the Truth Seeker Company a happy life, I remain your Liberal friend, A. GEERY.

The Preacher Well Answered.

PELLA, IA., March 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $5 for another year's subscription and Paine's "Great Works Complete." I liv within two hundred yards of six or seven sky pilots, who frequently called on me, but they hav nearly stopped, as they could not stand Freethought. There was one called on me for a favor, and we talked some on the Bible, and he said we were all sinners; he was a sinner and his wife was a sinner, and my wife and myself were sinners. I told him I did not think so, for I had lived with my wife nearly sixty years, and I never knew her to do a bad thing. Then he said he had a good woman, and so had I, and I told him good folks were not sinners; and he said no more. I am eighty years old, but I will do what I can the rest of my life. W. S. GEORGE.

His Blood is Not Congealed.

SITKA, ALASKA, March 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to write you sometime. I would like to tell you what a church-ridden territory Alaska is; what a perfect paradise it is for the surplus missionary element of the States; all about the clanging of church-bells, keeping good people awake day and sometimes through the night; all about how the government is ignoring the people's mandate of separating church from state; how rich the (poor) Indian is and how well the poor missionary knows it. I must, however, take some other time to write full particulars. I would like you to secure a census report (the last one of Alaska), in which you will see the methods pursued.

I am as poor as a church mouse, but as I hav subscribed for THE TRUTH SEEKER since 1878, I will continue to scrape up enough to renew. Inclosed find postal note for $2.50. I giv away papers and send some all along the coast, but am afraid that I hav not done much good for you or myself. R. ALBERTSON.

Air Foul With Superstition.

RICEVILLE, IA., March. 25, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find money order for books as per list inclosed. I would like to know if Paine's "Age of Reason" is published in German and how and where I can get it, for I hav a sister living in Illinois who is still entombed in Catholicism and priestcraft. She cannot read English, and I think the "Age of Reason" would be the best book I could send her to begin with in the process of Rationalism. I hav lately made a visit to some of my relativs and friends in a community where I used to liv before I went through the process of evolution from darkest Catholicism to mental liberty and Freethought. Here I found the air so foul, so poisoned with superstition and ignorance, that I could endure it only a few days, for to "argue with those who hav renounced the use of reason is like giving medicin to the dead," because the priests are applying the science of ignorance to perfection on the poor dupes. Christianity is yielding some legitimate fruits in this part of the country, for insanity cases on account of overdoses of religion are quite numerous.

HENRY BISSON.

[We are very sorry to say that the "Age of Reason" is not printed in German.—ED. T. S.]

A Scrap of History.

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: There is a great time made with some people about Easter. What is Easter anyway, that it has become so popular among the people when it is known to be the English word for the Saxon goddess Estre, whose festival was held in April?

The Christian church commemorates the savior's resurrection on the day which is set apart for the Jewish Passover, without any reason, and calls it Good Friday, or Long Friday, as the Saxons say.

It is no honor to our translators that this word occurs in the English Bible, as you will find it in Acts xii, 4. It should hav been Passover. Easter is a word of Saxon origin. The name became attached by association of ideas to the Christian festival of the resurrection which happened at the time of the passover. Hence we say Easter day, Easter Sunday, but very improperly.

As early as the second century there was keen dispute respecting the day on which this feast should be kept. The dispute was finally settled at the council of Nice in 325, which ordained that it should always occur on Sunday. So, you see, it is of human invention, and is of no use whatever but to humbug the people.

Dr. Jorton says these councils hav been much extolled by Catholics and by Protestants. They were collections of men who were frail and fallible. S. R. THORNE.

The Theologian.

Along the flowery pathway stalks
The Theologian—solemn, grim;
Brooding o'er deeds of death and sin
With which to terrify his flocks.

And as with creed-killed soul he walks
Toward his church across the fields,
His cane of Cainish blight he wields
And whisks the daisies from their stalks.

No shade of guilt comes o'er his look,
As thus he murders kindred life;
For in his mind ferments that strife
Which bigots wage around their book.

Their eyes are blind to all that's kind,
Save kindness cruel made by creeds;
Creeds cruel as those savage deeds
That sought by blood to chain the mind.

A cobwebbed mass of myths that blind,
Crumbling 'midst shouts of nations freed,
The church, with all her crazy creed,
Still cramps the freedom of the mind!

Yet as a lad he roamed through vales
And culled with tender care the rose
That opens wells of joy to those Who learn to love the hills and dales.

So pure, so good his boyhood shone,
His parents held him fit to preach.
He grew a man, to rave and screech,
And all his sympathies were gone.

He grew a man of selfish heart,
And empty forms became his prayer;
And, staining dark a name most fair,
Ascribed to Christ the juggler's art.

And now he struggles to upbear
The tottering pillar of the past;
But science says it shall not last,
And man and nature both declare

Its might has vanished with the slave,
No more upheld by freedom's foes;
For man stamps out his ancient woes,
And grandly marches past their grave.

THANE JONES.

Liberty! Liberty! Liberty!

COLUMBUS, KAN., March 15, 1894.

READERS: You who are strong and young, who hav heads to think and hearts to feel, wake up and fight for life and liberty. Be vigilant, activ, aggressiv, heroic. Circulate the remonstrance; write to your Representativs and Senators and make a grand effort in this crisis to save American liberty, the Declaration of Independence, and the National Constitution from the clerical vandals and traitors gathered at Washington. For twenty years past I hav done my part in circulating various petitions to Congress and writing letters to representativs and presidents, but I can do so no more, as I am about played out. But as long as I can talk, write, and think, Liberty shall be my living sentiment and my dying sentiment, as John Adams said. Romans betrayed Rome. The pretended friends of Constitutional liberty, in violation of their official oaths, are stabbing liberty to the heart by their religious legislation.

Every man and woman who wants a church-and-state religion is an enemy of and traitor to natural and constitutional liberty.

Do any of the Freethinkers and lovers of liberty want to be deprived of their testimony in the courts, be disfranchised, be compelled to "keep Sunday" as Christians may dictate, and pay taxes to support that and those who deprive them of their liberty? If not, now is the time and not a moment to wait, to show your manhood and love of humanity. We hav given the tyrannical enemies of liberty an inch and they hav taken an ell of our liberties, and soon they will all go if we do not all unite in a long pull and a strong pull. Must Putnam, like his Revolutionary namesake, be the first and foremost to plead alone before the committee for our liberty? As it looks to me, every lawyer in the land who loves truth and liberty should hasten to Washington with R. G. Ingersoll as leader and show those traitors by numbers, as well as eloquence and logic, that they, that those who are not Christians, hav rights and aspirations they are bound to respect. Oh that I had health and strength and means to go at once to Washington and fight for my liberty and life; for my liberty is my life. Every court that decides that this is a Christian nation, decides a lie, violates its oath, and is a traitor to liberty. Shall one-third of the people (Christians) rule, control, and compel the other two-thirds to liv, and think, and act and spend their time as the Christians dictate, sustained by church-and-state enacted laws? Ho! to the rescue, ho! "Up, guards, and at them." "A liberty that someone else must define for me is no liberty at all." Reader, is there anything more precious to you than your liberty? If there is, then are you willing to be a slave or a hypocrit when our enemies hav destroyed the liberty we hav had? The love of liberty has been a constant inspiration to me. O reader, let it inspire and impel you to action in liberty's present struggle for life.

"O Liberty! thou wast undone,
Wast from thy nativ country driven
When tyranny eclipsed the sun
And blotted out the stars of heaven."

J. H. COOK.

Bible Points for Military Chiefs.

SCRANTON, PA., March 29, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: We had the pleasure of hearing three good lectures, delivered in the Music Hall of this city by John E. Remsburg. They were: "Fathers of Our Republic," "Bible Morals," and "Sabbath-Breaking." Mr. Remsburg, at the conclusion of his last lecture, urged us to organize, which we did on March 14th. You may hear from our secretary in the near future. I went to visit one of our members and saw that his tables were strewn with Liberal works of all kinds. He gave me six back numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Believe me, I hav a good laugh every time I look at them; they would be just the thing for Sunday-schools. I am not a subscriber to any Liberal journal, but I intend to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER as soon as I can.

I am a genuin Infidel and am proud to say that I fear no God, ghost, or devil, or any other windbag; but this has been the cause of my being held down. I work in the mines, and all mine foremen are religious cranks, which makes it hard for a Freethinker to liv under their paw, but I would rather die branded with Freethought and truth than to be crowned with lies of barbarian kings who may hav lived a few thousand years ago.

I hear much talk about Spiritualism; I believe as much in that as I do in the famous or infamous old Adam and Eve story. No, love is my religion. I love the small as well as the great, the weak as well as the strong, the poor as well, and better, than the rich. But my Christian friends would hav me believe that the sun and the moon did stand still. Why did not the great generals Grant and Lee try the same scheme in the late war? Why did they not giv the ocean a kick and make a path in it, and when their enemy would follow cause it to close in on them?

Now, a few words about our organization: We hav had only two meetings as yet, and we don't know exactly which way to point our cannon or how to load it. If you could giv us any information I would like to present it at our next meeting, which is next Sunday. There are undoubtedly two or three thousand Freethinkers in this city; but they will not show up because we cannot offer them protection against their cowardly oppressors, by whom we are all employed; we are the next thing to being unemployed at present. I cannot afford to buy anything just now, but as soon as we begin to work I will be on your subscription list.

I remain, Yours in Freethought,

W. W. WATKINS.

["What to do" in local societies is one of the most difficult problems we are trying to solve. So much depends upon the conditions in any given place. Those upon the ground should be better qualified than any others to choose effectiv methods. Where there is not sufficient money to employ our traveling lecturers and there is little or no home speaking talent a number of expedients may be resorted to which are often found quite successful. Hav some one read a lecture or editorial from a Liberal paper. Comment upon it, either from your seats or the platform. Or read from some Freethought or scientific book. A good reader and a good book put together on the stage can interest and instruct an audience of Freethinkers. Then hav music if you can; any instrument will please the children and singing will draw numbers into the ranks of the entertainers. Recitations, dialogs—everything of the kind helps. Make a cheerful place for all—men, women, and children—to meet. That is what will empty the churches. Hav a Sunday-school if you can. Get speakers whenever possible; many will be glad to hav the opportunity to address your society. We mean occasional, volunteer, speakers. Try to keep informed by your daily reading in regard to all matters of especial interest to Freethinkers, and then when you come together tell your friends what you hav learned and exchange your opinions about the matter. A picnic, a dinner, a festival, will help make you sociable. Huxley's and Tyndall's scientific essays, Ingersoll's lectures, Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," Miss Wixon's "Apples of Gold," Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," Beall's "Brain and the Bible," Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," would furnish you with hundreds of splendid selections to read and discuss.—ED. Events Interestingly Touched.

CINCINNATI, O., March 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: St. Patrick's day found the writer in Cincinnati, where he received a hearty greeting from that stalwart Liberal, Dr. E. S. McLeod. There is no joke about the stalwart, as our Esculapian disciple stands about six feet six and is of majestic proportions. He is a host in himself, and he is honored by all who hav had the good fortune to form his acquaintance. The doctor was one of the chief supporters of the Chicago Secular Union in its days of influence and prosperity.

That evening I accompanied the doctor to a lecture on "Socialism," by Richard T. Ely, professor of political economy in the University of Wisconsin, at the Odeon Music Hall. Having read a number of articles by Mr. Ely, I had formed an exaggerated opinion of his importance and integrity. I should hav admired him more without hearing him. His lecture was illusivly indefinit, prolix, and pedantic. Sometimes you would think he was an advocate of Socialism, at another an opponent. If it was intended as advocacy it was a very cold-blooded sort, which I can scarcely appreciate. If there is anything I like it is to hear a person who is fairly imbued with an idea (even if it be an erroneous one from my point of view) and not afraid to place himself on record. He seemed to stifle Socialism by "they do thus and so." It was too impersonal altogether. It lacked spirit and ardor. The amount of information dispensed appeared microscopic. He seemed to feel that either himself or his subject was out of place. It was something of a society event, as the speaker and the chairman appeared in evening dress. In the audience was a fair scattering of preachers. The chairman is president of some theological mill in the Gem city. The audience was not a Socialistic one.

During the lecture the speaker defined Anarchism and Socialism. At its close questions were allowed, of which this is a sample: "Do Anarchists believe in a divine authority?" The lecturer replied that no Anarchist could believe in a God or any authority. George Light, president of the Ohio Liberal Society, being present, asked if the Socialists believed in divine authority. The speaker declared that many of them did and many of them did not.

Sunday afternoon George Light attended the funeral of a business friend with whom he often conversed, but who, while he had attended the meetings occasionally, had never joined the Liberal society. He was agreeably surprised to find that instead of a thoroughly orthodox Presbyterian funeral his friend had left instructions that no priest or preacher should hav any part in it and that two of his friends should officiate—one say a few words at the house, the other at the grave. This shows that the Ohio Liberal Society is spreading common sense in that community.

The society now occupies the spacious, light, attractiv hall of the Cincinnati College, directly opposit the Gibson House, for their regular Sunday evening meetings.

I attended the meeting of March 18th. The subject of the evening was "The Physical Evolution of Mind," and the speaker J. Clegg Wright. Andrew Hogg ably presided. The lecture was a brilliant effort—profound, yet entertaining. The speaker possesses a splendid voice and knows how to use it effectivly, often emphasizing his points with dramatic force. He is thoroughly radical, but insinuates sufficient irony, humor, and sarcasm into his address—especially when dealing with theological vagaries—to keep his audience en rapport from beginning to end. There are but few Liberal lecturers who can be compared with J. Clegg Wright.

The lecture concluded, Chairman Hogg announced that the speaker would delineate the characters of such persons as would be called on the platform. The first subject was the genial president of the society, George Light; the second was a lady of the society. Speaking of the leading characteristics of Mr. Light, the lecturer said he was impulsiv, generous to a fault, yet withal possessed fine traits to make a prosperous business man. As George is a strong Materialist, you can better imagin than I can describe the effect of the professor's announcement that "he [Mr. Light] was a healer—a medium." Well, the house went wild over this, and I concluded to suggest THE TRUTH SEEKER, as soon as possible, as the advertising medium wherein Brother George could spread the "Light" of healing on his wings—fins. The next subject was the writer, but, really, the professor said so many flattering things about my "scientific" style of mind—a searcher for facts, etc.—that I will revert to the weak points. He said I was inordinately sensitiv; that is, I had been so until late years; wanted my own way; no one would drive me off with a broomstick; there was a good deal of combativness about me; I was not cut out for a speaker, but certainly was for literature, and what will astonish some, he said I was "extremely conscientious." Dr. McLeod said that he had hit me off to a dot. At any rate, we furnished plenty of amusement for the audience.

I find this in the Enquirer:

Rev. Father Mackey, of the cathedral, delivered an interesting and scholarly lecture on "The Relation Between Church and State" before a large audience at the St. Ann's church in West Covington, Ky., last night. Father Mackey is emphatically in favor of the church and state being kept separate as at present and he is opposed to the proposed amendment to the federal Constitution recently introduced in both houses of Congress, the object of which is to declare the United States of America a Christian government.

Father Mackey also expressed himself as opposed to having foreign customs or practices introduced into the government of this country. He insisted that "everything in America must be American." He agreed with the expressions of Archbishop Ireland, made in a speech at St. Paul, Minn., Saturday, on "Foreign Nationalism in America."

E. A. STEVENS.

From the "Man in the Ditch."

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: If in the course of any discussion, any person, prophet or layman, had accused me of ignorance regarding any subject I had ventured to write "even casually" about, and had stated that my views were so ludicrous as to afford mirth to "gods and men," I would—if I replied at all—hav attempted to demonstrate to men the soundness of my assertions, and would hav been completely indifferent as to the light in which the gods regarded me. But, strange to relate, our friend Macdonald, who would hav been entirely justified in ignoring the casual reference made to him by way of pointing a moral and adorning a discussion with another man, chooses — for reasons not altogether obscure—to lay particular stress on the fact that he is not in a position to know the light in which the gods regard him, and ignores completely the sublunary portion of his amused audience, until he is forced out of his cyclone pit of more or less bright and witty badinage by the derrick of persistent demand for argument. When he emerges, he begins defensiv operations with a euphemistic variation regarding a fool and his folly; refers to the fact that a "man in a ditch" is not "afraid of bullets;" remarks that "a brain impervious to thought may invite discussion safely," and finally decides to accept—after some delay—what in his peculiarly facetious way he terms "my bluff," but which really was a direct, straightforward challenge to discussion, made with the view of convincing, or being convinced, of the truth or fallacy of the claim that it is quite as impossible to create value from nothing as raw material as it is to create a solar system, or systems, from nothing but omnipotence. Let the situation not be misunderstood. Either Macdonald is or I am misleading the people—certainly unwittingly—to the best of our ability; and being directly opposed to one another regarding the question of finance, it is certain that one or the other of us should—in the interest of that portion of the public we reach—stop. The discussion which is now on will tend to show, at one and the same time, who should revise his financial conclusions and which of us, if either, "is in a ditch," or has been gnilty of folly, or is "impervious to thought." Before argument begins, however, it seems legitimate to call attention to the fact that my opponent made no attempt to defend the rickety and rheumatic analogies he set up to display the folly of studying the financial question. Evidently, on this occasion, he feared the bullets because of the fact that he was "in a hole," which develops the falsity of his assertion that men below the surface are indifferent to missils.

Mr. Macdonald, abandoning sarcasm, then proceeds to notice the first question propounded to Mr. Peck, which seems to hav acted as an anesthetic on the latter gentleman, which in substance was whether the fact that the manufacture of fractional coins is a governmental monopoly, taken in conjunction with the possibility of exchanging them at the sub-treasuries, does not account for their being universally received at their face value, and whether they would be received at more than their bullion worth if neither of these conditions existed. To this Mr. Macdonald answers that if these conditions existed in all parts of the United States, they might hav something to do with the case. What has this remark to do with the fact that the making of fractional currency is a governmental monopoly? Is that not a fact in any section of the country? As to the other condition—of redemption—while sub-treasuries are not numerous, and are therefore rather inaccessible, the knowledge that coins are exchangeable for any kind of money is universal, and operates as effectivly at long range as it would next door to the place of redemption. Mr. Macdonald hints at sections where cents do not pass at their face value, and also of localities where they hav not currency because they are not wanted. I hav never heard of a place where they were refused at their face value, although it is possible that if offered in larger quantity than the law allows as a legal tender, they might be refused except at a discount. But this does not change the fact that the monopoly of their manufacture, together with acceptance of the obligation to receive them in payment or exchange, by the government, is all that keeps them at any point greatly beyond their metal value; for if it were possible to coin them freely, the metal of which they are made would be presented and coined just as long as the coin was worth a reasonable profit more than the metal. As to the need for currency insuring the circulation of tokens of small intrinsic worth at their face value, it is certain that in such cases promises of redemption hav always stood behind them, which, if violated, soon caused their rejection.

Mr. Macdonald argues further that the fact that but $100,000,000 of gold is all that stands behind $813,000,000 of promises to pay is sufficient to show that redemption plays no part in keeping those promises at par. He further alleges that, under the free coinage of silver, dollars of that metal would rise to the value of gold. To the first assertion it is sufficient to reply that few want the gold so long as they are confident that it is to be had for the asking, and this confidence renders it possible for a dime and a half of gold to keep ten dimes' value of paper money or silver at par. As to the second allegation, it is certain that free silver coinage could never raise the commercial price of that metal to the present ratio with gold, or maintain a silver dollar on the level of a gold dollar in purchasing power; for it is notorious that it costs about thirty-four times as much to produce an ounce of gold as it does to produce the same quantity of silver, which would make the commercial ratio of silver to gold about thirty-four to one, while the coinage ratio is but sixteen to one. Now, it is manifest that the free coinage of silver can only benefit owners of that metal—and others not at all—so long as the government is able to giv a gold dollar for one of silver; and it is equally clear that, since everybody knows this perfectly, there would be a terrific rush to exchange all other kinds of money for gold, and that the very small margin of that metal which the government has would scarcely last a week, at which time it would not be possible to get anything more valuable for a silver dollar than another of the same kind, and we would find ourselvs on a monometallic basis of silver, with the currency contracted by the hoarding of all the gold. Mr. Macdonald thinks that the silver dollar under free coinage would still purchase as much as one of gold, since it so circulated before it was demonetized. But Mr. Macdonald forgets that at that time the commercial ratio of silver to gold was less than the coinage ratio, which made silver more valuable as bullion than as coin. No silver was coined for years before free coinage was stopped. The gentleman thinks, also, that the stability of money does not depend upon the material of which it is composed, but upon the fact that the credit of the country is pledged to its support, and that this fact givs it world-wide acceptance. The fact is our money has no currency outside of this country. Our gold and silver money is accepted abroad by weight, and our other money not at all. Now, is not the credit of the country which Mr. Macdonald says keeps our money at par, measured by its power to keep its promises to pay par—this is, gold—for any other money? Is it not true, that if its power to pay is limited to silver, the dollar (other than gold) will be worth but the bullion value of the silver dollar? The province of money is to discharge debt, and intrinsic value is not considered, a dollar passing for one hundred cents because the next man will take it at that rate, we are told. But the next man will soon stop taking it at that rate if those at the centers of exchange lose confidence in the ability of the government to keep its promis to pay gold to all asking for it, at which time the next man will take it—if at all—at such a figure as he is sure will protect him against loss. The gentleman "might go further," he says, "and aver that it is not the redeemable quality of our currency that makes it exchangeable for gold, but because the party having the gold knows that the currency has the same debt-paying power as his coin." Mr. Macdonald stops too soon in his chain of redemption, for it is certain that no man will giv gold coin, or its value, for currency, unless he is reasonably certain to get gold value again for his currency when he wishes to exchange it, and this certainty depends upon the ability of the government to fulfill its promis to pay gold for its other currency. With such ideas it is not strange that the gentleman puts his trust in hens. Mr. Macdonald "brings the argument up to date" by redeeming Mr. Peck's note in such a fashion as invites the conclusion that he left himself a loop-hole to say, in an emergency, that "evidently the Prophet is utterly devoid of the sense of humor, or he would never suppose that I would insinuate that a reputable gentleman like Mr. Peck would attempt to redeem his note by offering to renew it and counseling the holder to go to the devil."

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Sleepy Song.

Come, little darling, your eyes are sleep smitten;
Come to the arms that would rock you to rest.
See how your playmate, the bonnie white kitten,
Speeds to its mother and snugs in her breast.
Purr—purr—purr—purr—
Hear how she coaxes her kitten to rest.

List to her lullaby; charged full of slumber
Is the low song that the pussy cat sings.
Sleep fairies hear it and flock without number
Near to my baby on gossamer wings.
Purr—purr—purr—purr—
That is the tune that the mother puss sings.

Come then, my little one, yield and be taken
Close in the arms that would shelter their own.
Haste, lest your playmate, the white kitten, waken
First from its slumber to frolic alone.
Hush—hush—hush—hush—
Sleep in the arms that will shelter their own.

What the Little Folks Are Saying.

The funny things which the little folks say at bedtime would doubtless fill a very large volume. Here are three bedtime queries and remarks which excited much amusement in their respectiv households:

Little Ritchie wanted to omit his prayers the other evening when his room was quite cold. So his mamma asked him: "Don't you want to ask God to care for you through the night?" "Oh," was the naive reply, "you don't catch God comin' round such a cold night as this!"

Little Marion was told to include the petition, "And make me a good girl," in her evening prayers. "What," she cried, "an' eat up all the crusts? Well, I guess not!"

A little seven-year-older, whose philosophical mind was bent on allowing its little owner to stay up longer than usual, asked a question which could not be answered off-hand. It was this: "Mamma, what would we hav been if we hadn't been anybody?"

Correspondence.

NORSE, TEX., Feb. 8, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My papa is not taking THE TRUTH SEEKER, but my uncle, Theo. Colwick, is a subscriber, and he is living with us. I love to read the Children's Corner. I hav twenty-four cousins; two sisters older than myself and one brother younger. I am ten years old and liv on a farm, where we raise wheat, oats, millet, corn, and cotton. I help on the farm when I am not going to school. I picked one hundred and fourteen pounds of cotton in one day. We did not raise much cotton last year on account of a drouth. MAUD E. OLSON.

[My, what a lot of cousins! And what a dear little worker to pick so much cotton in one day.—ED. C. C.]

WALLA WALLA, WASH., Feb. 19, 1894.

MISS SUSAN WIXON: I read the letters of the Corner every time I get a chance. My papa is a strong Freethinker and so am I. I go to school every day, and I am thirteen years old. It is very dull here. The Salvation Army has a grand time. Two of its members were arrested for stealing whisky and got eleven days in jail. After they were released they went back into the army shouting, "Halle lujah!" and "Glory to God!" My papa would like to become an agent for the Freethought work and has written to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav no brothers or sisters. I will close, and remain,

Your little Liberal friend,
BERTHA MONTAGUE.

[Another splendid girl added to our Corner list.—ED. C. C.]

CARTHAGE, MO., Feb. 16, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My pa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for several years. I like to read the Corner better than any of the paper, because it is interesting to hear what the children hav to say. I go to school, and my teacher is very religious. She had a question box in school for a while, and I threw in several Bible questions, but received no answer; so I answered them myself, but the teacher showed plainly that she did not like them. So she abolished the question box. Perhaps she thought we were getting too wise because she could not answer the questions. She had a party at her house since, but she did not invite my brother and myself; probably because we do not believe in the Bible. The people around call us Infidels; but I do not care; I am proud of it. TILLIE F. ROTSCH.

[Your teacher exhibited a very poor spirit in not inviting you to her party, and for such a reason. Never mind. Be true to your convictions and you will be happy, though you never attend a party given by one so bigoted. You are our own dear, brave girl.—ED. C. C.]

PORT ANGELES, WASH., Feb. 14, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: We hav three churches in this town, but I hav never attended any of them. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for ten years and finds no other paper equal to it. I read the Children's Corner, and would much like to talk with you. My father publishes a Populist paper here called The People, and a short time ago he published an article called "Joe's Dream," which so stirred up the Christians that some of them wanted their paper discontinued. The larger half of the people in this town are Freethinkers. Your Liberal friend,

LEO BOHALL.

[Another brave boy to hold up the cause of truth.—ED. C. C.]

GARDEAU, PA., March 13, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: We hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for ten years; that is, ever since mamma's conversion to Freethought. She says it is her Bible, as she gave up the Bible for it.

I hav four brothers, the eldest of whom, O. J. Fairchild, is in Bradford, Pa. I am the youngest of the family, fourteen years of age. We liv in a valley, with mountains all around—a very pleasant place. Hunting and fishing for trout are the sports of the young people. I hav the "Story Hour" and wish I had more. If any of the children of the Corner choose to correspond with a Pennsylvania mountain girl, I shall be happy to answer. IDA L. FAIRCHILD.

[A good letter for the first one.—ED. C. C.]

BOND, KAN., Feb. 14, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: We hav had several revival meetings here. First the good Christians of our valley employed a preacher from New York, the Rev. Cartwright, who told us that where he came from they called him a Hustler; but as he did not succeed in bringing any souls to Christ, they concluded they would hold a revival conducted by their own preachers. For two months they prayed for us and warned us of our danger if we did not accept Christ, but all in vain. They succeeded in converting only four little girls, the oldest not fifteen years of age.

We hav a literary society meeting in our schoolhouse once a week, and hav had several interesting debates. One evening the question was: "Resolved, That the present system of geology and astronomy as taught is incorrect." Only two gentlemen spoke on the affirmativ side, but they were in earnest. They based their arguments on the Bible. One of these gentlemen is a member of a school board. Think of it, Corner friends; a man who believes that the earth is flat, and that the sun revolves around it, is a member of a school board! I think that in this enlightened age such a man should not hav anything to do with school affairs. Your Liberal friend,

ELVA HELLSTROM.

[The people should see to it that only intelligent and educated persons hav charge of the schools.—ED. C. C.]

HANOVERTON, O., March 19, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I venture a few lines to the Corner in reference to Mr. William Kintner and lady, who reside in this town and are endowed with more than ordinary powers of mind; both sterling Freethinkers who work for the cause. Mr. Kintner is everybody's friend and never aggressiv, but when one of the anointed scare-crows picks him up for demolition he is soon spiritually moved to drop him. They hav lived happily and enjoyed life for all there is in it.

But alas! the diphtheria in its worst form visited the town, to which their beautiful daughter of twelve years fell a victim. She suffered a few days and died. She was an ornament to the family circle, and, for one of her age, was well advanced in literature and Freethought philosophy. I recollect in the long ago you had little Alice in the Corner.

But again, a few days later, a bright little brother of some ten years was attacked with the epidemic; he suffered a week, when little Archie was no more. This is crushing to the doting parents. I would gladly say something comforting for them, but can find no word; but we cherish a hope that their good sense and philosophy will carry them safely over. Their loved ones are resting sweetly where trouble will never reach them. May the flower of fond memory ever bloom over their graves, whose gloom is lost in the glory of unsullied virtue unforgotten, is my prayer. J. F. JOHNSON.

[We sincerely sympathize with our friends in the loss of their bright children, Alice and Archie. Dear Alice was one of our Corner friends. Their vacant places can never be filled, and the hearts of all who loved them will ache while their pleasant ways are remembered. But they can never suffer again. There is no more pain, sorrow, or grief for them. With them all is peace forever.—ED. C. C.]

ARCH BEACH, CAL., Feb. 6, 1894.

MISS WIXON—Dear Friend: I am going to help fill out the Children's Corner a little this week. I see by the last few numbers of the ever-welcome old TRUTH SEEKER that there is "always room for one more." That ever-truthful paper has been in the family about as long as I hav, so you may know that it is no new friend to me.

I am one of a large family of free-hearted Liberals. Several other members hav written to THE TRUTH SEEKER at different times, but this happens to be my first communication. We all try to do what we can in behalf of our glorious cause. But unfortunately that is not much; indeed, it is really nothing, for living as we do, far up in the mountains, about ten miles northeast of nowhere, and within about twenty miles of a faint glimmer of somewhere, we find that the very most we can do is just to think! But I hav often thought what a blessing it is that we are gifted with Freethought. Indeed, I do not know what would become of us if, like so many of our poor Christian friends, our thoughts were perennially bound to a church, wrapped up in a preacher and inclosed within the iron covers of a detestable Bible.

I hav often heard my little Christian friends at school say they did not like Sunday, and wished it would never come; that they enjoyed Saturday much better. If you asked them the reason, they would say, mamma would not let them play on Sunday; they had to go to Sunday school in the morning, and in the afternoon they had to stay in-doors and read the Bible. I hav really seen parents that were almost too pious to allow their children to laugh and talk on that sacred day. I should think it would be torture to the poor children. I sincerely pity such ignorance! It seems to me that when a person has grown to a mature age, and still holds such preposterous views of religion, they must surely hav a limited amount of brains. For my part I always look forward to Sunday as a very enjoyable day, and enjoy it much better than I do Saturday; for the latter is a day of extra work, while it is our custom to do as little work and hav as much pleasure as possible on Sunday. Our chief sport is picnicking or shelling, when the tide is low, as we liv but a short half mile from the ocean.

In my estimation we liv in one of the prettiest little nooks there is to be found in the Rocky mountains; it is a very small place, and is completely surrounded by lofty mountains. Indeed, if a stranger were to drop down from the sky, he would think he was in a cage, though not a very unpleasant one, judging from the scenery around him. I am afraid if I continue the description of my home in this letter, I will deprive some of my Liberal friends (who hav a firmer hold on the Corner than I hav at the present time) of elbow room, so I will close, leaving my best regards to yourself and all the Cornerites.

Yours respectfully,
ANNIE M. THURSTON.

[But Annie has a firm hold on the Corner after this.—ED. C. C.]

PROSE-POEMS AND SELECTIONS.
Fifth edition, enlarged and revised. A handsome qnarto, containing 383 pages. This is, beyond question, the cheapest and most elegant volume in Liberal literatnre. Its mechanical finish is worthy of its intrinsic excellence. No expense has been spared to make it the thing of beauty it is. The type is large and clear, the paper heavy, highly calendered, and richly tinted, the presswork faultless, and the binding as perfect as the best materials and skill can make it.
As to the contents, it is enongh to say that they inclnde all of the choicest utterances of the greatest writer on the topics treated that has ever lived.
Those who have not the good fortune to own all of Mr. Ingersoll's pnblished works, will have in this book of selections many bright samples of his lofty thonght, his matchless eloquence, his wonderful imagery, and his epigrammatic and poetic power. The collection includes all of the "Tributes" that have become famous in literature—notably those to his brother E. C. Ingersoll, Lincoln, Grant, Beecher, Conkling, Courtlandt M. Palmer, Mary Fiske, Elizur Wright; his peerless monographs on "The Vision of War," Love, Liberty, Art and Morality, Science, Nature, The Imagination, Decoration Day Oration, What is Poetry, Mnsic of Wagner, Origin and Destiny, "Leaves of Grass," and on the great heroes of intellectnal Liberty. Besides these are innnmerable gems taken here and there from the orations, speeches, arguments, toasts, lectures, letters, interviews, and day by day conversations of the anthor.
The book is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal sonvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with antograph fac-simile, has been prepared especially for it. In the more elegant styles of binding it is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.
PRICES.—In cloth, beveled boards, gilt edges, $2.50; in half morocco, gilt edges, $5; in half calf, mottled edges, library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible finish, $9.

Just Out.—25 Cents.—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.
We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look npon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

Is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has nndergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria, the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets, Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town, the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portnguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America. Materials of Human History.

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History. Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around, and the stay-at-home to see where he went.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

SCIENCE AND HEBREW TRADITION. By Thomas H. Huxley. Volume IV. of Collected Essays. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Cloth. Price, $1.25.

The lectures included in this volume of the collected essays of the great popular teacher of science and fearless protagonist of truth are: "On the Method of Zadig" [1880] (Lecture at the Working Men's College); "The Rise and Progress of Palæontology" [1881]; "The Three Hypotheses Respecting the History of Nature"; "The Hypothesis of Evolution—The Neutral and the Favorable Evidence"; "The Demonstrativ Evidence of Evolution" [the last three, New York, 1876]; "The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature" [1885]; Mr. Gladstone and Genesis" [1886]; "The Lights of the Church and the Light of Science" [1890]; "Hasisadra's Adventure" [1891]; "The Evolution of Theology—an Anthropological Study" [1886].

Professor Huxley has rendered an inestimable service to the cause of human advancement by putting the results of his scientific studies and critical investigations of religious literature into the language of the people. His lectures and essays hav already had a very large sale, and there can be no doubt that they hav done much to enlighten the reading world of Europe, America, and Australasia, and that they will exert a still greater influence on the rising generation is equally certain. Not merely because he reveals certain facts and truths to the searcher, but more because he shows the way to find truths through the synthesis and analysis of facts, is the literary scientist a really efficient teacher. It is to the scientific method that we are indebted for our knowledge of nature, and in the ratio that the masses of the people accept and act in accordance with this method will the race leave behind it its superstitions and barbarities.

In the volume before us, Professor Huxley, writing in the preface of the theory of creation, which has its root (so far as Jews, Christians, and Mohammedans are concerned) in the Genesaical narrativ, observes:

"It is becoming, if it has not become, impossible for men of clear intellect and adequate instruction to believe, and it has cased, or is ceasing, to be possible for such men honestly to say they believe, that the universe came into being in the fashion described in the first chapter of Genesis; or to accept, as a literal truth, the story of the making of woman, with the account of the catastrophe which followed hard upon it, in the second chapter; or to admit that the earth was repeopled with terrestrial inhabitants by migration from Armenia or Kurdistan, little more than four thousand years ago, which is implied in the eighth chapter; or finally, to shape their conduct in accordance with the conviction that the world is haunted by innumerable demons, who take possession of men and may be driven out of them by exorcistic adjurations, which pervades the gospels. . . . The doctrin of biblical infallibility, which involves these remarkable consequences, was widely held by my countrymen within my recollection; I hav reason to think that many persons of unimpeachable piety, a few of learning, and even some of intelligence, yet uphold it. But I venture to entertain a doubt whether it can produce any champion whose competency and authority would be recognized beyond the limits of the sect or theological coterie to which he belongs. On the contrary, apologetic effort, at present, appears to devote itself to the end of keeping the name of 'Inspiration' to suggest the divine source, and consequent infallibility, of more or less of the biblical literature, while carefully emptying the term of any definit sense. For 'plenary inspiration' we are asked to substitute a sort of 'inspiration with limited liability,' the limit being susceptible of indefinit fluctuation in correspondence with the demands of scientific criticism. Where this advances that at once retreats.

"This Parthian policy is carried out with some dexterity; but, like other such maneuvers in the face of a strong foe, it seems likely to end in disaster. It is easy to say, and sounds plausible, that the Bible was not meant to teach anything but ethics and religion, and that its utterances on other matters are mere obiter dicta; it is also a specious suggestion that inspiration, filtering through human brains, must undergo a kind of fallibility contamination; and that this human impurity is responsible for any errors, the existence of which has to be admitted, however unwillingly.

"But how does the apologist know what the biblical writers intended to teach, and what they did not intend to teach? And even if their authority is restricted to matters of faith and morals, who is prepared to deny that the story of the fabrication of Eve, that of the lapse from innocence effected by a talking snake, that of the deluge and the demonological legends, hav exercised, and still exercise, a profound influence on Christian theology and Christian ethics? The very apologists who put forth this plea are never weary of declaring that the divine authority for the moral law is the only safe foundation of ethics. But if several of the most important Pentateuchal narrativs prove to be utterly unworthy of credit, what pretense is there for accepting other uncorroborated stories of a no less improbable character? If the writers of the gospels hav taken fiction for truth, the survivals of pagan superstition for religion, in one department of spiritual knowledge, what guarantee hav we for their infallibility in other departments? If the 'human element' must be admitted to hav already encroached so largely beyond the bounds, erstwhile thought to be set by divine authority, what justification is there for imagining that any limit can be set to the discovery of further invasions?

"The truth is that the pretension to infallibility, by whomsover made, has done endless mischief; with impartial malignity it has proved a curse, alike to those who hav made it and those who hav accepted it; and its most baneful shape is book infallibility. For sacerdotal corporations and schools of philosophy are able, under due compulsion of opinion, to retreat from positions that hav become untenable; while the dead hand of a book sets and stiffens, amidst texts and formulæ, until it becomes a mere petrifaction, fit only for that function of stumbling-block which it so admirably performs. Wherever bibliolatry has prevailed, bigotry and cruelty hav accompanied it. It lies at the root of the deep-seated, sometimes disguised, but never absent, antagonism of all the varieties of ecclesiasticism to the freedom of thought and to the spirit of scientific investigation. For those who look upon ignorance as one of the chief sources of evil; and hold veracity, not merely in act, but in thought, to be the one condition of true progress, whether moral or intellectual, it is clear that the biblical idol must go the way of all other idols. Of infallibility, in all shapes, lay or clerical, it is needful to iterate, with more than Catonic pertinacity, Delenda est."

The essay on the "Evolution of Theology" opens with these paragraphs:

"I conceive that the origin, the growth, the decline, and the fall of those speculations respecting the existence, the powers, and the dispositions of beings analogous to men, but more or less devoid of corporeal qualities, which may be broadly included under the head of theology, are phenomena the study of which legitimately falls within the province of the anthropologist. . . .

"With theology as a code of dogmas which are to be believed, or at any rate repeated, under penalty of present or future punishment, or as a storehouse of anesthetics for those who find the pains of life too hard to bear, I hav nothing to do; and, so far as it may be possible, I shall avoid the expression of any opinion as to the objectiv truth or falsehood of the systems of theological speculation of which I may find occasion to speak. From my present point of view, theology is regarded as a natural product of the operations of the human mind, under the conditions of its existence, just as any other branch of science, or the arts, or architecture, or music, or painting are such products. Like them, theology has a history. Like them also, it is to be met with in certain simple and rudimentary forms; and these can be connected by a multitude of gradations which exist or hav existed among people of various ages and races, with the most highly developed theologies of past and present times."

Referring to the horrible doctrins and persecutions of the Middle Ages, Professor Huxley says in the above essay:

"The greatest men of the Middle Ages are unable to escape the infection. Dante's 'Inferno' would be revolting if it were not so often sublime, so often exquisitly tender. The hideous pictures which cover a vast space on the south wall of the Campo Santo of Pisa convey information as terrible as it is indisputable, of the theological conceptions of Dante's countrymen in the fourteenth century, whose eyes were addressed by the painters of those digusting scenes, and whose approbation they knew how to win. A candid Mexican of the time of Cortez, could he hav seen this Christian burial-place, would hav taken it for an appropriately adorned Teocalli. The professed disciple of the god of justice and of mercy might there gloat over the sufferings of his fellowmen depicted as undergoing every extremity of atrocious and sanguinary torture to all eternity, for theological errors no less than for moral delinquencies; while, in the central figure of Satan, occupied in champing up souls in his capacious and well-toothed jaws, to void them again for the purpose of undergoing fresh suffering, we hav the counterpart of the strange Polynesian and Egyptian dogma that there were certain gods who employed themselvs in devouring the ghostly flesh of the spirits of the dead. But in justice to the Polynesians, it must be recollected that, after three such operations, they thought the soul was purified and happy. In the view of the Christian theologian the operation was only a preparation for new tortures continued for ever and aye."

The last paragraph in the essay on the Evolution of Theology is as follows:

"It is my conviction that, with the spread of true scientific culture, whatever may be the medium, historical, philological, philosophical, or physical, through which that culture is conveyed, and with its necessary concomitant, a constant elevation of the standard of veracity, the end of the evolution of theology will be like its beginning—it will cease to hav any relation to ethics. I suppose that, so long as the human mind exists, it will not escape its deep-seated instinct to personify its intellectual conceptions. The science of the present day is as full of this particular form of intellectual shadow-worship as is the nescience of ignorant ages. The difference is that the philosopher who is worthy of the name knows that his personified hypotheses, such as law, and force, and ether, and the like, are merely useful symbols, while the ignorant and the careless take them for adequate expressions of reality. So it may be that the majority of mankind may find the practice of morality made easier by the use of theological symbols. And unless these are converted from symbols into idols, I do not see that science has anything to say to the practice, except to giv an occasional warning of its dangers. But, when such symbols are dealt with as real existences, I think the highest duty which is laid upon men of science is to show that these dogmatic idols hav no greater value than the fabrications of men's hands, the stocks and the stones, which they hav replaced."

Miss Wixon has taken as her mottoes in writing this beautiful book of 292 pages—which she has dedicated to the memory of her father and mother—these sentences from the works of a great synthetic philosopher and a gifted liberal minister:

As with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not.—Herbert Spencer.

Living is an Art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the Arts.—Thomas Starr King.

CHRISTMAS is over. As Sidney Smith says, "The ordinances of the church are tolerably well kept up—the rich keep the feasts and the poor keep the fasts."

"MY fren's," said Brother Gardner of the Limekiln Club when the routine business of the meeting had been disposed of, "I heard Brudder Bebee sayin' to Shindig Watkins de odder night dat he should depend upon Providence to git frew de winter. I also heard Brudder Shin sayin' to Givadam Jones dat his rent was behind, but Providence would step in sumwhar. I wan' to say a few words to yo' on dis matter of Providence. I used to figger a heap on Providence helpin' me out, but de night I dun left my hen-house doah unlocked an' went to bed dependin' on Providence to stand guard I made sich a mistake dat I hain't got ober feelin' mad yet. Doorin' dat dark and tremulous night a cull'd pusson jumped my fence an' entered dat hen-house an' removed fo'teen of de nicest chickens in all dis stait. If Providence was round dar anywhar, she probably helped put dem chickens in de bag.

"I knowed a pusson about three y'ars ago who owned a mewl, an' one night dat mewl was taken sick. I was called on, an' I saw it was a case of colic an' recommended de usual remedy. De owner of dat mewl concluded to depend upon Providence instead, and when he riz up next mawnin' he had a cold corpse on his hands. Dat same pusson cut a hole in de roof of his kitchen an' run a stovepipe frew it widout any safeguard. One day when he was awav from home dependin' on Providence to see to dat stovepipe, his house caught fire au' was dun burned to de ground.

"Dar am a sartin member of dis club, an' his name am Sundown White, who used to depend on Providence to even furnish him codfish fur breakfast. He spected Providence to hunt him up a job, doctor his family, buy shoes fur his chillen, an' pay his house rent, an even when dey war gwine to send him to de porehouse he hung to Providence. I is happy to say dat I is de pusson who opened his eyes at last. He cum ober to my cabin to borrow $2. He depended on Providence to open my heart, but got sadly left. Den he got mad an' depended on Providence to help him lick me, but I peeled off my coat an' giv him sich a thrashin dat he wuz in bed fur two weeks. When he got out he giv Providence de cold shake, an' to-day he am well fixed an' gettin' along all right.

"Dar am sartin members of this club who reckin dey kin sit on de fence all summer an' be sartin dat Providence will furnish 'em wid taters an' bacon frew de winter. 'Long about Jinuary dey'll be mighty glad to fill up de vacuum wid stewed pumpkin. If Providence was ever in de provision bizness, she went out of it long ago. Dar was a time in my life when I let de winter woodpile go and depended on Providence to keep de ole cook stove red hot. Arter my dog had friz to death, de ole woman lost her big toes, an' I had got a crop of chilblains to last me de rest of my nachel life, I cum to de conclushun dat Providence wasn't in de woodyard bizness. It's all right if yo' am gwine to ride on a railroad to lean on. Providence, though she doan' seem to get further west dan Buffalo, but when yo' figger dat she am gwine to put a $15 overcoat on yo'r back as a Christmas present yo' will git badly mistook.

"Our own experience right here in Paradise Hall proves de troof of what I say. On one occasion I left seven dollars in de safe an' forgot to set de b'ar-trap on de sta'rs. I went home, dependin on Providence, but 'long about midnight I got oneasy an' cum down an' sot de traps an' changed de combinashun from 'reptil' to 'kangaroo.' I friz my heel a-goin' home, but what did de next day reveal? In one of dose b'ar-traps was a big toe from a human foot. An evil-minded person had got into dis hall to rob us. After borin' sebenteen holes in our safe wid an auger, he had started down sta'rs to find a bag to put de money in, an' de trap had cotched him. He didn't depend on no Providence to open dat trap, but jes' pulled away till he pulled his toe off and den skated away.

"Dar am a pusson right yere befo' me to-night who borrowed $3 of me last spring an' am dependin' on Providence to pay me back. I'ze waited to see if she'd do it, but she hasn't. I'ze gwine to wait one mo' week, an' den if dat money hain't handed over. I'ze gwine to p'ove to dat pusson dat Providence neither borrows nor lends, an' she hain't got no use for lazy folks or liars. If he dodges me in a dark alley he may figger dat Providence aided him, but he'll be wrong. It'll be on account of dat squint in my right eye, an' I'll trail him down by daylight! We will now break up de meetin' an' depend on Providence to keep de trolley kyars on de track till we git home."—M. Quad.

IT was a battle between an old and a new philosophy. And the old was Christianity in all its forms. The greatest criminal against mankind had been he who had pretended to love it most. His creed of self-sacrifice: It had produced those who renounce—the misery that was now clamoring for deliverance. God must fall in every shape!—John Henry Mackay.

IT was said by Emerson that Burns made a mere provincial dialect classic. He did more than that; he glorified by his pathos and humor, not only the dialect of Scotland, but the very weeds in her valleys, the heather on her banks and braes, the homely fare and hodden gray of her peasantry, yea, the very rags of her poverty. He made all of them classic as the majestic imagery of Milton. He poured his soul in love and benediction upon his country in such exuberant flood that before the end of the eighteenth century it had overflowed the British Islands, and now covers the world.—M. M. Trumbull.

THE old-time artists thought they served humanity by painting saints and madonnas and angels from the myths they conjured in their brains. They painted war with long lines of soldiers dressed in new uniforms, and looking plump and gay, and a battle scene was always drawn from the side of the victorious camp, with the ensign planting his colors on the ramparts of the foe. One or two were dying, but always in their comrades' arms and listening to shouts of victory that filled the air, and thinking of the righteous cause for which they fought and died. In the last moments they dreamed of pleasant burial-yards at home, and of a grave kept green by loving, grateful friends, and a smile of joy lit up their fading faces, so sweet that it seemed a hardship not to die in war. They painted peace as a white-winged dove settling down upon a cold and "farewell" earth. Between the two it was plain which choice a boy would make, and thus art served the state and king. But Verestchagin painted war so true to life that as we look upon the scene we long for peace. He painted war as war has ever been and ever will be—a horrible and ghastly scene, where men, drunk with blind frenzy—which rulers say is patriotic pride—and made mad by drums and fifes and smoke and shot and shell and flowing blood, seek to maim and wound and kill, because a ruler givs the word. He paints a battlefield a field of life and death, a field of carnage and of blood. And who are these who fight like fiends and devils driven to despair? And what cause is this that makes these men forget that they are men and vie with beasts to show their cruel thirst for blood? They shout of home and nativ land; but they hav no homes, and the owners of their nativ land exist upon their toil and blood. The nobles and princes, for whom this fight is waged, are sitting far away upon a hill, beyond the reach of shot and shell; and from this spot they watch their slaves pour out their blood to satisfy their rulers' pride and lust of power. And what is the enemy they fight? Men, like themselvs, who blindly go to death at another king's command; slaves who hav no land, who freely giv their toil or blood—whichever one their rulers may demand. These fighting soldiers hav no cause for strife, but their rulers liv by kindling in their hearts a love of nativ land—a love which makes them hate their brother laborers of other lands, and dumbly march to death, to satisfy a king's caprice.—C. S. Darrow.

ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT STREET, N. Y.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

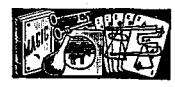
Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.



A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

News of the Week.

DR. BROWN-SEQUARD died in Paris on April 2d.

THE House failed to pass the seigniorage bill over President Cleveland's veto.

PRENDERGAST, Carter Harrison's insane assassin, has been respited to July 2d.

A BILL looking to home rule for Scotland has been introduced in the House of Commons.

THE death of President Bermudez, of Peru, precipitated upon that unhappy country the triple woe of two presidents and one dictator.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM ROBERTSON SMITH, librarian of the University of Cambridge, and one of the most learned orientalists of the age, died March 31st.

THERE is trouble in the Indian Territory between the Cheyennes and the white settlers. Several killed. The whites appear to hav been the aggressors.

GOVERNOR TILLMAN, of South Carolina, has withdrawn the troops from Darlington and Florence, and assumed command of all the municipal police in the state.

POLISH laborers in Buffalo mobbed the employees of the Barber Asphalt Company when a new street-grading machine was put to work. The machine was also badly damaged.

THE Republicans carried Rhode Island by a majority of some six thousand, insuring the election of a Republican to succeed United States Senator Dixon, Democrat.

COMMANDER HYERMAN, of the Kearsarge, lost on Roncador reef, has been found guilty of negligence and inefficiency, by the court-martial sitting on his case and that of Lieutenant Lyman.

THE grand jury of the District of Columbia has brought in a new indictment for manslaughter against Col. F. C. Ainsworth in the matter of the Ford's Theater disaster in Washington last year.

THE Democratic members of the House of Representativs hav called a caucus to consider the advisability of a compromise for the repeal of the state bank tax. This would be a move in the direction of free banking.

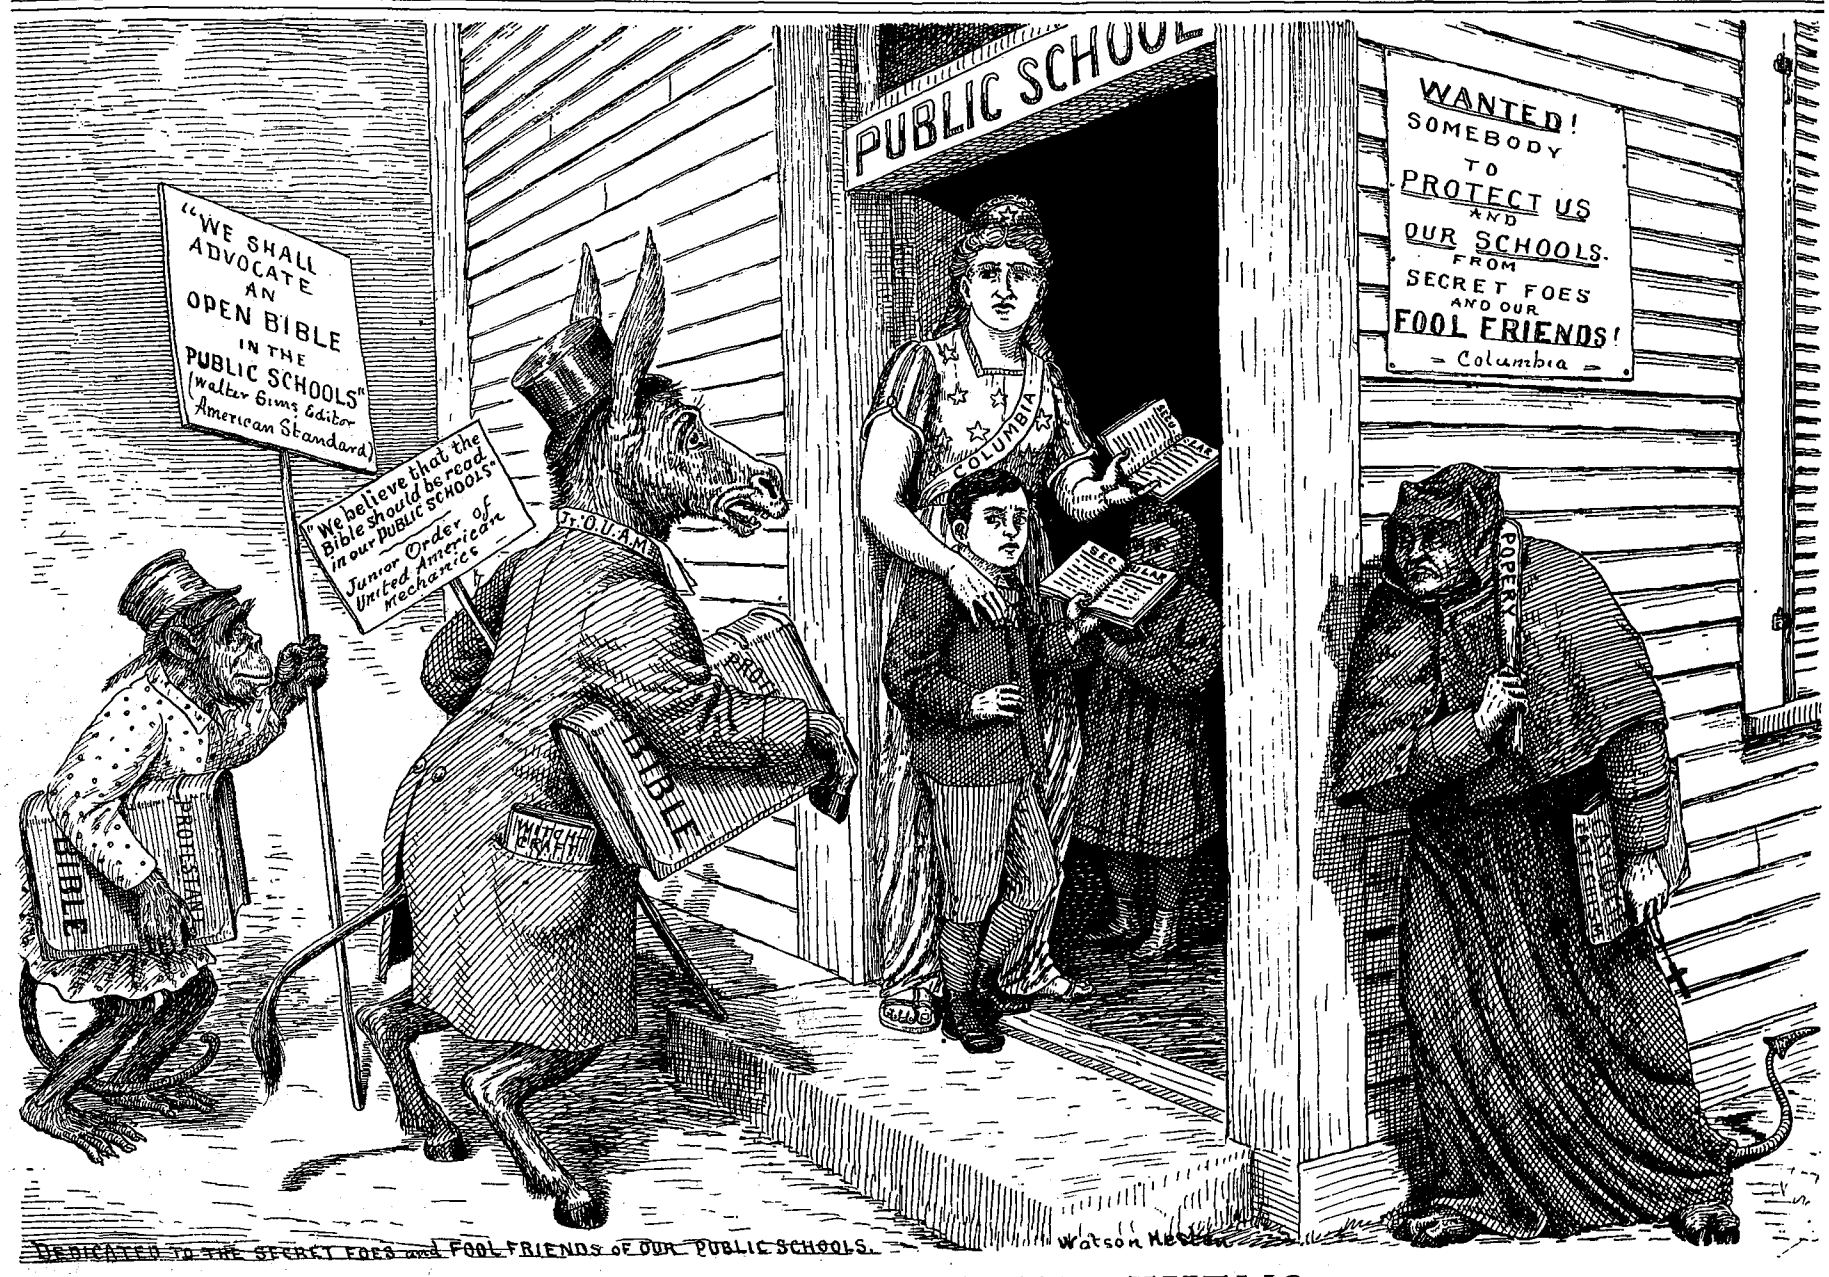
A FRENCH engineer has discovered an immense cave in the district of Guerrero, Mexico. He explored it for fifteen miles, and in one place found the petrified bodies of four hundred Indians, with idols and stone implements.

THE House of Representativs has unseated Charles F. Joy, of Missouri, Republican, putting in his place John J. O'Neill, Democrat. Hilborn, of California, Republican, has also been supplanted, by English, Democrat.

VERY bad riots in the Connellsville coal region in Pennsylvania last week. The Hungarians were wild and much property was destroyed and a number of lives sacrificed, including that of Chief-Engineer Paddock of the H. C. Frick Coke Co.

A FIERCE battle is reported to hav taken place in the kingdom of Bornu, in the Central Soudan, between an invading army, 30,000 strong, and the troops of the Sultan of Bornu. Losses heavy, including the Sultan and Rabah, the leader of the invaders.

IN Chicago, Kansas City, and other towns in the middle states, serious riots occurred on the day municipal elections were held. Several lives were lost. Bad blood engendered by the Catholic and A. P. A. antagonism had much to do with the disturbances.



ON April 4th a bomb was exploded in the restaurant Foyot, opposit the Senate chamber, in Paris. Several persons were injured, including a Communist-Anarchist poet, Laurent Tailhade, who had applauded the act of Vaillant He has lost an eye and his old opinions.

AT Omaha on April 5th United States Judge Caldwell decided that Judge Dundy's order cutting down the wages of the Union Pacific employees and enjoining them from striking was not good law, and that the receivers had broken the contract with the labor unions. The decision is a great victory for the employees. A decision of an opposit character was rendered by United States Judge Jenkins at Milwaukee on April 6th. He explained and reaffirmed his former injunction restraining the employees of the Northern Pacific from striking. He holds that a court of equity must restrain threatened trespass involving the immediate or ultimate destruction of property, working irreparable injury, and for which there would be no adequate compensation at law. The jurisdiction is beyond question; is plenary and comprehensiv.

CONWAY'S EDITION

OF

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

COLLECTED, EDITED, AND CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED

By MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY.

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," "Omitted Chapters of History Disclosed in the Life and Papers of Edmund Randolph," etc.

Four Volumes, Royal Octavo, Gilt Tops, Uniform with the Editor's "Life of Paine" Price per Volume, $2.50.

An edition of one hundred and fifty numbered copies bound in half leather, gilt tops, uniform with the limited editions of "The Writings of Washington," "The Writings of Jefferson," etc. Price, per volume, $4.

For the general reader the $3 edition of Paine's works is sufficient, as it contains all of his writings upon which his fame substantially rests. But for those who desire to go deeper into the subject of the man and polemic we can most unreservedly commend the "Life of Paine" by Mr. Conway, and this edition of Paine's works edited by him It is the fullest that we are likely to have, and the student of history, and particularly the writer, should have it upon his shelves.

The work will consist of four volumes, and will be arranged chronologically. The cause of America, as Paine said, made him an author, and the first volume will cover the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1774. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay, and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvania Magazine; these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The second volume will consist mainly of the "Rights of Man," and pamphlets relating to English politics, but will also contain certain papers on French affairs.

The third and fourth volumes will consist mainly of Paine's religious writings, but will also contain some essays relating to American affairs, written in his last years. At the close will be given Paine's poems.

The first volume is now ready for delivery, and the others will follow soon. Orders for the whole set will be taken and filled as the volumes appear, or the volumes can be purchased separately. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.
Descartes.	Kepler.	Pestalozzi.	Cervantes.	Goethe.	French Salon.	Bradlaugh.	Harriet Martineau.

Hamilton.	Darwin.	Holyoake.	Shelley.	Heine.	Bentham.	Lincoln.	Margaret Fuller.
Comte.	Tyndall.	Haeckel.	Byron.	Thoreau.	Mill.	Bakounine.	Elizabeth Cady Stanton.
Büchner.	Huxley.	Girard	Pushkin.	Whitman.	Garabaldi.	Warren.	Susan B. Anthony.
Feuerbach.		Lick.	Tcherny-chewsky.	Ingersoll.	Heinzen.	Petrofsky.	Matilda Joslyn Gage.
							Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age. Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT

FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESION,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

For $3.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers ($1).

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

Fundamental Principles vs. Weather Vanes.

Those who assume to instruct their fellow-men and to guide them into right courses of moral, economic, or political action cannot be too careful in their teaching. They should be solicitous to possess themselvs of the facts in regard to any asserted reform movement, and should strive to thoroughly understand just what the spokesmen of the movement mean in what they say. Neither can they afford to listen to public clamor for or against the alleged reform, with the intention of shaping their own course by the rush of the emotional multitude. They should find out the real values attaching to party catchwords, declarations, and platforms. It must never be forgotten that most platforms are constructed to get in on, not to stand on in legislating. It will always pay to ask what your opponent means by a given statement of principle, for it is quite probable that if you assume without investigation that he means what you understand the words to express you will be undeceived at your own cost. Such experiences are always awkward, quite often disastrous, and not infrequently irremediable.

Never is caution in the acceptance of party pronunciamentos more necessary than when those pronunciamentos are issued by religious or semi-religious organizations. The Freethinker who takes these people at their own appraisement is "left," to use the slang of the period. It is well-known, to illustrate, that the National Reform Association, which is trying to Christianize our Constitution, is, if we may believe the asseverations of its representativs, opposed to the union of church and state. So with the American Sabbath Union and the Women's Christian Temperance Union, auxiliaries of the first-named association. And all these people stoutly assert that they are in favor of a purely "unsectarian" public school system, when we all know that they are determined to keep the Bible and continue religious services in those schools. The least analytical Freethinker will see at once that these Protestant Christians use the word "unsectarian" in a sense totally different from that in which he employs it.

What is true in these particulars of the societies already named is equally true of the American Protectiv Association, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and similar bodies. This we hav shown in the reply to Mr. Wessels in the department of "Letters from Friends," and our artist reinforces our position with his capital cartoon on the first page. Mr. Heston's picture is based upon an editorial utterance in the first number of a new paper called the American Standard and published at Indianapolis, Indiana. Its editor is Walter Sims, one of the most popular lecturers in furtherance of the principles of the American Protectiv Association, and, judging from his writings and the reports of his lectures, a gentleman of extended information and considerable argumentativ ability. Those who are accustomed to take the promises of Christian reformers at their face value will be much pleased with what Professor Sims says in his "Salutation." He tells us that the American Standard will "be the relentless foe of any or all who seek to model the Constitution after the principles of their particular religious belief, to the injury and injustice of others. There is possibly no question of more vital importance, looking toward the maintenance of American liberty, than that of the free, non-sectarian public school system. Without this system the principles of American birth equality, as proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence, are made void. The Standard is, therefore, pledged to the people to maintain the principles of such non-sectarian education as will prepare the rising generation for the solemn responsibilities connected with republican institutions of self-government. It will advocate the control of all schools by the civil authority, and the establishment only in them of such religious recognition as is common and acceptable to all the people."

"Bravo!" exclaims the Liberal, "that is sound doctrin, and I guess the American Protective Association is all right. To be sure, that last sentence has a false note; but yet, as Mr. Sims wants only such 'religious recognition' in the schools 'as is common and acceptable to all the people,' he must mean that he wants no religious instruction therein, for there is no religion which is common and acceptable to all the people. He simply took that method of saying that he wanted a purely secular school." And then our good-natured Liberal glances down the column and reads Editor Sims's closing words: "It [the Standard] will stand by one flag, one citizenship, of single allegiance, the Constitution, and non-sectarian education," and he opens his arms and takes the dear, good man to his heart.

But there is something more in that "Salutation," and that something more immediately follows the talk about the "religious recognition that is common and acceptable to all the people," and it reads as follows:

"Since the Supreme Court has so far interpreted our Constitution as to recognize that these United States are a Christian nation, we shall advocate an open Bible in the public schools, it being the foundation of a common Christianity, such as our Constitution recognizes."

There you hav it at last, without disguise, without equivocation. That is the "non-sectarian" education of the American Protectiv Association and it is the same kind of non-sectarianism as that advocated by the theocrats of the National Reform Association and the Women's Christian Temperance Union. And do not fail to note that the "non-sectarian education" which goes with "an open Bible in the public schools" is the "religious recognition" which, in the words of Professor Sims, is "common and acceptable to all the people." Is it common and acceptable to all the people? Assuredly it is not. Does Professor Sims himself believe that it is? We do not wish to answer the last question, for we do not care to appear discourteous, but we will ask him three more questions. They are these: Does he believe that the Protestant Bible in the schools would be acceptable to the Catholics? Does he believe that the New Testament would be acceptable to the Jews? Does he believe that either the Catholic or the Protestant Bible would be acceptable to the Freethinkers?

One thing is certain: Whenever a Protestant, no less than a Catholic, asserts that any society to which he belongs stands for non-sectarian schools he must be asked for a categorical answer to this question: "Will your organization work for the withdrawal of the Bible from the public schools and the cessation of all religious exercises therein?" If he does not answer this question with an unequivocal "Yes" and at the same time prove that his answer is authoritativ for that society it will be a waste of time for Freethinkers to coquet with it. On the political side our mission is to secure the complete separation of church and state. Sectarian broils are of interest to us in so far only as they disrupt the forces of the common foe. We can watch the internecine strife but must not become involved in it or entangled with any of the warring factions.

Referring to the God-in-the-Constitution struggle, the Independent Pulpit observes that "The New York TRUTH SEEKER is making a splendid fight against this infamy." And we are pleased to see that Mr. Shaw is ready to do his part, and that he clearly perceives the necessity for constant watchfulness and continued action. He adjures the Liberals to remember that, whatever the fate of the Morse-Frye joint resolution, the bigots will continue to bring forward measures in favor of their religion, "which is also their business. Politicians are uncertain, and unless the Liberals of this country take more interest in the preservation of their freedom, it will some day be taken from them."

A Stride Backward into Night.

The grand jury recently in session at Lexington, Kentucky, evidently set out to distinguish itself, and it has done so in a wholesale way. It brought in a report that it understood that progressiv euchre was being played in the city and that it had heard rumors that baseball had been played on Sunday, but had no direct proof of the commision of these awful crimes. It indicted J. W. and Mrs. Lunsford, Spiritualists, for nuisance and practicing medicin without license, and for obtaining money under fase pretenses in claiming to call up spirits from another world (it did not indict any priests or preachers for dealing in futures), and it indicted a manufacturing and commercial concern for nuisance in allowing boys to play ball on its premises on Sunday!

But its crowning work consisted of two indictments against Charles C. Moore, editor and publisher of the Blue Grass Blade. One of these indictments is for "blasphemy" and the other for "nuisance." In Kentucky "blasphemy" can be only a "common law" offense, as the state has no blasphemy statute. This is the first prosecution of the kind in that commonwealth and it remains to be seen whether the musty and moldy common law can be successfully invoked in this age of light to punish a man for a "crime" that has not now nor ever had an existence save in the superheated brains of theologians.

The indictments were procured by Rev. E. L. Southgate, Methodist. The reader will see that the one for nuisance is in great part a repetition of the one charging blasphemy. At this distance it looks as though it was feared that the charge of "blasphemy" would not hold, and so the other indictment was secured in the hope that its meshes would be close enough if Mr. Moore slipped through those of the other. At all events, the prosecutor, Rev. Mr. Southgate, was after the blasphemer, first and always, as he admits in an interview which is published in the Kentucky Leader of April 11th. "The indictment for nuisance was secondary and incidental," he says. That is, the alleged offense against man was trivial as compared with the crime against God. The theological mind is always warped similarly. In an earlier interview appearing in the same paper, Mr. Southgate declared that Mr. Moore "not only blasphemes the name of God the father and imputes gross evil to the Virgin Mary and the deepest destruction to Lord Jesus, but he commits the sin that Jesus declares to be the one unpardonable sin, the sin against the Holy Ghost."

The Leader adds that Mr. Southgate is "prompted by no personal motiv," as he and Mr. Moore hav only friendly feelings for each other, but he "is earnestly opposed to Mr. Moore's treatment of religion and he intends to seek recourse through the courts of justice." That is neatly stated, but perhaps the clergymen would receive a new light if the positions of himself and the editor of the Blade were reversed and Mr. Moore, being "opposed" to the preacher's "treatment of religion," "should seek recourse through the courts of justice." It is the time-honored way of settling religious differences. A sentence to prison is a conclusiv argument, for the time being, although it has some attributes inconveniently like those of the boomerang.

In a conversation with Mr. Moore, his clerical hunter said that he had "no personal unkindness in the matter, and that he was going to hav him prosecuted simply because he regarded it as his duty as a Christian minister and good citizen to do so." The religious persecutor is a cold-blooded torturer. Generally he has no such poor excuse as hatred or revenge. He persecutes simply because he thinks his God requires him to begin the work here which he, God, will take up and continue uninterruptedly in another world. He considers that such torture is necessary in order to save the "soul" of his victim and the souls of others, and incidentally, of course, lay up treasures for himself in heaven. W. Kingdon Clifford had men of the Southgate kind in mind when he wrote: "When we love our brother for the sake of our brother, we help all men to grow in the right; but when we love our brother for the sake of somebody else, who is very likely to damn our brother, it very soon comes to burning him alive for his soul's health." These are the indictments:

FOR BLASPHEMY.

"FAYETTE CIRCUIT COURT.

The Commonwealth of Kentucky, vs. C. C. Moore, } Blasphemy.

"The grand jury of Fayette county, in the name and by the authority of the commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse C. C. Moore of the offense of blasphemy, committed as follows: That C. C. Moore in the county aforesaid, being then and there the owner, controler, proprietor, and editor of a certain newspaper in the city of Lexington known as the Blue Grass Blade, did in the issue of said paper of Sunday, March 18, 1894, unlawfully, wickedly, and maliciously and blasphemously publish of and concerning the Christian religion, and concerning Jesus Christ and God and the Holy Scriptures, scandalous, false, malicious, wicked, and blasphemous words as follows, to wit: 'When I say Jesus Christ was a man exactly like I am and had a human father and mother exactly like I had, some of the pious call it blasphemy. When they say that Jesus Christ was born as the result of a sort of Breckinridge-Pollard hyphenation between God and a Jew woman, I call it blasphemy, so you see there is a stand off,' thereby meaning that pious and religious persons stated and believed that the birth of Jesus Christ was the result of an unholy and illicit alliance and connection between Almighty God and Mary, the mother of Christ, and intending thereby to treat with offensiv levity and ridicule the scriptural account of the divine conception and birth and to bring contempt and ridicule against Almighty God and his divine purpose and wisdom in causing the birth of Christ for the redemption of the world and the salvation of sinners, to the contempt of the Christian religion and the laws of this state, to the evil example of all others in like manner offending, and against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Kentucky.

"C. J. BRONSTON,
"Commonwealth's Attorney.

"Witness, Rev. E. L. Southgate."

FOR NUISANCE.

"FAYETTE CIRCUIT COURT.

The Commonwealth of Kentucky, vs. C. C. Moore. } Nuisance.

"The Grand Jury of Fayette County, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse C. C. Moore of the offense of committing a nuisance, committed as follows:

"That said C. C. Moore on the 6th day of April, 1894, in the county aforesaid, being then and there the owner, controler, proprietor, and editor of a certain newspaper published in the city of Lexington, known as the Blue Grass Blade, did unlawfully, wilfully, habitually, and continuously publish in the said paper articles and pieces, the chief intent and purpose of which was to revile and bring into contempt the character and attributes of Almighty God and the Holy Ghost, and Jesus Christ and the divine origin and conception of the latter, the holy scriptures, their authority, and the inspiration of any portion thereof, and to continuously deny and reproach God, his creation, government, and final judging of the world, and with the further mischievous and malicious intent to bring ridicule and contempt upon Christianity and the Christian religion in general, and to persuade and entice the people into a disbelief of the doctrins of the Christian religion, and be led into Infidelity and Atheism, and to destroy the influence of the church of God and his holy religion among the people, and by treating all of said sacred subjects with offensiv levity, to induce the people to treat them with scorn and contempt; and the said Moore did also unlawfully, wilfully, habitually, and continuously publish articles in said paper exposing to public ridicule the private life and character of divers individuals, applying opprobrious and offensiv epithets to them, attributing immorality and dishonest motivs to them, and endeavoring to bring them into the contempt of the public and to destroy their good name and fame, all of which aforesaid acts the said Moore has done and still continues to do for lucre and gain and to bring himself notoriety, and for the malicious and mischievous purpose of of injuring public morals, and sowing dissensions and stirring up strife, quarrels, and breaches of the peace among the people, and to the great dishonor of religion, good manners, and good government, and to the common nuisance and annoyance of all good citizens of the commonwealth, and against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Kentucky.

"C. J. BRONSTON,
"Commonwealth's Attorney.

"Witness, E. L. Southgate."

Those indictments read like leaves from the history of the Dark Ages. They would make appropriate appendices to George Macdonald's "Thumbscrew and Rack," for they would giv the reader a vivid idea of the most convincing Christian literature of the centuries in which the instruments of torture now in the Nuremburg collection were doing the work of the medieval Southgates. All intelligent Americans must blush with shame that such legal documents are possible in the land which was served by Paine and Jefferson and Adams. Think of invoking the law in this day of science to preserve from ridicule the dogma of the miraculous conception! Who is there to-day so credulous as to believe that Jesus (if such a man ever lived) had an origin one whit different from that of every other man who has lived or who now livs? Mr. Southgate may be very ignorant, but we should hesitate long before reflecting upon his intelligence to the extent of charging him with believing that any man or woman came into life without the aid of an earthly father. And here steps forward a Kentucky grand jury with a presentment against an editor who has laughed at the ancient tale! What a spectacle!

But the prosecution would be no less persecution if Mr. Moore had denied the existence of the law of gravitation or that of chemical affinity. It is his right to say that the earth is flat, or that the sun is a satellite of the moon. He has an inalienable right to his opinions and the expression of them, no matter how absurd they may be or how contrary to the prejudices or the knowledge of all the Southgates and grand juries in the world.

On April 10th Mr. Moore gave bonds in $1,000 for his appearance for trial on July 2d. His bondsmen are George H. Whitney, E. B. Wrenn, M. Kaufman, and Dr. Bennett. His counsel are Judge George Denny and Judge J. R. Morton. He hopes to secure additional counsel before July. We shall keep our readers informed concerning all new developments in the case. With the Christian amendment as a part of the Constitution the outlook would be dark for the editor of the Blue Grass Blade, but under a secular Constitution there is a fighting chance for him.

For Dr. McAllister's Eye.

We learn from the Congressional Record that among the petitions sent to Congress against the Christian amendment was one from the Baptist ministers of Atlanta, Georgia, others from four Lutheran churches in Kansas, and one from a Lutheran church in North Carolina. This must make sore the heart of Dr. McAllister, who has time and again warned Christians against opposing the amendment, and thus aligning themselvs with the wicked Infidels, who are so depraved as to believe in and work for religious liberty. Then Dr. McAllister argued before the Judiciary Committee of the House that the Jews could not antagonize the theocratic schemes because they came to this country in pursuit of the Christian liberty granted by our institutions! It is too bad that the Jews do not justify his confidence in their supposed blindness. Here is the Jewish Messenger of this city saying editorially that the Judiciary Committee has "very sensibly reported adversely on the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution," while a contributor, Rev. L. Stein, writes a two-and-a-half-column argument against the Morse-Frye iniquity. It is an excellent production, and closes with these unmistakable words: "As Americans and Jews we shall ever solemnly protest, as we do now, against any attempted encroachment upon the fundamental principles of our Constitution, fervently joining in the warning cry that arises in its behalf from millions of loyal hearts—'Hands off! Touch not mine anointed!'" The Messenger also neatly satirizes Governor Morris, of Connecticut, and his, O Jesu, hominem salvator," fast day proclamation.

Rabbi E. N. Calisch, of Richmond, Virginia, arraigns the National Reformers in a way that must send cold shivers up the spines of Messrs. George, McAllister, and Wylie. He clearly understands that legislation can make hypocrits but not believers and he sees that the attempt to secure the adoption of a Christian amendment will involve a resort to all the tricks and dishonest schemes common to politicians. The American Hebrew reports Rabbi Calisch as follows:

"You cannot enact belief, or place faith within a man's bosom by putting it on the statute book. Law cannot control the struggles of the soul, or legislation check or restrain its flight. There may be a thousand constitutions, with a thousand preambles to each, and a thousand mentionings of the deity in each, yet they will never turn the Atheistic heart or place God within a bosom where he is not already enthroned and acknowledged.

"For this reason the union of church and state is wrong; for this reason that union, wherever it has been, has been dangerous and pernicious; and for this reason, this resolution, which seeks to reëstablish this union, is a threat to the safety of the country, whose greatest blessing has been the separation of these two great factors of human civilization.

"It is probable that this bill will not become a law. . . . But it is in every degree possible. The sense of justice in some of the followers of the creed favored therein may be strong enough for them to admit that this resolution is an infringement on the rights and privileges of many citizens, but it will not be strong enough, in all instances, to produce any opposition to it. Its advocates will be tireless and ubiquitous. Though many of them will, doubtless, be ministers of the gospel and pronounced professors of religion, yet we know, from experience, that not, in all cases, will they hesitate to use means unscrupulous and dishonest. With them the end justifies the means. To hav it formally and constitutionally declared that this is a 'Christian country and that its glory and grandeur are due to the name of Christ,' will be sufficient to set in motion all the machinations of politics. All the tricks, methods, and media, known and yet to be invented, will be resorted to. Appeals will be made to cupidity, fear, superstition, social ambition, to the love of gain and distinction, and like Esau's mess of pottage, the birthright of the dearest privilege of American citizenship will be bartered for a vote for a hangman's office, or the janitorship of a public building."

Is Dr. McAllister sure that the Jews are such dullards as he professed to believe them to be?

Wanted—More Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two splendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

The Pennsylvania Sabbath Association will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the Pennsylvania Sunday law. Why doesn't it also celebrate the anniversaries of the hanging of the witches at Salem? Or the burning of Servetus by Calvin?

At Platte City, Missouri, the grand jury has brought indictments against forty of the leading men and women of the place for playing progressiv euchre! The press dispatch says that, as a result, one of the leading churches is likely to be disrupted. No comment is necessary, for any one who cannot see the moral in this event would be wholly impervious to argument.

The New York Times, while assuming that there cannot be two opinions about the merits of the Pollard-Breckinridge lawsuit, takes occasion to sharply rap the Grannisites over the knuckles for obtruding their opinions during the progress of the trial. It givs said amateur judges and jurors these deserved blows:

"The public pr ss, so far as we hav remarked, has observed a decent reticence upon the matter, but scarcely a day passes that some society does not feel called upon to pass some resolution in order to show that it is not in sympathy with indecent and criminal conduct. This precipitancy argues a pruriency of mind. Suppose the case were one of embezzlement or arson. Would the unions, leagues, and societies feel called upon to express their views upon these crimes in advance of the verdict, lest they should be suspected of a secret sympathy with stealing money or setting houses on fire? Of course not. They would not find the subject matter of the trials so irresistibly alluring to them that they could not wait until the trial was over in order to say something."

A motion was made in the New York conference of the Methodist Episcopal church that the prosecution and conviction of John Y. McKane be approved and also the prosecution of W. C. P. Breckinridge, and demanding that the latter be expelled from Congress. Silence reigned for the space of a moment and then a minister rose and said:

"I see no reason for dragging in the name of Brother McKane. He is receiving his punishment now. He is done for. I suggest that his name be stricken out of the resolutions."

"Brother McKane's" name was stricken out and Mr. Breckinridge received the full discharge from the battery of Methodist wrath. Was the Congressman condemned and the Gravesend boss's offense passed over in silence because the former is a Presbyterian and the latter a Methodist or because the Methodists look less kindly upon immorality than upon crime?

The Sunday law zealots want to hav the ordering of other people's occupations on Sunday. They are fearful that the "sanctity" of the day will get bruised if the ungodly are left to seek their own happiness in their own way. But these zealots are not so tender of the day, when they can work out of sight of the people they try to fool and rule. W. C. P. Breckinridge endeavored to get through Congress a Sunday law for the District of Columbia, and he supported the movement to close the World's Fair on the first day of the week. Yet, in the lawsuit at Washington, this significant fact came out under cross-examination:

"Next day—Sunday—I found a pile of correspondence accumulated at my house, so I attended to that, and did not go to church."

Now, Breckinridge had just as good a reputation at that time for loyalty to the Sunday superstition as Morse, and Blair, and Stone hav at present. We respectfully suggest to Rev. H. H. George and Dr. McAllister that they wait upon the three Congressmen above named and demand that they say, on their honor as Christian gentlemen, whether they attend to their correspondence on "Sabbath." We think that even Messrs. McAllister and George will agree with us that Infidels cannot be expected to submit with good grace to Sunday laws which their framers and champions deliberately disregard. The cause of Sabbath observance is at stake. Are Morse, and Stone, and Blair like Breckinridge—do they devote themselves to business on Sunday?

In presenting the concluding installment of "Church Property" we wish to again call the attention of our readers to the value of this collection of the statistics of ecclesiastical wealth and the accompanying arguments in support of the demand for the uniform, equal, and impartial taxation of all kinds of private property. It should hav the widest possible circulation, for there is no other work extant which so combines statistical facts, historical examples and warnings, and sound reasoning. Every editor, every newspaper writer, every economic reformer, every minister, every legislator, should hav a copy. The pamphlet will contain more than one hundred pages and it will be sold for 15 cents per single copy. Ten copies will be sold for $1.00 and one hundred copies for $8.00; postage prepaid in all cases. We shall at once send a copy to each paper in the state of New York, and to leading papers in other states. A copy will be mailed to each member of the New York legislature and of the New York Constitutional Convention. Thus thousands of copies will be distributed gratuitously. All this will put us to considerable expense and we hope the friends of equal taxation will chip in a little to help us do this work which is for the benefit of all. The fight is centered in New York this year and a victory here will make the triumph of justice in other states in other years very much easier.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

Should It Be Exempt from Just and Impartial Taxation?

REASONS WHY IT SHOULD NOT.

An Argument for Equality of Taxation, and a Statement of Facts, Giving, from the Census of 1890, the Valne, by Denominations, of Church Property in the United States and in the Several States and Territories and in All Cities Having 25,000 or More Inhabitants; so Arranged as to Show at a Glance the Relative Standing as to Wealth of the Leading Denominations and Denominational Groups.—Also, Much Other Matter of Especial Interest to Certain Cities, States, and Sections.—All Comparisons and Percentages Based Upon Official Figures.

V.

New York—Concluded.

In these thirteen cities of this state, which are all the first, second and third class cities of New York, according to the classification of the Census Bureau, the Catholic church holds the first place ten times, and second and third places once each; the Protestant Episcopal church holds the first place twice, second and third places three times each, and fourth place five times; the Presbyterian holds first place once, second place five times, third place four times and fourth place once; the Baptist holds second and third places twice each, and fourth place four times; the Methodist holds second place once, and third and fourth places three times each, and the Congregationalist second place once. Thus, while the Protestant Episcopal is the wealthiest church in the State, the Catholic owns the most property in ten cities, taken separately, and is surpassed by the Episcopal in only two and by the Presbyterian in one. Yet in the aggregate the Protestant Episcopal owns $23,184,500 in the thirteen cities, while the Catholic owns $19,874,987.

Who can doubt that the exemption from taxation of these great aggregations of wealth is a denial of equal justice, and that its effect upon morals is distinctly and momentously disastrous? Is there any valid reason why the taxes of the people should be augmented by the amount which these gorgeous temples of worship in the great centers of wealth and fashion evade? Why should not Trinity's millions pay for their own defense? Why should not all these churches pay their debts to the community, and thus to that extent justify the claims made for them as teachers of ethics?

In New York the real and personal property of preachers and priests is, to the value of fifteen hundred dollars, exempt from taxation. This is manifestly unjust, because it compels dissenters to help pay for the religious services enjoyed by believers, and because it gives to one class of workers a state pension not granted on equal terms to all workers. There is no valid reason why the property of the editor, the Freethought lecturer, the hod-carrier, or the blacksmith should not have the privilege of exemption that is granted to that of clergymen, and there is no man who loves justice who will defend the exemption of the latter unless he is blinded by partisan prejudice. Such exemption is unconstitutional, unfair, and unjust.

North Carolina.

There is in this State church property to the value of $7,077,440. The denominations owning most of it are these:

Mr. Nicholas Kleeman has been trying to hav put on the tax duplicate of Hamilton county a large number of pieces of property owned by the Catholic church. The aggregate value of this untaxed church wealth is more than two million dollars, according to the Cincinnati Commercial. Following is a partial list of the property, as furnished by Mr. Kleeman to the Commercial. It must be understood that much of this is in addition to the amount of Catholic church property returned by the United States census. Catholic	156,050	Reformed	11,410
Disciples of Christ	93,400

The law of Washington exempts from taxation churches worth less than $5,000 One result of this was that, in Seattle, where some churches cost as much as $25,000 to $50,000 each, none were assessed as worth more than $5,000! Can organizations which connive at such rascality justly claim exemption from taxation on the ground that they are the chief conservers of morality?

One denomination owns nearly one-third of the total amount, and five denominations own about nineteen twenty-fourths.

The value of church property in Tacoma is given as $515,125 of which the Methodists own $114,900; the Presbyterians, $92.000; Episcopalians, $79,500; Congregationalists, $65,700; Baptists, $60,000; Lutherans. $32,000; Catholics, $20,000; Miscellaneous, $51,025. Wyoming.

Wyoming has within her borders church property to the value of $368,625. These are the leading denominations:

Catholic	$173,450	Congregationalist	$44,550
Methodist	52,700	Baptist	27,875
Presbyterian	52,250	Latter Day Saints	11,700

One denomination owns nearly one-half of total amount, and five denominations own more than thirty-five thirty-sevenths.

Canada.

We do not hav at hand statistics of church property in the Dominion, except for Toronto. Secular Thought of March 17th condenses from the Toronto Evening Telegram a table of exemptions for that city. The total of exempt church property is $6,256,135.

Episcopalian	$1,597,660	Congregationalist	$211,523
Catholic	1,394,097	Salvation Army	86,122
Methodist	1,139,409	Unitarian	37,838
Presbyterian	1,124,512	Jewish Cong	17,995
Baptist	463,225	Miscellaneous	183,754

Among other exempt properties are a number of Young Men's Christian Association buildings, and the item of $45,674 for public halls covers buildings "carried on as commercial speculations, and all fraudulently claiming tax exemption as 'religious' institutions."

Relative Wealth of Denominations.

Comparing the denominations in the various states and territories and the District of Columbia, to determine their relative wealth, numerically measured, we find that the Methodist group holds first place in twenty-five states, second place in fifteen, third place in six, fourth place in three, and fifth place in one; the Catholics hold first place in twelve states, second place in fourteen, third place in two, fourth place in eight, and fifth place in eight; the Congregationalists hold first place in five, third place in one, fourth place in four, and fifth place in five; the Baptists hold first place in four, second place in nine, third place in seven, fourth place in nine, and fifth place in thirteen; the Presbyterians hold first place in two, second place in seven, third place in twenty, fourth place in ten, and fifth place in two; the Episcopalians hold first place in one, second place in two, third place in nine, fourth place in thirteen, and fifth place in nine; the Latter Day Saints hold first place in one, and third place in two; the Russian Orthodox church holds first place in one; the Lutherans hold second place in two, third place in two, fourth place in one, and fifth place in four; the Disciples of Christ hold fifth place in three. the Unitarians fifth place in two, and the Universalists fifth place in one.

To put it in another way: The Methodists hold first place twenty-five times; the Catholics, twelve; the Congregationalists, five; the Baptists, four; the Presbyterians, two; the Episcopalians, Russian Orthodox, and Latter Day Saints, once each. The Methodists hold second place fifteen times; the Catholics fourteen; the Baptists, nine; the Presbyterians, seven; the Episcopalians and Lutherans, twice each. The Presbyterians hold third place twenty times; the Episcopalians, eight; the Baptists, seven; the Methodists, six; the Catholics, Lutherans, and Latter Day Saints, twice each; the Congregationalists, once. The Episcopalians hold fourth place thirteen times; the Presbyterians, ten; the Baptists, nine; the Catholics, eight; the Congregationalists, four; the Methodists, three; the Lutherans, once. The Baptists occupy fifth place thirteen times; the Episcopalians, nine; the Catholics, eight; the Congregationalists, five; the Lutherans, four; the Disciples of Christ, three; the Presbyterians and Unitarians, twice each; the Methodists and Universalists, once each.

Leading Urban and Rural Denominations.

Comparing the statistics of the states with those of the cities to determine the relative standing of the leading denominational groups, an interesting fact is brought to light. In the fifty-one states, territories, and the District of Columbia the Methodist group leads, being the wealthiest in twenty-five, while the Catholic is wealthiest in only twelve, the Congregationalist in five, the Baptist in four, Presbyterian in two, and the Episcopalian in one. In the one hundred and twenty-four cities of the first, second, and third classes in the United States the Catholics lead in fifty-five, the Methodists in twenty-eight, Presbyterians in fifteen, Congregationalists in nine, Episcopalians in eight, and the Baptists and Lutherans in four each. This shows that the Catholic, Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches flourish most luxuriantly in the larger cities, while the Methodist and Baptist and, in a lesser degree, the Congregationalist, find a more nourishing soil in the towns and country. Inasmuch as urban population and wealth are increasing more rapidly than the rural, it is fairly safe to assume that the Catholic, Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches are destined to outstrip all other churches in the accumulation of property. This presents a great opportunity for these powerful denominations to step to the front and declare that the demand for the taxation of church possessions has their unqualified indorsement. How quickly such a declaration now would raise them in the estimation of the "great common people"! By doing this they would relax many a bowstring drawn taut to wing a shaft of piercing criticism or righteous denunciation.

Following is a table giving the number of denominational groups and denominations in each state and territory:

Conclusion.

It is argued in defense of the exemption of church property from taxation that such property is non-productive. In answer to this, it has been shown that it is not wholly unproductive—that, in fact, much church property is very productive. But, if all church wealth was entirely infertile, its exemption from taxation because of that non-productivity would logically and justly necessitate the exemption of a vast amount of other wealth which is likewise non-productive.

Because the church is largely supported by gifts it is urged that it should not be taxed. In reply it has been asked why the son whose father has given a portion of his fortune to the church, instead of to the son, should be fined for the support of the church his father has enriched, as he is fined by the withdrawal of the legacy from the list of taxable property. And who would say that the property which one individual had received by gift from another should not be taxed? The church receives the benefits of the gift, and should, in equity, pay for its protection.

In answer to the claim that churches exert a great moral influence, and therefore should be exempt from taxation, it has been answered that justice is fundamental to all morality, and that the organization which refuses to pay its debts cannot exert a good influence, no matter what its teachings may be; that the demand is made for the taxation of the property of the churches, not of their moral influence; that when the church, by the exemption of her property from taxation, compels unbelievers to contribute to her support, she exerts a distinctly immoral influence, because she violates the Constitution by effecting a union of church and state; that the argument of "moral influence" would relieve from the payment of taxes every man whose property serves a useful purpose, and that the moral influence of Christians is greatly lessened by their refusal to bear their share, as church members, of the public burdens.

When it is urged that a handsome church enhances the value of adjacent property and therefore it should not pay taxes, it is sufficient to show that sometimes churches depreciate the value of property in their neighborhood, and even if they always increased it such fact would not justify their exemption, for the same effect produced by the erection of a beautiful residence or a business block would, by a parity of reasoning, put the residence and the business block on the free list.

Church property should be taxed because its exemption interferes with religious liberty by compelling the minority to pay taxes for the propagation of the theological opinions of the majority, the exemption of ecclesiastical property from taxation being, in effect, the voting of a sum out of the treasury of the state for the support of certain beliefs about matters concerning which it is impossible for all the people to think alike.

Exemption of church property from taxation is unjust, because it is not equal, uniform, and impartial. Those who use churches should pay for them.

Exemption of church property from taxation is dangerous. It tends to build up monopolies, fetters business and industry, encourages and rewards polite pauperism, makes the priesthood arrogant, dictatorial, and venal, and leads ultimately and inevitably to conflict and confiscation, if not to war with all its horrors. The examples of France, Italy, and Mexico should warn in time the people of the United States. And on our northern border is Quebec, in many municipalities of which half or more of the property is exempt from taxation.

It should be understood by all law-makers that there is no good reason for exempting from taxation any portion of the property of the Young Men's Christian Association. Such exemption is a gross outrage upon the tax-paying public. Every argument against the exemption of church property of course includes in its scope all favoritism toward wealth owned by the Young Men's Christian Associations, Epworth Leagues, Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, Women's Christian Temperance Unions, and other similar organizations. The principle of equality of citizens' rights cannot, under any circumstances, be legitimately used to justify or even excuse the exemption of the property of these societies from taxation.

This plea for equal justice to all the people may well be brought to a close with these words from the pen of the author of the Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson:

It is wicked and tyrannical to compel any man to support a religion in which he does not believe.

To New York Liberals.

While the Constitutional Convention of New York is of national importance, so far as Freethought is concerned, and all should aid in the work to be accomplished there, yet the Liberals of New York hav a special interest, and upon them must devolve mainly the raising of the necessary means for securing the end we hav in view—namely, the non-exemption of church property from taxation. It is not best to scatter our fire. So far as Sunday laws are concerned, that matter will rest mainly with the legislatures anyway; but the question of the exemption of property from taxation should be taken out of the hands of the legislature. This body should not hav the power to exempt. The Constitution should settle this question on the basis of impartial taxation. And that is what we shall try to do—to so change the Constitution as it now is as to prevent forever the exercise by the legislature of this unjust and dangerous power of exemption. If we can do this, a very important victory will be won. We may not succeed; but at any rate, as Freethinkers, it is our duty to try. If we do not try, we certainly shall not win. If we do not win, we can create an agitation, and put forth means of education that will enable us to win hereafter. The question of church taxation is the most important political question before Liberals to-day, and it is time to put forth every effort in this direction. I hope that New York Liberals will contribute generously. We want to distribute the pamphlet on "Church Property." Send directly to the Truth Seeker Company. All receipts will be acknowledged. Do not delay.

Observations.

When the religious statistics of the Washington prisons were taken a few years ago, one Infidel was found among the convicts. Some of the Freethinkers took the trouble to investigate the case, and discovered that the man's "crime" was selling a bottle of whisky to an Indian—an offense which must be one of frequent occurrence, as, during my residence in that state, I observed that the siwash with coin to pay for it could acquire a jag that would satisfy any white man. There is now a second Infidel in the Washington penitentiary. He is C. F. Blackburn, a long-time reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, an earnest worker, and an enthusiastic writer and talker. Mr. Blackburn got there by writing a postal card. In Seattle, where he lived, there is a disreputable gang of politicians, with an unscrupulous newspaper organ; and these together run the affairs of the city and state in whatever manner is most remunerativ to them personally. Besides being an Atheist, Mr. Blackburn is a Populist and a free silver man, in which varied capacities he incurred the enmity of the newspaper organ above alluded to, and it slandered him freely. Its editor declined to publish his replies, and so, desiring that others should know his opinion of that mercenary individual, Blackburn took to writing him postal cards. When the paper made a crack at him one day, the editor got a card the next. Blackburn knew there was a law against abusing anybody through the mails, and when especially worked up he sent his cards by a messenger boy. But it appears that on one occasion either the boy or the editor posted the card, for Blackburn was arrested for going contrary to the statute, tried and convicted, sent to the penitentiary, and fined $500 with costs of court. I hav not learned what he wrote on the card, but I presume he told as near the truth as his knowledge of the facts and his command of language would permit. Probably a majority of the readers of the newspaper concerned would admit that its editor could be slandered, as it was not known that he had ever stolen a horse or been guilty of beach-combing; but that was foreign to the matter at issue. The Holy Ghost, which is the third person of the trinity with Comstock and the postmaster-general, had been sinned against, and Blackburn was railroaded off to that station where passengers change clothes for the penitentiary and enjoy long periods for refreshments.

It will be seen that Mr. Blackburn has been indiscreet, and is now paying for it. Although a mining man, it was obviously his duty to view with equanimity the ruin of his business through the destruction of the silver industry, in which the paper assisted. Although an Atheist, he should without protest hav gone to the limbo of cranks to which other Freethinkers were consigned by the same authority. Although a Populist, it was not his business to object to being called "an Anarchist of the worst stamp," and, although a citizen and a taxpayer, he should hav resigned his right to use the mails, and never said a word. Finally, when landed in the penitentiary, his family broken up, his character maligned, his property forfeited. and himself penniless, where does his kick come in? Are not the politicians the saints, from the haloed Governor McGraw up to Henchman Denny O'Brien, and has he not offended their organ, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer? Above all, did he not buy a Card, did he not hav the impudence to write thereon Words, and did not the same pass through the Mails, and should not every honest man so doing rejoice to be in jail while the gang who procured his conviction are at large? What are laws for except to protect those who profit by enforcing them? What is the use of roaring? In the solitude of his cell Mr. Blackburn will hav an opportunity to reflect upon these matters, and the next time he attends a Fourth of July demonstration he will understand what the orators mean when they allude to American liberty.

Meanwhile I should like to be told by what method the writing and mailing of a postal card can be stretched into an offense worthy to be punished by a year's imprisonment and financial ruin. The enormity of maintaining and enforcing such a law is greater than any crime that could by any possibility be committed in violation of it.

Mohammed Charles Chilton Moore, of Lexington, Ky., has been indicted for blasphemy, charged with using these words among others:

I say that Jesus Christ was a man exactly like I am, and had a father and mother exactly like I had.

It may be fortunate for Moore that no worse charge has been brought against him; for blasphemy is a peccadillo compared with his repeated cri nes against English grammar. His abduction of the adverb "like," which he holds in duress and upon which he imposes the duties of a conjunction, is a rather more serious offense than to impeach, as he does, the vigor of the Holy Ghost. Mohammed Charles! the phrase "like I am" or "like I had" is indictable in all the courts of letters. Say "as I am" and "as I had," Moey, old boy.

The above Moore prints an ironical item to the effect that an important witness has been found in the Breckinridge case—namely, the man who drove the carriage and heard the defendant's cries for help when the plaintiff assaulted him. Moore and other Prohibitionists should hasten to find a similar witness in their own behalf—some person who has seen the liquor-seller assaulting the citizen and pouring his wares down the latter's throat, or heard the citizen's calls for assistance. Such a witness's testimony might impart some substance to what the Hon. David Overmyer so accurately describes as the hollow and vapid sophism of Prohibition.

Last Sunday evening, at Hackensack, N. J., Miss Belle Shiels was singing the hymn, "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," and had just uttered the words, "Let me to thy bosom fly," when a boy pointed a gun at her, it was discharged, and she flew. Death was instantaneous.

Dear Lord, instead of crushing this young bud,
On whom thy hand hath fallen to destroy,
Oh, why not, with a dull and sickening thud.
Let drop a brick on that blamed idiot boy?

J. K. Ingalls, of Glenora, N. Y., advises me as follows:

While agreeing with you mainly, in your criticism of Gen. Trumbull on "The Legal Tender System," in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 7th, I think you not quite exact in saying that under enforcement of debt contracts "a legal tender for the discharge of such contracts would appear to be positivly necessary." In the absence of a legal tender money there need be no forced sale, the creditor taking any property he might find free from exemption at the market price, or at a price determined by the court or by the jury rendering the verdict for recovery. The price would hav to be made, of course, in terms of current money, but this would be quite different from compelling the debtor to first part with his assets at forced sale and then purchase legal tender, at whatever premium, to pay his debt with. Our nation sold its property for 50c. or 60c. dollars, and then bought gold, legal tender, at 100c., to pay billions of debt, after the war.

Beyond dispute, the legal enforcement of private contracts is an insidious enemy of prosperity. It should hav been abolished along with imprisonment for debt, of which barbarity it is a twin; but I am not quite clear as to Mr. Ingalls's meaning when he speaks of the purchase of legal tender for the payment of debt. A debtor compelled to part with his assets at forced sale must hav the same claim to receive legal tender as the proceeds of the sale that the creditor who sells him out has to receive legal tender in payment of the original obligation, and would not, then, be obliged to purchase any. All money issued under the sanction of the government, or none at all, should be a legal tender. Mr. Ingalls's proposed substitute for the forced sale seems to me a beneficent one.

The American Eagle, a Kansas paper, looks from its eyrie upon the Commonweal Army of Coxey, and emits this warning screech:

Heretofore we hav not mentioned Coxey's army, as we considered it in the light as a freak of a lunatic. Considering the increasing additions to the army we think it is time the matter was investigated. Should it turn out to be a Jesuitical scheme we mav expect a bloody time. If so, their real object will be kept from the general public until they can surround our storehouses of arms and amunition of war and seize the same. Should there be anything of the kind contemplated we may expect that Rome will turn out her seven hundred thousand armed men which they hav in the United States ready for an emergency.

There should be an investigation sure enough, but it ought to be made by a commission de lunatico inquirendo, extending its research to the editorial rooms of a few A. P. A. papers, the conductors of which are either lunatics, or sane persons who imagin they are dealing with a constituency that has no sense. As fantastic liars and all-round illusionists these editors form a distinct religious sect, their fetiches being the Bible and a handful of American mud. They also hav a distinct system of demonology, with the pope as archfiend and all Catholics as imps. As the poor Indian with untutored mind sees God in clouds and hears him in the wind, so the Apaist recognizes everywhere the presence of his malign spirits. They assassinated Lincoln, actuated the Confederacy, brought on hard times, struck Billy Patterson, invented appendicitis, and hav now inspired Coxey to organize the Commonweal Army and seize the country. As writers of current history of the Romish church, the Apaists find rivals nowhere except among the Catholic writers of its record in the past, and there is no truth in either of them. Being opposed to Roman Catholicism, the American Protectiv Association necessarily does some good; for example, it is making the Democratic party very sick of its coalition with that church; but a propaganda founded on religious prejudices, falsification of history, and misrepresentation of current facts will prove so prolific in its evil results that the good it does will not be conspicuous when the balance is struck. I feel safe in making the prophecy that the unknown "Smith" in Coxey's brigade will not be revealed as Pope Leo in disguise.

A rev. gent. named Brevard D. Sinclair, Boston, Mass., sends out a book entitled "The Crowning Sin of the Age," which sin is defined as the "perversion of marriage." Mr. Sinclar views with alarm the lack of fecundity in modern New England families, especially among adherents of the Protestant churches. There are marriages enough, and he does not deny either the benevolence of New England wives or the devotion of New England husbands; but he decries with a loud voice the prevalent shirking of parental obligations, because of which our foreign and Roman Catholic population is fast gaining upon the descendants of the Puritans. He declares that it is incumbent on every married couple to rear at least four children, and repeats the old lies that "God never created a mouth without food to fill it," and "creates covering for every body which he has made." A young man on slender pay, who asks his advice about marrying and raising children, is rebuked for "lust of money," and told to go ahead and "do his duty manfully." He speaks highly of the Catholic church, which encourages the free and unlimited coinage of infants. It is, in fact, a mortal sin for a Roman Catholic individual to divert in any manner the course of nature in this respect, such an act being regarded by the priests as a more heinous offense than taking life in its maturity. A physician testifies that prenatal infanticide is unknown among Catholics; but the fact that the majority of postnatal homicides are committed by adherents of that religion is not cited, as it ought to be in considering a question like this; for so long as the most prolific races furnish the largest percentage of criminals, there would seem to be an argument against over exertion on the part of such parents.

Mr. Sinclair denies that the size of families is in any way a practical question. Marriage, as he views it, is a sacrament, and God has placed no limit on its numerical results. He illustrates the well-known proposition that on matters pertaining to this world clergymen are the worst possible advisers, but even as a theologian he should not counsel prodigality of the multiplying faculty. He must know that the more people there are born. the more will be damned.

Thanks, George, awfully. You might hav hit us harder. We expected it. Perhaps you hav long since learned that it is very easy to make a mistake. Wise men are apt to realize this.—Ernest Mendum, in the Investigator.

Nothing could be more graceful or less permeated with error Mistakes are, indeed, accomplished with extreme facility. Moses made them, and even Homer sometimes calked himself.

I am under obligations to R. F. Grigsby, Edgeworth, J. K. Ingalls, and others for valuable suggestions on matters under discussion. Though some of the suggestions made for my benefit may apparently fall on barren ground, yet I thank all who hav thus generously endeavored to develop my mental resources. GEO. E. MACDONALD.

COLONEL INGERSOLL lectures in Brooklyn on Sunday, April 22d.

S. P. PUTNAM lectures before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association, May 13th.

THE Liberal Club h d the honor of listening, last Friday, to a lecture by Judge Noah Davis, on "Women as Citizens Essential to American Institutions." It was an able, thorough, and brilliant address, and the cause of woman suffrage was strongly advocated by the genial judge.

LAST Sunday night at the Star Theater a crowded house greeted Colonel Ingersoll's last appearance in New York this season. "What Must We do to Be Saved?" was the lecture; and it was delivered in his best style, the many witty sayings causing much laughter, and his eloquence at times bringing great applause. The many points scored against the creeds, especially that of the Catholic church, was enjoyed heartily by the enthusiastic audience. Many were turned away for want of room.

ONE of the most interesting talks the Brooklyn Philosophical Association has had the pleasure of listening to this season, was by Henry Bird, of Newark, last Sunday, when he spoke on "Evolution in Form and Color in the Vegetable World." He brought specimens by which to show how one plant may differentiate into two or three kinds; also different colored roses, showing how a rose of one color may produce two or three roses of as many colors. The remarks made were listened to apreciativly and the specimens thoroughly examined.

Priestcraft Destructiv of Liberty.

LINCOLN, N. M., March 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find petition against the God-in-the-Constitution amendment. Also $10 to aid Mr. Putnam and Mr. Heston in their grand work. You will please divide this money equally between them.

I will giv you the names of the parties who contributed the inclosed amount: Nat. Moore, Nogal, New Mexico, $4; R. M Hopper, Fort Stanton. N. M., $2; J. N. Coe, Fort Stanton, N. M., $2; S. T. Gray, $2; total, $10.

I hope Mr. Putnam will suceeed in defeating the God-in-the-Constitution resolution. If we allow priestcraft to reign over our government we will soon be deprived of our liberty. S. T. GRAY

What! Only Two Churches?

LEONIDAS, MICH., March 30, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $6.20, for which please send THE TRUTH SEEKER, "Right Living," "Thumbscrew and Rack," and "Church and Freethought."

We have two churches in this little place, and both seem to hav reached a standstill, if they are not on a decline It has been four years since either has had a revival, and the last one drew but thirteen into the fold, twelve of whom were women.

A general stagnation of business has prevailed in this vicinity for some time, owing to the extreme low price of produce. What we seem to want is more money in business and less in bonds. Wishing you and THE TRUTH SEEKER all possible success, I remain

Yours truly, D. MILLARD.

The Old Question About Cain's Wife.

ILWACO, WASH., March 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER I came across an article written by "A. J.," and I will say that it is the best piece I hav ever seen in the paper. There are some preachers that are not Sundav beggars. We hav a preacher here who is a nice man; his name is McKay; he takes only what you giv him, and he will divide with the poor. Some persons say there was no need of a flood in the United States, as there were no inhabitants to drown.

The Christians want to hav the Bible in the schools. It will teach murder, robbery, cannibalism, and lying and cheating, as all of that is in the Bible. If any person does not believe it let him read the Bible and he will find it. The Bible says Adam and Eve were the first man and woman, and they had two sons, Cain and Abel, and Cain had a mark put on him, and he went to another land and got a wife. Now, where did that woman come from, if Eve was the only woman?

The preachers say, "Giv your soul to God, or you will go to hell?" Can anybody tell where hell is? Hell is on earth and nowhere else; when you hav plenty of everything you want and good health you are in heaven. But when you are sick all the time and starving and suffering, then you are in hell, and that is all the hell there is. M. O.

It Tells of Men and Women.

FORTRESS MONROE, VA., March 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5, for which I expect to get one of the grandest books that this or any other age ever produced, and I will be very proud of seeing my name enrolled in it—I mean S. P. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought."

I am sure that everybody who has heard Mr Putnam lecture or read any of his former books will agree with me that he is one of the ablest champions of Freethought and well worthy of being the author of a book which will, I hope, in a few years, gain entrance to the home of every Freethinker in the country, because it will deal with facts and tell us of men and women worthy of our respect, love, and esteem, and not of mythical, blood-thirsty gods, murderers, thieves, and adulterers, as the Bible does.

Every Freethinker in the country ought to subscribe for it at once, especially as you offer your splendid journal for half price in conjunction with it, and I must admit that your paper is fighting its opponents—ignorance and superstition—as boldly and effectually as ever, and I sincerely hope that you and all the other brave champions of liberty will liv long enough to see your efforts crowned with every success. With best wishes for the final triumph of Freethought, I remain, Yours for liberty, WM. WEST.

Putnam's Press and Platform.

ELSINORE, CAL., March 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Whenever any of my brother or sister lecturers propose practical measures and do radical work, I for one take great pleasure in commending, even more than in the exercise—so exhilarating—of all-around criticism. of which nearly all Freethinkers are passionately fond and Christians generally hate.

Brother Putnam declares a very important fact which Underwood, Chase, Hull, York, Bowman, Ravlin, myself, and many others, hav for years endeavored to actualize, namely, "It takes about six lectures to thoroughly arouse a community, and it takes that number of lectures to adequately explain Freethought in its relations to life, philosophy, science, politics, and human happiness and progress." Not "adequately," Brother Putnam, only partially. The field is immense, the laborers few. A single lecture can not "thoroughly arouse a community." Brother Putnam sees this clearly. Ingersoll makes his influence felt mightily in one lecture "left blooming alone." But let him remain in each city at least one week and giv a lecture each night, matinee Saturday afternoon, and two sermons on "Lord's day." He would deepen his impressions, "convict and convert" nearly the entire community. That would make thorough work as far as he went; but even a week is insufficient to crowd in his scores of lectures.

Is some one saying, "No one city could afford to p y $1 admission every night for six or eight nights, and the attendance would dwindle"? People do, however, patronize the theater with large admission fees for months together, and is not the colonel more entertaining and fully as instructiv as a first-class theater?

Rev. Sam Jones has "evangelized" two weeks and more at a time in several cities; three, sometimes four "sermons" daily. True, they were free, ostensibly, but actually costly.

No truer words than these of Putnam's can be expressed: "A long and hard battle is before us for human rights," and is he not correct in saying, "Wherever there is a handful of Freethinkers, they should do something."

And, as he says, "The platform and the press must work together in this great enterprise."

I hav noticed for several years that the Freethought family that does not subscribe for. and receive regularly, one or more Liberal publications, soon becomes cold, apathetic, and the younger members drift into some fashionable church. This mockery has been kept up for a generation, and the Christian religion, with all its absurdities, gaily bedecked in the most ridiculous notions ever concocted, proudly walks through the world the most fashionable, useless, pernicious thing in it. What there is about the Christian religion to attract any sensible person is a worse puzzle than the Chinese ever invented. But when the children of Freethinkers join the church—O ye gods! how the "angels" must laugh till they grow red in the face

Search out the cause and you will discover that the parents never subscribed for a Freethought paper! This shot will hit nine out of ten. W. F. JAMIESON.

Looking for a Job Under King Jesus.

CLINT, TEX., March 16, 1894

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for renewal of subscription. I am rejoiced to see the splendid resistance THE TRUTH SEEKER is making to the diabolical designs of the self styled National Reform Association. To the rational mind what a pitiable spectacle this boastful free country presents! A mongrel population of sixty five millions, most of whom are the victims of ignorance and superstition, by means of which some two hundred thousand holy priests, preachers, evangelists, etc., so called, are supported in idleness, and a thousand million dollars of property goes untaxed as belonging to a non-resident by the name of God, while his poverty-stricken followers hav to support this extravagant government which Mr. Cleveland, in his inaugural, said God is running for his own glory. Then why don't he pay the expenses of it and the pension roll? I said that the sky-pilots were idlers. No, they are not wholly so. As a rule, what time they are not visiting and gossiping with the women they are engaged in trying to auction off corner lots in the city of the New Jerusalem and "mansions in the skies" on the installment plan. Many a poor fool thinks he can read his title clear thereto after having paid the cash here, but I am thinking he will hav a hard time getting possession of the premises. And now the two hundred thousand or thereabout want to amend the Constitution so as to make Jesus king of the United States, and they and their successors to hold all the offices and make the laws. Poor George Washington and Thomas Jefferson and other men of that bad stamp left God out of the Constitution, wherefor they must hav been in hell all this time. But things are better now. We hav a pious president who knows all about God. Then, too, we hav a pious Congress. It is true that in the last thirty years it has legislated half the wealth of the country into the possession of some twenty-five thousand plutocrats, but that is a small affair when we consider what it did for God in voting to close the World's Fair on Sundays. Now, Mr. Editor, b tween us, don't you think it best for us to get "powerfully converted" and join this great holiness party, seeing how fast they are gaining power? If we do this in time we may get a fat office under King Jesus; if not, we can at least get lucrativ employment soon as they reëstablish the Holy Inquisition, such as chief engineer of the improved racking machine, twister of the thumbscrew, adjuster of the iron boot, or something of the kind.

S G. ETHERIDGE.

"Survival of Fittest"—Adaptability to Environment.

BOISFORT, WASH., March, 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $7.00. Money is almost impossible to get hold of, and through the lies, treachery, and persecutions of the godly pious I hav been reduced almost to penury. The Methodists hav been holding a revival here and hav not even warmed up the old backsliders, and I am blamed for their whole failure. They say that my influence has been the cause of their not getting converts. This elevates me, to think that I hav more power than their God, Jesus, and whole force combined.

Here is a specimen of their methods of making hypocrits. An eleven year-old child said to the hired-man one day: "Well, Jim, I hav got to go up to that G—d d—d altar just to please ma" Hundreds of prayers hav been offered up for my conversion, but I don't convert; and lastly the preachers and all the shining lights prayed to God to move me off the earth, but they hav not the faith of a grain of mustard seed, for I still liv. I happened to be in conversation with a gentleman about the American Protectiv Association, when a good pious brother broke in with these words: "I am going to join that association the first chance I get; and Boyd, you don't believe the Bible, but we'll show you, we'll carry the next election, and then we'll put the Bible in the public schools and keep it there with the bayonet." Now this, I am satisfied, emanated from the preacher, and shows what they are aiming at. When they put the Bible in the public schools with the bayonet, the next step will be to stop all Sunday papers "with the bayonet;" they will close all places of amusement "with the bayonet;" stop all Sunday trains and travel "with the bayonet;" drive all the people to their God-houses and to the mourners' bench "with the bayonet;" consequently force all the people to become as big hypocrits as they are themselvs; honesty, truth, and reason will then be below par, and hypocrisy, deceit, lies, treachery, slander, blood, and murder will be at a premium, and the one that does the most of it will get the chromo.

To bear false witness seems to be a Christian virtue; we hear the sky-pilots shout many things from the pulpit that we know to be positivly false; for instance, they soap their dupes very much with this: "Infidels are trying to destroy the Bible and giv us nothing, absolutely nothing, in place of it," and the poor deluded people believe it, yet we know it to be an absolute falsehood. But then, from the first introduction of Christianity into the world, it has been commendable to lie and deceive. When St. Paul was caught in his lies, he exclaimed, "If the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie, why am I yet called a sinner?" And again, "being crafty I caught you with guile." Even in the master's time there were liars and hypocrits, and he condemned them thusly: "O ye scribes and hypocrits, ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made he is two-fold more the child of hell than yourselvs. Ye devour widows' houses and, for a pretense, make long prayers, therefore, ye shall receive the greater damnation. Ye are likened to whited sepulchers," etc. Now we hav more than one hundred thousand priests and preachers in the United States, and many of them will tell the most unscrupulous lies and call them truths, to catch a convert "with guile," or fill their pockets with riches, which Christ most emphatically forbade.

Many intelligent people are beginning to see the horribleness of Christian cannibalism—for Christians eat their Jesus and drink his blood, and call it sweet—they would rather hav the love of humanity shed abroad in their hearts, than the love of God, for the love of God is nothing but a mass of treachery, hatred, and revenge, from one end of the God-book to the other.

I like Otto Wettstein's sentiments, but think he is a little off on "the survival of the fittest," for it really seems that it is the "survival" of the biggest selfish hog. There are many persons here who hav evoluted out of Christianity, but are moral and mental cowards; they dare not express their true sentiments for fear of the hatred of the good Christians "who love their enemies." If I had the wealth of a Gould or Vanderbilt, it would all go to propagate Freethought. I find that the thinkers are generally not very well fixed in this world's goods, and this givs the godly pious a large advantage in trying to get God into the Constitution. May truth, liberty, and justice prevail.

The Gospel of Divine Right.

NEW CAMBRIA, KAN., March 22, 1894

MR. EDITOR: The following was uttered in a speech by the Hon. David Overmyer, of Topeka, in the great quadrangular debate at Salina, Kan., in December, 1893.

PHOHIBITION RESTS ON DIVINE RIGHT.

The Prohibition convention of 1884, which nominated Governor St John for the presidency, declared that it "acknowledged the Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men, from whom the just powers of the government are derived."

The Declaration of Independence, which common consent regarded as the foundation of our entire political fabric, delares that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." The constitution of Kansas, Section 2 of the Bill of Rights, provides: "That all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority." Here is a direct issue between the two great theories of government, which hav struggled for the mastery from the dawn of history to the present day. That of our fathers and of the founders of Kansas, holding that all civil government is of man, resting on his consent and going so far, and so far only, as he may consent that it shall go; while that of the Prohibitionists and the absolutists of all ages holds that civil government is of God, and may, in its operations, go as far as those who know God's will and are his agents see fit to hav it go. It is a renewal of the old battle between jure divino upon the one hand, and popular consent upon the other. The adherents of the former, as in past ages, want no limitation placed upon man official, since, according to their view, he is God's servant, and many restrictions placed upon man individual, since he is the child of the devil and wholly depraved. The adherents of the latter want few restrictions upon man individual, seeing that they must be placed there by one as ignorant, as weak, as venal, as vicious and corrupt as himself; and many restrictions placed upon man official, lest, being only human, too much latitude, too much power, too much opportunity and temptation make of him, as they always do, a tyrant. Resolutions similar in import to the one quoted, hav passed each national convention of that party, and state and local conventions hav everywhere reiterated them.

The National Reform Association and Women's Christian Temperance Union are the chief pillars of the Prohibition party. Both of these organizations favor God in the Constitution and Christ in the state. Mr. Wier, Secretary of the Association, writing a short time ago upon the importance of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, to the Prohibition party, said: "I am convinced that the thing to do is to appeal for aid in carrying our Lord's cause through the Prohibition party, to the Women's Christian Temperance Union. . . . The Prohibition party cannot do without their aid, and they know it. It is the attitude of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union that is compelling the unwilling leaders of the party to indorse woman suffrage. . . . They hav insisted, thank God, and the party has yielded. If they insist on the clear, frank, full recognition of Christ's authority and law we will get it."

This same Mr. Wier, in reporting a convention of Pennsylvania Prohibitionists, says: "The acknowledgment of the authority of God in civil government, which, within the past year or two, has become the almost universal declaration, introducing the platform of the Prohibition party, was given, as usual, the first place. And to what does the party pledge itself in that declaration? Plainly this: "God being the source of governmental power, and the ruler who uses it being, therefore, his minister, they will choose for every office only such as fear God."

Much more to the same effect might be easily produced, but the foregoing will suffice; besides, no true Prohibitionist will deny that he considers God the source and author of civil government, and that consequently those who know or profess to know his will should hav the exclusiv control of the government. Indeed, Prohibition is not the ultimate aim, not the goal, of the Prohibition party. Prohibition is a means, not an end. The crusade for prohibition is simply the precursor, the avant courier of a general movement toward a union of church and state. Indeed, the Prohibition party would consider itself scandalized and slandered if any one should charge that it had no other purpose in view than the propagation of the hollow and vapid sophism of prohibition.

Any party that holds God is the source of mere human civil government, must necessarily hold that whosoever administers such government does so by divine right and divine appointment, for it would be absurd, as well as sacrilegious, to suppose that God would set up and establish a government and clothe it with such powers as were agreeable with his divine will, and that he would not, at the same time, so order that it should be administered by right and authority of the same divine origin, and by men endowed with celestial grace, and with a knowledge of the divine will, and an unswerving purpose to execute the divine will. The logical and inevitable result of such a doctin would be that only those who profess to be in possession of knowledge of the will of God would be eligible to office.

In plain English, the proposition of the Prohibitionist that God is the source and author of civil government means that all rule of man over man is jure divino, or rule by divine right. Thus we see that the Prohibitionists take as the starting-point of all their theories and purposes the old, exploded dogma of kingcraft and priestcraft, which has been discarded in every republic on earth, which is utterly antagonistic to the essential theory of all republics, which is that all power is inherent in the people, and that governments "derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." This dogma of divine right is the cardinal point in every despotism on earth. It supports every throne and protects every crown on earth. It has been invoked to sanctify every outrage that was ever perpetrated upon humanity, and it is eminently fitting that it should now become the bulwark of those whose ideas can be given effect only by the destruction of the primary postulates of free government and by the stamping out of individual liberty. Opposed to this theory of divine right stands the doctrin of popular consent. It was the doctrin of the fathers of this republic, their cloud by day, their pillar of fire by night, and it is the bedrock upon which are laid the foundations of the temple of liberty; remove it, and not only will the temple fall, but its very foundations will disappear. These two theories of government are so radically antagonistic to each other that they never can abide in peace in the same country. Between them there has been for ages a ceaseless warfare. The old theory of government by divine right has received and still receives the ardent indorsement of kings and the nobility and aristocracy, which support monarchy and despotism; of high churchmen, who believe in a church supported by the state; of absolutists, of the advocates of God in the Constitution, and the Prohibitionists.

The more modern doctrin of government by popular consent has been, and is, the doctrin of those devoted heroes and patriots who, while [many of them] recognizing the fatherhood of God, remember also the brotherhood of man, and deny that the common father of all ever placed brother over brother, irrespectiv of merit or qualification, and assert that the authority of man over man can hav no sanction except such as is derived from man's consent. The advocates of this sacred principle hav been the martyrs of our race. Their blood has flowed in torrents, their pathway through the world has been lighted by the fires and haunted by the terrors of persecution. Nor need we delude ourselvs with the idea that these United States will never hear the repulsiv voice or see the inhuman figure of jure divino. Its sappers and miners are here now, in the shape of the national amendment and Prohibition parties, summoning us to surrender our liberties in the name of God. No such party can solve social problems in a republic, for its solution means the destruction of the republic. . . .

"The Mossback" [a Democrat] points also to the suppression of liberty in the name of morality, and he has no faith in those hermaphrodites who seek to set aside the law of nature and the teachings of the fathers respecting the freedom of religion, upon the pretext of putting God in the Constitution and Christ in the state, nor of the political gospel propagandist whose platform is pure goodness, but whose actual purpose is self and power.

Mr. Editor, I think the above will be of very great interest to your readers at the present time. JOHN W. ABBOTT.

Some Questions and Their Answers.

OLD TACOMA, WASH., March 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You will greatly oblige me by answering through the columns of your valuable paper the following questions:

1st. What are the chief objects of the American Protectiv Association?

2d. Do they believe in the separation of church and state?

3d. Do they believe in our public schools being strictly non-sectarian?

Please state all you know concerning the above society. By so doing you will settle a great many arguments, and will also oblige Yours respectfully,

PETER WESSELS.

[We giv below, in answer to the first question of our correspondent, the objects of the American Protectiv Association as these objects are stated in their official organs:

1st. Nationality is not a bar to membership in the order. No man was asked where he was born.

2d. We interfere with no man's partisan politics.

3d. We attack no man's religion so long as he does not attempt to make his religion an element of political power.

4th. We unite to protect our country and its free institutions against the secret, intolerant, and aggressiv efforts that are persistently being set forth by a certain religio-political organization to control the government of the United States and destroy our blood-bought civil and religious liberty.

5th. We are in favor of preserving constitutional liberty and maintaining the government of the United States.

6th. We regard all religio-political organizations as the enemies of civil and religious liberty.

7th. It is, in our opinion, unwise and unsafe to appoint or to elect to civil, political, or military office men who owe supreme allegiance to any foreign king, potentate, or ecclesiastical powers.

8th. We are therefore maintaining the principle of one general unsectarian free school organization and will oppose all attempts to supplant it by any sectarian institution.

9th. We are opposed to all attempts, local or national, to use public funds for any sectarian purpose.

10th. We are in favor of laws taxing church property.

11th The opening of private and parochial schools, convents, and monasteries to public official inspection and placing on the same plan of morality and laws as Protestant institutions are.

12th. We are in favor of changing our immigration laws in such manner that they will protect our citizen laborers from the evil influences of cheap pauper and criminal labor which, through the instrumentality of European propagandist societies and in this country by the aid of strikers and the subtle influence of priests, are rapidly supplanting our free and educated American citizen in every line of industry.

13th. We believe there should be an educational qualification to electiv franchise that will require every American citizen to be Americanized.

14th. We are in favor of putting into office honest and true patriots who are best qualified to fill the position, regardless of political parties.

15th. We are willing to be governed by these principles in our future political action.

16th. Our mission is to awaken the people of America from their lethargy, indifference and over-confidence. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, yet the Protestants of this Republic hav ceased to be vigilant, and in conscious strength are intently chasing the almighty dollar or quietly dozing while we are swiftly drifting toward a more tremendous and terrible crisis than this country has yet known. Birthplace is not the sole test of American loyalty. We hav men born in several countries remote from this that are as loyal as any nativ. But they are not Romanists. American loyalty consists in devotion to our Constitution, laws, flag, and, above all, our public schools, for without intelligence this representativ republic will go to pieces. We oppose the teaching of perverted history in our schools and the mutilation of reference books to cover the infamies of the so-called church which is more political than religious. We are opposed to priests and prelates as such taking part in elections, and voting their laity as a unit in the interests of a foreign corporation, with intent to injure this nation and its institutions.

It will be seen at once that the foregoing statement of objects does not answer the questions of Mr. Wessels. From a very careful reading and study of the principles as stated, we are forced to the conclusion that the society named does not believe in the separation of church and state, and does not believe in an unsectarian public school system. An equally careful reading of the numerous American Protective Association papers that come to this office renders that conclusion a matter of positiv knowledge.

Take the school question to begin with: The American Protectiv Association's demand for "one general unsectarian free school organization" is, in substance, the same as that of the National Reformers and all other Protestants who are fighting for the retention of the Bible and religious services in the public schools. In the mouths of all these people "unsectarian" means orthodox Protestant—nothing more, nothing less. In all our extensiv reading of American Protective Association papers we hav not seen a single protest against religious teaching, as such, in the schools, and we hav read numerous demands for the retention of the Bible in those institutions of learning. We recently quoted one of the planks of the platform of the Kansas state organization of the American Prote tive Association. We reproduce it here:

We demand that the Bible, which has been the recognized text-book of our fathers, be maintained in our public schools as the rule and guide of all moral actions.

Where is the American Protectiv Association paper or lodge that has repudiated that demand? And where is the American Protectiv Association paper or lodge that has protested against the traitorous machinations of the National Reform Association and the Women's Christian Temperance Union? Do they denounce Sunday laws, state-paid chaplaincies, religious proclamations, theological inscriptions on our coins, etc., etc.?

The American Protectiv Associations do demand the taxation of church property. So much is to their credit, but it is to be observed that when they cite illustrations of the evils of exemption they hav their eyes on the $118,000,000 of Catholic church property to the obscuration of the $562,000,000 of Protestant church wealth. In short, the entire crusade seems to be an Orange, a Protestant, attack on the Catholics rather than a broad movement for the secularization of the state and the firm establishment of the foundation principles of equal religious liberty. We, as Freethinkers, can hav no part in the fights of sectarists. Already the new organization has stirred up the worst of religious passions and caused the shedding of blood. All this was unnecessary, and had the men who are responsible therefor in the beginning taken their position on really unsectarian ground they would hav had the hearty sympathy of all Freethinkers.

Let us glance very briefly at a few of the assertions made in the above-quoted declaration of principles. We hav not space for the examination of all. The numbers here correspond with those in the A. P. A. platform.

3d. But do you attack all men who attempt to make their religion an element of political power? In what instance hav you criticised Protestant schemes?

4th. Exactly; you want to protect our country against the invasiv acts of "a certain" organization. But there are a score of organizations which would "destroy our blood-bought civil and religious liberty." One of these is the Sabbath Union; another is the National Reform Association. Another is the American Protectiv Association, whose mission appears to be the teaching of religion in the schools.

6th. Is not the American Protectiv Association a "religio-political" organization?

7th. Of course there are many Catholics in office who are dangerous to free institutions, but is not the same true of office-holding members of the Methodist, Presbyterian, and other Protestant sects? Especially the Covenanters, who believe that all government is from God instead of from the people? Why do you wage a sectarian war against the Catholics alone? And why against all Catholics?

8th. But you do not do that. You insist upon Protestant, therefore sectarian, instruction in the schools.

9th. Why, then, do you not protest against chaplains in Congress? And against the use of public funds for the payment of teachers who devote a part of their time to religious instruction?

12th. Yet the best allies that the Secularists hav in their struggle to maintain our "blood-bought civil and religious liberty" are men of foreign birth.

13th. What does this mean? Is education something distinctly and peculiarly "American"? Or do you mean that all would-be citizens must understand the Constitution? If so, what are you going to do with nativ-born Americans who understand the Constitution so well that they want it amended so that it will be an instrument for the destruction of religious liberty?

14th. And of religious belief, you should add. That is our position.

16th. Yes, most of the Protestants are asleep, except such of them as are attempting to make this republic a theocracy, and another division which is trying to induce us to believe that religious proscription is a good thing. If "American loyalty" consists in what you say it does, and if you are Americans, why do you not make loyalty to the secular Constitution really the test of good citizenship and consequently oppose religious instruction in the schools, and activly antagonize Protestant as well as Catholic enemies of religious freedom? Why? And if you are opposed to religious instructors taking part, as such, in elections, why do you not denounce the action of the Protestant clergy of scores of cities in the United States, who hav, during the last two years, taken such an activ part, as ministers, in local and state politics?

Let us hav fair play; a purely secular government, religious liberty, freedom of speech and press, and, preliminary thereto, a candid discussion of differences, instead of hot-headed abuse and indiscriminate denunciation. Both Catholics and American Protective Association men can do much to promote courtesy in debate.—ED. T. S.]

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Across the Continent.

"The gobeluns will git ye, if you go alone," said one, when the editor of the Corner was getting ready to make the long journey from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

I laughed and said I would "watch out," but that I am not afraid of "gobeluns," anyway.

It was a drizzly, snowy afternoon, the 29th of March, 1894, when good-byes were spoken at the station in Fall River to the friends who, with my sister Bethia, had come to see me off.

Amid the snow and sleet the train bore me away toward Boston. Riding along, the rough stone walls, the boulders by the wayside, the long stretches of white-birches, the barren fields, the ponds, the hills and meadows and scrubby pines, the neat cottage homes, the pleasant valleys of New England never appeared half so lovely to my eyes as when I felt that I should not look upon them again for some time to come. People came into the cars at the various stations, and others left, but among them there were none that I knew, after Florence Davis left me at Somerset. My eyes were a bit moist as the old familiar places receded one by one, and my heart went back to the old home and the girl I left behind me.

Reaching Boston, I passed over to the Boston and Albany depot, where I was soon on board the train for Chicago. Finding my sleeper, it was not long before I retired, and the next morning was awakened by the porter saying to one of my neighbors: "Bound for Syracuse?" "Yes," was the sleepy reply. "Time you's up, then." The porters on these trains are good-natured and understand their business. The night before, when the sable individual who officiated in the elegantly upholstered Pullman sleeper was about to make my bed, he inquired, "Which way'll ye hav yer head lay?" "The regulation way," I answered. "Then it'll be with yer head toward de ingin." "Why so?" I asked. "Well, ye don't get de draft quite so much, an' de smoke, an' den de ingin kinder draws yer on to de land o' Nod." However, I changed my pillows during the night, and thought I felt better with feet toward the engin. I do not suppose it makes much difference, when one is tired, which way one lies when the "sweet restorer, balmy sleep," with gentle fingers presses down the weary eyelids. Before retiring, at the risk of being interviewed by a nightmare, or seeing all the "ghosties" of my grandfathers, both great and small, I partook of a piece of mince-pie that Bethia had arranged in a lunch basket with other good things. Neither nightmares nor grand fathers disturbed me, and I slept the sleep of the righteous.

From Buffalo, where I remembered there are pleasant friends and lovers of the Children's Corner, we traveled over the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railway to Chicago. Our way lay through a fine country where there are many vinyards. The glimpses of Lake Erie at various points are lovely and inspiring. We passed through Erie, Pa., and Ashtabula, O., and, at sunset, we were at Cleveland.

Arriving in Chicago in due time, Saturday morning, I was disappointed to learn that connections West could not be made until 5 P.M. The time was passed in writing letters and walking over familiar ground. Meeting Miss Donovan and Miss Higgins, with the latter I strolled and lunched until train-time, when I started for Kansas City. I did not know a single person on the well-filled train, and had never in my life been west of Chicago before. It did not take long, however, to make pleasant new acquaintances. Failing to secure a sleeper, I was obliged to sleep in the "chair car," as it is called. It was a new and novel experience. The chairs can be tipped backward, and are something after the fashion of a steamer lounging chair. It was an odd spectacle to see so many stretched in their chairs, like so many invalids in a large hospital ward. The conversation was bright and entertaining. There were low discussions on the tariff, religion, and several other subjects. A lady, perceiving that I was removing my boots, remarked, "Oh, I would not dare to take off my boots; I would be afraid of some accident." An old gentleman in front growled, "Why, you could go to sheol [only he didn't say sheol] just as well with your boots off!" "But you might burn your feet," said another. Once, when the train stopped a longer time than usual, the same old gentleman remarked that this was a good time to set a hen. I thought he must be a poultry fancier.

One of my neighbors was on his way to his ranch in Texas, and he gave many interesting points relating to that country and life on a ranch. We ate California pears together, while he told how people liv in that far-off state. One time he was sick, and the men doctored him. To a horse they usually giv a pound and a half of Epsom salts. He not being so big as a horse, there was mixed for him a half-pound of the same medicin in the form of paste! He did not take the whole, but enough to make him sicker than he cared to be. They do not take particular pains with housekeeping on a ranch. They do not mind putting the stewpan and contents right on the table, it being easier thus to help yourself, and less work. Once he had a tablecloth, and after a year or so one of his men washed it, and in the encounter with soap and water it came all to pieces. But when one is hungry, food tastes just as well without table linen, and the finest damask cannot produce appetite nor develop good digestion.

At Kansas City, the next morning, we parted company, this Texan friend and I, much to my regret, for he made the time less tedious than it might otherwise hav been.

Correspondence.

NORSE, TEX., Feb. 8. 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My uncle Theodore Colwick had the pleasure to meet you at the Freethinkers' Congress, and heard your lecture in Chicago. I hav read one of your books, "The Story Hour," which my cousin loaned me. I am twelve years of age, and go to school at Harmony school-house. I study "First Steps in Scientific Knowledge," besides other branches. I liv in a beautiful valley, thickly settled; when one is on a high hill or mountain it looks like a town; it is very hilly, and many beautiful streams flow through the vallev. My father is a doctor. I hav two sisters and one brother. I like to read the Children's Corner.

BOND, KAN., Feb. 14. 1894

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I see no letter from this place, I thought I would write one. Most of my friends at school belong to church, but I am glad that I can say I do not. Bond is growing a little at a time. A tannery has been built, but I don't think it will succeed. The Christians of Bond started a church, but they could not raise enough money to finish it. We hav had two dances at our house this winter. One was on Thomas Paine's birthday, and we had a fine time My aunt never forgets to celebrate his birthday. We hav had nice weather until lately—a hard rain followed by a heavy snow, so that we girls could not go to school. The snow was eighteen inches deep on the level.

If any of the readers of the Corner will write me, I will gladly answer.

Your Liberal friend, IDA HECOX.

[Our regards to the aunt who always remembers the birthday of Thomas Paine—ED C. C.]

BEACH CITY, O., Feb. 11, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I would like to know about that Liberal Correspondence Club. I would like to join, for I know it would do us children good. I am still a Freethinker and shall always be one until I die. I never knew what a Liberal was until I came down here to work for Albert Zimmerman. He is a strong, good, honest, and upright man. He is going to giv me a piece of land and I can put out whatever I want to. I think I will put out some strawberries, cabbage, sweet corn, potatoes, and onions. I can hav all the money that I get for them. Then he is going to pay me for the work that I do. I am going to try to get four subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and then I will get as a premium "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." I know it will be a great book. A preacher, G. K. Little, from Missouri, is holding revival meetings here; one woman and a man, also, hav gone wild, and they had to take her away. The woman's husband said he would "fix" the preacher if he ever came to his house. There are a number of Liberal-minded people here, but they are afraid to speak out.

FRANK GROSSWILLER.

[A bright lad is Frank Grosswiller, and we hope he will secure the four new subscribers and thus get the premium offered—Mr. Putnam's great work, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." If there were more men like Mr. Albert Zimmerman, this world would be the better for it.—ED. C. C.]

PORTLAND, OR., Feb. 20. 1894.

SUSAN H. WIXON—My Dear Friend: Once again mv thoughts revert to the beloved Corner and its many friends. It has been over three years since I wrote you. During this time I hav watched with interest the advancement of the great cause of human Liberty, and right earnestly hav I endeavored to lend my mite of strength toward the accomplishment of that end for which we all so ardently hope and labor—Universal Mental Liberty.

Too much cannot be said in praise of your work and the influence of the Corner on the minds of the young. You are sowing seed in fertil soil and the harvest will be bountiful. You are pouring noble thoughts into the minds that are the most susceptible to influence and strengthening the most important part of the structure of human intelligence. It was a wise thought of the Catholic teacher who said: "Giv me the training and teaching of the child until he is seven years of age and he will never depart from the faith;" for true it is that in the vast majority of cases the early training of a child determins his course through life. It is the young, then, that we should reach; it is the little boy and girl we should snatch from under the lash of superstitious authority, either of God or man, and rear them in the pure, unpolluted atmosphere of nature's freedom.

With the knowledge of this fact pressing heavily upon us, and the untiring efforts of the church to control the rising generation both while in the church and in the school, demanding that we take immediate steps toward staving this influence in its deadly march, the Liberals of this city hav organized a Secular Sunday School, an account of which no doubt many of my readers hav seen in connection with the Secular Church of Portland. The Oregon State Secular Union has been in existence several years, but no truly permanent work can be said to hav been accomplished until the organization of the Secular Church in this city. Katie Kehm Smith, our untiring worker in the field of reform, believing that Liberals must adopt the plan which the church has proven to be so successful—that is, form regular churches or societies with stationed lecturers, whose work it must be to deliver regular lectures, and organize Sundayschools in connection with them, if they would reap the greatest and earliest harvests—took it upon herself to organize a Secular church in the priest-ridden city of Portland, Jan. 29, 1893. Her labors are being richly rewarded, for not only has the church enrolled upon its membership list nearly two hundred names, but it has been the means of the organization of churches elsewhere which also hav their Sunday-schools and are doing splendid work.

Liberals hav long been entertaining the delusiv idea that it is entirelv illiberal to be obliged to support a society or church; that as Liberals we should each go our own way, neither asking nor demanding, disorganized, scattered, few knowing who or where their friends are, and yet all the while complaining because Liberalism is not advancing as rapidly as they would like to see it. Now, it is just as reasonable to look for success in this way as it would be to send out an army of untrained, disorganized men to meet the solid, disciplined ranks of the foe and expect them to gain a victory.

I would like to tell you just how our Sunday-school is conducted, but space forbids me to say more than that we hav a good attendance every Sunday, and that we are teaching the little ones plain common-sense and unvarnished truths, and endeavoring to inculcate in them such principles of love and justice toward humanity as will enable them to forever rise above the false, cruel, superstitious creeds which teach men to do the right through fear of punishment or for the sake of reward, and that they can be pure and happv saints while the great majority of their fellow-beings suffer eternally the torments of the damned.

We are also starting a museum and library with fair prospects for success. We wish to collect specimens of all sorts from nature's boundless fields, and make this museum a place where one may go and study the true and beautiful of life. Any specimens will be gladly received from friends. Quite a number hav responded to our advertisment in the Freethought papers, and to them I desire to extend our hearty thanks.

Trusting that health and opportunity may permit you to carry on your good work for many years to come, and that the little ones who correspond with you and read your paper may bear in mind that each and all can do something for the great cause of human advancement by endeavoring to become grand and useful men and women, I remain,

Yours for physical and mental freedom,

NETTIE A. OLDS.

[Thanks for the above good letter, and best of wishes for the success of a great and noble work.—ED. C. C.]

PROSE-POEMS AND SELECTIONS.
Fifth edition, enlarged and revised. A handsome quarto, containing 333 pages. This is, beyond question, the cheapest and most elegant volume in Liberal literature. Its mechanical finish is worthy of its intrinsic excellence. No expense has been spared to make it the thing of beauty it is. The type is large and clear, the paper heavy, highly calendered, and richly tinted, the presswork faultless, and the binding as perfect as the best materials and skill can make it.
As to the contents, it is enough to say that they include all of the choicest utterances of the greatest writer on the topics treated that has ever lived.
Those who have not the good fortune to own all of Mr. Ingersoll's published works, will have in this book of selections many bright samples of his lofty thought, his matchless eloquence, his wonderful imagery, and his epigrammatic and poetic power. The collection includes all of the "Tributes" that have become famous in literature—notably those to his brother E. C. Ingersoll, Lincoln, Grant, Beecher, Conkling, Courtlandt M. Palmer, Mary Fiske, Elizur Wright; his peerless monographs on "The Vision of War," Love, Liberty, Art and Morality, Science, Nature, The Imagination, Decoration Day Oration, What is Poetry, Music of Wagner, Origin and Destiny, "Leaves of Grass," and on the great heroes of intellectual Liberty. Besides these are innumerable gems taken here and there from the orations, speeches, arguments, toasts, lectures, letters, interviews, and day by day conversations of the author.
The book is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac-simile, has been prepared especially for it. In the more elegant styles of binding it is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.
PRICES.—In cloth, beveled boards, gilt edges, $2.50; in half morocco, gilt edges, $5; in half calf, mottled edges, library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible finish, $9.

Just Out.—25 Cents—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.
We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about

1300 MINISTERS HAVE BEEN GUILTY

of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.
Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sorts of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria, the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets, Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town, the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portuguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America, Materials of Human History

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History, Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around, and the stay-at-home to see where he went.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

The Creation of God.

By DR. JACOB HARTMANN.

An explanation of the origin of the God Idea, and the mental processes that led to the formation of idols and the worship of them. From the time of Terah's apostasy, Abraham's reformation and his banishment for heresy and blasphemy against the Chaldean idols, to Christ's coming, the principal characters are analyzed and shown to be human, by thought and deed. It is made plain that the peculiar phraseology, cant sayings, subterfuges, miracles, wonder-workings, and supernatural padding are the proper offspring of the then existing barbarism, ignorance, and superstition, constituting the peculiar politics of the day.

THE POLITICAL ASPECTS OF THE LABOR PROBLEM. By J. W. Sullivan. Price, 10 cent.

Mr. Sullivan, who is the leading American expositor and advocate of the initiativ and referendum, maintains that trades unions hav greatly benefited labor; that they are purely democratic in their character; that poverty has been generally intensified during the past forty years, and that conventional solutions of the labor problem are inefficacious. Mr. Sullivan thinks that the People's party, if wisely guided, will be useful to organized labor. In the report of the debate which followed the lecture we find some remarks of Dr. Lewis G. Janes. He said that recent decisions of courts in railroad cases recalled the fact that the interstate commerce laws were passed in the avowed interest of labor. These decisions show that the legal sword cuts both ways. The inference is that governmental interference is dangerous and impolitic. T. B. Wakeman said that all civilization now is capitalism. Dr. Robert G. Eccles denied that economic onditions had changed unfavorably from what they were fifty years ago. In fact, there has been decided improvement

THE NEW REPUBLIC—SCHEME TO ABOLISH POVERTY. New York: New Era Publishing Company, 15 Vandewater street. Price, 25 cents.

This is one of the cure-alls. Warranted to revolutionize society in double-quick time. All to be done by a "plan." The writer of it thinks that the year 1900 will see the beginning of the end. These marvelous transformations are to be accomplished by ignoring such insignificant trifles as human nature, fixity of type, and evolution. This theorist has no idea that anything grows; he is sure that all things, desires, institutions, are made, per pattern.

WOMAN: FOUR CENTURIES OF PROGRESS. By Susan H. Wixon. Price, 10 cents.

This is one of the best books for its price that I hav yet seen on the equality of sex.

It is bright, forcible, strong, and clear in its statements.

It shows the slow, sure, and steady progress of the elevation of woman, despite the enormous odds against her in the form of church and state.

It is the most scathing of denunciations of Paul and his preaching! Read, for instance: "If ever there was an ingeniously woven plot, it is that of 'The Fall of Man' with Paul of Tarsus for its mouthpiece

"His words on the subject of women are deadly poison. 'She was first in the transgression,' said priestly Paul, 'therefore keep her in subjection.' 'She shall not teach. She must not usurp authority over the man.' 'She must obey her husband' whatever he may command, and she must keep silence.' Why? Well, this is the reason given. 'She was first deceived and not Adam!' Realizing that she might desire to ask a question or two, might wish for some education, her schooling is provided for in this way by the sainted Paul. She can go home and ask her husband! Can anyone wonder that women, married women especially, were such absolute illiterates when they had such ignorant instructors as the husbands of the past?

"Next to Paul the old church-fathers come in for their share in oppressing and wronging their mothers, wives, and daughters. 'The canon law decreed that woman was so vile, that while the Lord's Supper might be allowed her, yet she should not receive it in her naked hands.'

"It was not till the tenth century that a Christian wife of a Christian husband was allowed to eat at the same table with her husband."

As you read page after page you wonder if it can possibly be that all this is true. Yet, as you consider the condition of woman in the most enlightened countries of to-day, and commence enumerating her wrongs and oppressions, you cease to marvel, and you think to yourself how the coming race will look back upon us and wonder still more at our blindness and injustice than we now wonder at that of the past.

My first thought as I read the lecture was, I wish I had ten thousand copies for free distribution. I looked at my one little ten-cent volume and wondered where I could place it first, and who should hav it next, and I've not even yet laid out all the plans I've conceived of for its missionary work.

I hope every woman who reads this will secure a copy at once, and as many more as she feels able to do, and make them count for woman's emancipation and perfect equality with man, and probably her superiority to him.

"Then woman's shall not be a separate life;
With all man's greatness her own soul is rife;
Identical in being, power, and sway,
She shall shine on into the perfect day;
In mild equality and tender strength;
Her slavery's kingdom overthrown at length;
And not by beauty flashing on the sense,
Shall she attain degrading eminence;
But by her splendid reason, lofty aim,
Work manifold, and duty's kindling flame
Shall make her love a dower of heavenly bliss,
Not merely sparkling pleasure, passion's kiss;
But hero's fervor, conscience' beauteous light,
Impulse sublime and inspiration bright;
Yes, yes, there shall be progress, splendor, joy,
Man's hidden life shall outward wrong destroy." —Putnam's Prometheus.

ELMINA D. SLENKER.

SIXTH SPECIAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR. The Phosphate Industry of the United States. By Carroll D. Wright. Washington: Government Printing Office.

Go to the Devil.

Should a seeker for truth endeavor to find
A cause for the ills that are cursing mankind,
And seek for the cause of the first cause of evil,
Or why God made a hell or created a devil;
If his questions by all are laid on the shelf,
He had better then go to the devil himself;
Yes, if from all sources he got no reply,
Let him go to the devil and ask him why.

But in seeking for truth it is nothing but civil
To apply to the Lord as well as the devil.
Go to him, ye seeker; let truth make you brave,
But you'll find that the Lord is as mute as the grave.
Then inquire of his priests and see if they can Giv a cause for the ills that fall upon man.
They will roll up their eyes and dodge it most sly,
So then go to the devil and ask him why.

Now some may say it is very uncivil
To tell anybody to go to the devil;
Yet 'tis honest to giv to the devil his due,
And nothing but right his case to review;
And that man is but a coward, forsooth,
Who'd be scared by the devil from seeking the truth.
So you must, if you wish these things to untie,
Go straight to the devil and ask him why.

The scriptures inform us that after the fall
The devil was doomed on his belly to crawl.
But as further we read in that book, we find out
He was up on his legs and walking about.
And John, among others, writes wonderful things—
How the devil was once ornamented with wings,
How he improved, so you better apply
To the devil himself and ask him why.

So the devil may not be as black as he's painted.
And men may be worse who in church hav been sainted.
By his power no martyrs in bonfires hav glowed,
While for God and his cause blood in rivers has flowed.
So hear him ere judging which side to believe,
Nor heed those who say he will only deceive,
For the Bible shows plainly he ne'er told a lie,
So go to the devil and question him why.

What, go to the devil? Now, where does he dwell?
His present headquarters, priests tell us, is hell.
Where in hell is the devil? You're in the same plight,
For science has wafted them both out of sight.
With hell-fire extinguished and old Satan dead,
Our only resort for an answer is fled,
And into first causes 'tis useless to pry,
Or go to the devil to question him why.

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knee."

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," COL. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt boveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

Miss Wixon has taken as her mottoes in writing this beautiful book of 292 pages—which she has dedicated to the memory of her father and mother—these sentences from the works of a great synthetic philosopher and a gifted liberal minister:

As with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not.—Herbert Spencer.

Living is an Art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the Arts.—Thomas Starr King.

Right Living" is well bound in cloth and printed on good paper.

RELIGION A CURSE,
RELIGION A DISEASE,
RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

Gems of Thought.

God's promis is good for nothing unless indorsed by man.—Investigator.

Do not let matters of sentiment throw your head out of plumb.—Galveston News.

Before attacking an abuse we should see if we can ruin its foundations.—Chamfort and Vauvenargues.

Darwin did more for mankind than if he had built a thousand hospitals. Voltaire did more than if he had built a thousand asylums for the insane; he will prevent thousands from going insane.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

But bolder they who first offcast
Their moorings from the habitable past
And ventured chartless on the sea
Of storm-engendering liberty.
—President Eliot on the Peristyle of the Columbian Exposition.

The greatest good of a people is their liberty. Liberty is to the collectiv body what health is to every individual body. Without health no pleasure can be tasted by man; without liberty, no happiness can be enjoyed by society.—Bolingbroke.

Each soul, weak or strong, must judge, must refute, must suffer, for himself. Many a one lacks the courage for this awful responsibility. To such, the church of Rome opens her arms to welcome that soul and take his conscience into her keeping.—Marshall E. Smith.

Shelley misunderstood, ignored, reviled, despised, rejected, persecuted during his life, now, two generations after his absorption into the eternal silence, is beginning to be accepted at his true worth by mankind, whose benefactor he was. The battle provoked by Whitman's attack upon cherished error has not yet subsided, but when the smoke of the conflict shall thin and roll away, humanity shall behold, at first dimly through the mist and then ever clearer and more clear, his godlike face and figure by the side of his younger brother, and together they, the Ithuriel and Prometheus of the modern world, shall "beacon from the abode where the eternal are."—Isaac Hull Platt.

Every pulpit is overloaded with maxim. The threshold of the college is golden with ancient counsel. The statesman acknowledges that he must serve the people. Are we satisfied with the laggard and niggardly professions of service? What is honest? What will serve the public? Interpretation read into act is the vein of life-blood. Admirable, in this light, are man and woman who utter a philoscphy which they will apply to the life they share. The dream is vital. It foreruns. But with quick step fulfillment must follow and overtake. What do legislators mean by serving the people? May they not betray, even while the profession of service is on their lips?—Horace L. Traubel.

We are told that the press purifies public opinion. Do we giv public opinion a wholesome training, and stimulate real thought? What is called ruling public opinion often means mere subserviency to public opinion. There is nothing more flattering than an echo. To say to-day what every one will say to-morrow is often the one thing aimed at by journalists. A young friend of mine went to a professor of journalism; all the professor's idea of a journalist was the ability to spin words out of intellectual vacuity. Ten men can write now for every one man who could a few years ago. But are there ten times as many people who think for themselvs, and speak at first hand? A journalist should bear in mind that he should never write anonymously what he would be afraid to state openly. Carlyle once stated that modern journalism was just so much ditch-work. A good many people seek to enlighten the world who are mere impostors. —Leslie Stephen.

A man is, unto himself, the mean of his religion, the measure of his deity. Except built upon ignorance and supported by tyranny, there can be no such thing as a national religion, or even a religion common in all essentials to any considerable community of individuals. I am religious, but I hav never come in contact with anyone whose creed corresponded exactly with my own, for the reason that I am myself and not someone else. If a man differ so much from his neighbors that he must be specially measured for his garments, still more must he be specially measured for his religion; for the unlikeness in physique between one man and another is not nearly so obvious and pronounced as is the unlikeness in psychique. This as far as mere creed or intellectual belief is concerned. But religion does not rest wholly, or even mainly, upon the intellectual. And, widely though men differ in intellectual, still more widely do they differ in moral and emotional, qualities; and it is in the soil of these that religion has its roots.—Saladin.

Apropos of the fascinations of golf, I heard the other day of a Scotchman, a retired minister of the kirk, who was deploring the tendency of the game to become a ruling passion, and also to induce bad language. "I don't see what's the use of my being vaccinated again," said Tommy, baring his arm reluctantly for the doctor. "The human body changes every seven years, Tommy," replied his mother. "You are eleven years old now. You were in your fourth year when you were vaccinated first, and it has run out." "Well, I was baptized when I was a baby. Has that run out, too?"—Chicago Tribune.

A worthy colored divine, after preaching a very "movin' sermon," had given out the hymn and was beseeching the unrepentant to turn from the error of their way while the congregation sang:

"While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return."

Just as the mellow voices of the dusky worshipers were quivering on the second line a particularly tough and unregenerate Sambo, with chicken feathers in his hair, rose and approached the altar. The parson stopped in his exhortation, paralyzed with astonishment; then, suddenly finding voice, as if by inspiration, he shouted: "Blessed be de Lawd! Blow out de lamp!" —Memphis Commercial.

Dr. Edward Bedloe came over from Philadelphia one night recently, and was entertaining a choice group of friends with tales of the far East. In the edge of the group sat a man from Pennsylvania, who had come over from Pottsville on some government business. He was all ears and eagerness. His name was Strauss. Finally the restraint became too intense, and he broke loose: "Toctor," said he, "what is dot new relichun I heers off apout China? My wife has got it ferry bad, und I don'd understand it." "Tell me the name," said Bedloe. "Is it Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Shintoism, Tauism, Confucianism, or what?" "No, it is no isms, but der name is like a tramp's migrashun of der soul, aind it?" "Oh, you doubtless mean transmigration of the soul." "Yah, dot's it. Yust dell me about dot." "Certainly. Transmigration of the soul is a very pretty poetic doctrin of metempsychosis, which our friends of the Theosophical Society hav borrowed from the far East"—— "Here, here, doctor, tell me vot dot means, so I can undershtand what you vas talking aboud." "All right—I will tell you in plain language. Take yourself, for instance. You liv to the allotted age of threescore years and ten, and then you pass away. Your soul goes into the body of a bird—a canary, we'll say—and from your gilded cage you fill a lady's boudoir with melody, living a life of luxury and fed from the dainty fingers of beauty"—— "Oh, dot is peautiful, peautiful! I like dot." "And then you die again, and your soul goes into a lovely flower in a garden, and you fill the air with fragrance and delight the eye with your exquisit color and delicacy of petals"—— "Ah, dot is fine. I like dot relichun." "As I was saying, when you interrupted me, you liv the life of a flower, until one day a donkey gets into the garden, and, attracted by your loveliness, he eats you, and your soul passes into the donkey"—— "Yah, yah." ——"When some former acquaintance comes along, strokes your long ears and says: 'Why, Strauss, is it you? How little you hav changed!'"—Washington Post.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible: and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

CONWAY'S EDITION

OF

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

COLLECTED, EDITED, AND CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED

By MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY.

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," "Omitted Chapters of History Disclosed in the Life and Papers of Edmund Randolph," etc.

Four Volumes, Royal Octavo, Gilt Tops, Uniform with the Editor's "Life of Paine" Price per Volume, $2.50.

An edition of one hundred and fifty numbered copies bound in half leather, gilt tops, uniform with the limited editions of "The Writings of Washington," "The Writings of Jefferson," etc. Price, per volume, $4.

For the general reader the $3 edition of Paine's works is sufficient, as it contains all of his writings upon which his fame substantially rests. But for those who desire to go deeper into the subject of the man and polemic we can most unreservedly commend the "Life of Paine" by Mr. Conway, and this edition of Paine's works edited by him It is the fullest that we are likely to have, and the student of history, and particularly the writer, should have it upon his shelves.

The work will consist of four volumes, and will be arranged chronologically. The cause of America, as Paine said, made him an author, and the first volume will cover the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1774. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay, and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvani Magazine; these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The second volume will consist mainly of the "Rights of Man," and pamphlets relating to English politics, but will also contain certain papers on French affairs.

The third and fourth volumes will consist mainly of Paine's religious writings, but will also contain some essays relating to American affairs, written in his last years. At the close will be given Paine's poems.

The first volume is now ready for delivery, and the others will follow soon. Orders for the whole set will be taken and filled as the volumes appear, or the volumes can be purchased separately. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnific nt Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.
Descartes.	Kepler.	Pestalozzi.	Cervantes.	Goethe.	French Salon.	Bradlaugh.	Harriet Martineau.
Locke.	Da Vinci.	Froebel.	Marlowe.	George Sand.	French Revolution.	Garrison.	Frances Wright.

Hobbs.	Humboldt.	Spencer.	Gibbon.	Victor Hugo.	Thomas Paine.	Parker.	Ernestine L Rose.
Kant.	Lyell.	Owen.	Burns.	Emerson.	Jefferson.	Sumner.	Lydia Maria Child.
Hamilton.	Darwin.	Holyoake.	Shelley.	Heine.	Mazzinni.	Lincoln.	Margaret Fuller.
Comte.	Tyndall.	Haeckel.	Byron.	Thoreau.	Bentham.	Bakounine.	Elizabeth Cady Stanton.
Büchner.	Huxley.	Girard	Pushkin.	Whitman.	Mill.	Warren.	Susan B. Anthony.
Feuerbach.		Lick.	Tchernychewsky.	Ingersoll.	Garabaldi.	Petrofsky.	Matilda Joslyn Gage.
					Heinzen.		Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,

T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

Schemes of the Sunday Tyrants.

In the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER Mr. Putnam said that the question of church taxation was the most important issue for American Liberals. Without any desire to belittle the importance of that demand, we cannot help thinking that the encroachments of the Sunday meddlers and despots constitute a still more deadly menace to the liberties and rights of our people than does the exemption of church property from taxation, outrageous as is the latter. And we think that Mr. Putnam will heartily agree with us after reading the text of the Kyle national Sunday Rest bill. But this is not material; the Liberals of the country can fight against both evils. In fact, they must fight; there is no escape from the conflict. The enemy has chosen the battle-ground, and there we must meet him. And it is no mere skirmish which will follow the aligning of the respectiv forces of liberty and tyranny.

Two Sunday bills are now pending in Congress. The first was introduced on February 15th in the Senate, by Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. On March 11th Representativ Morse, of Massachusetts, introduced the same bill in the House, where it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. We printed this bill in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 10th, and reproduce it here:

"A bill to protect the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, as a day of rest and worship in the District of Columbia."

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representativs of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, That, on the first day of the week, known as the Lord's day, set apart by general consent in accordance with divine appointment as a day of rest and worship, it shall be unlawful to perform any labor, except works of necessity and mercy and work by those who religiously observe Saturday, it performed in such a way as not to involve or disturb others; also to open places of business or traffic, except in the case of drug stores for the dispensing of medicins; also to make contracts or transact other commercial business; also to engage in noisy amusements or amusements for gain, or entertainments for which admittance fees are charged, also to join in public processions, except funerals, which last shall not use music; also to perform any court service, except in connection with arrests of criminals and service of process to prevent fraud.

"Sec. 2. That the penalty for violating any provision of this act shall be a fine of not less than $10 for the first offense; for second or subsequent offenses a fine not exceeding $50, and imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than thirty days, and one year's forfeiture of license, if any is held by the offender or his employer."

This is Senate Bill No. 1628 and House Bill No. 6215. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor consists of Senators James H. Kyle, South Dakota (chairman); James Z. George, Mississippi; Eppa Hunton, Virginia; Donelson Caffery, Louisiana; Edward Murphy, Jr., New York; Joseph M. Carey, Wyoming; William D. Washburn, Minnesota; Henry Cabot Lodge, Massachusetts; George C. Perkins, California. The House Committee on the District of Columbia is composed of these members: John T. Heard, Missouri (chairman): J. D. Richardson, Tennessee; Harry Welles Rusk, Maryland; J. E. Cobb, Alabama; E. E. Meredith, Virginia; C. A. Cadmus, New Jersey; J. Abbott, Texas; G, W. Cooper, Indiana; C. M. Cooper, Florida; A. C. Harmer, Pennsylvania; P. S. Post, Illinois; William Cogswell, Massachusetts; J. J. Belden, New York; J. W. Babcock, Wisconsin.

The second bill was introduced by Senator Kyle of South Dakota on April 12th, and was reported to the Committee on Education and Labor. Following is the full text of the infamous measure:

"A bill for Sunday rest.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representativs of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no person or corporation or agent, servant, or employee of any person or corporation shall perform or authorize to be performed any secular work, labor, or business to the disturbance of others, works of necessity and mercy and humanity excepted; nor shall any person engage in any play, game, or amusement or recreation to the disturbance of others on the first day of the week, commonly known as the Lord's day, or during any part thereof, in any territory, district, vessel, or place subject to the exclusiv jurisdiction of the United States; nor shall it be lawful for any person or corporation to receive pay for labor or service performed or rendered in violation of this section.

"Sec. 2. That no mails or mail matter shall hereafter be transported in time of peace over any land postal route, nor shall any mail matter be collected, assorted, handled, or delivered during any part of the first day of the week: Provided, That whenever any letter shall relate to a work of necessity or mercy, or shall concern the health, life, or decease of any person, and the fact shall be plainly stated upon the face of the envelope containing the same, the postmaster-general shall provide for the transportation of such letter or letters in packages separate from other mail matter, and shall make regulations for the delivery thereof, the same having been received at its place of destination before the said first day of the week, during such limited portion of the day as shall best suit the public convenience and least interfere with the due observance of the day as one of worship and rest: And provided further, That when there shall hav been an interruption in the due and regular transmission of the mails, it shall be lawful to so far examin the same when delivered as to ascertain if there be such matter therein for lawful delivery on the first day of the week.

"Sec. 3. That the prosecution of commerce between the states and with the Indian tribes, the same not being work of necessity, mercy, or humanity, by the transportation of persons or property by land or water in such way as to interfere with or disturb the people in the enjoyment of the first day of the week, or any portion thereof, as a day of rest from labor, the same not being labor of necessity, mercy, or humanity, or its observance as a day of religious worship, is hereby prohibited, and any person or corporation, or the agent, servant, or employee of any person or corporation who shall wilfully violate this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than one thousand dollars, and no service performed in the prosecution of such prohibited commerce shall be lawful, nor shall any compensation be recoverable or paid for the same.

"Sec. 4. That all military and naval drills, musters, and parades, not in time of activ service or immediate preparation therefor, of soldiers, sailors, marines, or cadets of the United States on the first day of the week, except assemblies for the due and orderly observance of religious worship, are hereby prohibited, nor shall any unnecessary labor be performed or permitted in the military or naval service of the United States on the Lord's day.

"Sec. 5. That it shall be unlawful to pay or to receive payment or wages in any manner for service rendered or for labor performed or for the transportation of persons or property in violation of the provisions of this act, nor shall any action lie for the recovery thereof, and when so paid, whether in advance or otherwise, the same may be recovered back by whoever shall first sue for the same.

"Sec. 6. That labor or service performed and rendered on the first day of the week in consequence of accident, disaster, or unavoidable delays in making the regular connections upon postal routes and routes of travel and transportation, the preservation of perishable and exposed property, and the regular and necessary transportation and delivery of articles of food in condition for healthy use, and such trausportation for short distances from one state, district, or territory into another state, district, or territory as by local laws shall be declared to be necessary for the public good, shall not be deemed violations of this act, but the same shall be construed, so far as possible, to secure to the whole people rest from toil during the first day of the week, their mental and moral culture, and the religious observance of the Sabbath day."

This is Senate bill No. 1890.

In coming issues of THE TRUTH SEEKER we shall take up and dissect this bill section by section, showing its unconstitutionality, its needlessness, its tyranny, and the practical union of church and state which its passage would effect. At present we wish chiefly to call attention to the fact that it has been introduced and to urge upon the Freethinkers of the United States immediate, unanimous, determined, and unremitting action to defeat it, and to defeat it so completely that it will be buried beyond hope of resurrection.

It will be noticed that while the District of Columbia bill is, by its title, avowedly designed to protect Sunday as a day of rest and worship, the Kyle bill comes under the hypocritical mask of "rest," although it reveals its real character unmistakably in the last clause, in which it is declared that the law is to be construed so as to secure "the religious observance of the Sabbath day." Here it is assumed that Sunday is the Sabbath, Congress being asked to decide a long-standing theological dispute. Who will dare say afterward, if this bill becomes a law, that Congress has not enacted religious legislation? The Gallinger-Morse bill also assumes the truth of a theological dogma. It says that Sunday is divinely appointed as a day of rest and worship. If Congress may rightfully do this much, why may it not go a little further and reenact the Thirty-Nine Articles, the Westminster Confession of Faith, or the Nicene Creed?

Colonel Ingersoll may be interested to know that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District has indorsed the Kyle bill, on the ground that under it the Ingersoll Sunday evening lectures may be stopped.

The Gallinger-Morse bill was referred to the Commissioners of the District for examination and consideration, and they handed it over to the attorney for the District, Mr. S. T. Thomas, who has made his report. The attorney refers to old-time Sunday laws, including some of those in force in England, and remarks that in most of the states of the Union there is legislation on the subject, "following, as a rule, the lines of the general act of 29th Charles II." He speaks of the Massachusetts law on Sunday traveling, and observes that in several states the number of Sunday trains on railways is limited by statute. He also alludes to the Pennsylvania law and its wide scope. Next, he summarizes the Sunday laws now in force in the District, which are the provisions of the Maryland acts of 1723 and 1780, and the act of Congress of July 29, 1892. This last is for the preservation of the public peace and order, and provides for the punishment of the disturbers of a religious congregation. Of course this end is legitimate, but to secure it no special law for Sunday is required, and neither should a congregation be held to be "disturbed" by the pursuit of the ordinary vocations and avocations of the people on Sunday any more than on any other day. More than this—no law should be framed for the protection of "religious" congregations. All public assemblages should share in the protection given by the state or city.

Attorney Thomas says further that the police regulations of the District make it unlawful to sell newspapers after 10:30 A.M. of Sunday, and also require barber shops to be kept closed on that day. From all we hav quoted it would appear that the Sunday laws of the District need to be liberalized rather than to receive a new infusion of bigotry and proscription. In addition to the statutes already mentioned, there is a law of Congress approved March 3, 1893, regulating the sale of liquor on Sunday. Mr. Thomas thinks that there is no need for additional Sunday legislation—saying that the number of arrests on Sunday are thirty per cent less than on other days. He particularly objects to the clauses in the Gallinger-Morse bill against entertainments and prohibiting music in funeral processions. But after all this he finds it necessary to "cast an anchor to windward," and this is the way he tries to get on the good side of the clerics:

"Sunday laws are not based on the idea that it is immoral or irreligious to labor on the Sabbath day, but on grounds of public charity, in order to protect all persons from the physical and moral debasement which comes from uninterrupted labor. Such laws are merciful and beneficial, especially to the poor and dependent, to laborers and mechanics in factories, workshops, and the heated rooms and close quarters of great cities. The keeping one day in seven as a time of relaxation and reflection, as well as for public worship, is deemed to be of admirable service to the state. It enables the industrious workman to pursue his occupation in the ensuing week with renewed vigor and cheerfulness. From the examination I hav been able to giv the subject I do not conceive the necessity for the enactment of the bill in question. All laws should be founded on necessity. If, however, the commissioners, on mature reflection, should be of opinion that this District stands in need of further moral legislation, the present bill appears to be in good form, and they might favorably recommend it to Congress for enactment."

After having declared that there is no need for further Sunday legislation in the District, this "adviser" of the commissioners has not the moral backbone to unreservedly tell them that they should not recommend the bill to Congress. On the contrary, he intimates that they would do well to ask for its passage, for it is in "good form!" Then look at his plea for Sunday laws! "Sunday laws are not based on the idea that it is immoral or irreligious to labor" on Sunday, he says. But that is just what they are based on, and the very bill he is talking about is distinctly said to be for the protection of "worship." Of course we know that the word "protection" should be "promote," for general laws, applicable to all days alike, are ample for the protection of worship. He indulges in the ordinary cant about "rest" and the "laborer." These are simply the mask-words of the theologians. Adequate rest for all can easily be secured without interfering with the Sunday liberty of the people. By dividing workmen into relays all can get one day's rest in seven, or even more, without resort to religious laws. The Leavenworth (Kansas) Standard, commenting upon our previous arguments touching this matter, well and tersely says: "This arrangement provides in fact all that is asked for and goes further, and accomplishes a still greater good, as it will giv employment to one-seventh more men in the United States, probably somewhere near a quarter of a million [on railroads]. It remains to be seen whether the advocates [of Sunday laws] are honest or dishonest. If honest they will accept the amendment. If dishonest tricksters and frauds they will refuse to do so."

When Mr. Thomas weeps for the poor laborers in the "heated rooms and close quarters of large cities," he forgets that they are the ones who would suffer most severely from a Sunday law which should stop the running of Sunday trains and street cars. Sunday is the only day in which most of them can get into the country or to the seashore. No one disputes the fact that the laborer pursues his occupation with renewed vigor and cheerfulness after he rests, but we fail to see that this calls for a law compelling him to sleep at night, or that it necessitates that all workmen rest at the same time. Either conclusion would be ridiculous.

It is evident that the attorney for the District of Columbia was embarrassed by the problem presented to him, which was to so decide as to please both the friends and foes of Sunday laws. Sunday statutes are not enacted to enforce morality, he avers. Then he pleads for them in order to giv the laborer a day of rest (which he can hav without them), after which he says that he sees no necessity for the bill in question, and he winds up by telling the Commissioners that if they think the "District stands in need of further moral legislation the present bill appears to be in good form"! But as this bill seeks to secure a more rig d observance of Sunday laws, and as Sunday laws are, according to his argument, not moral, but economic or sanitary statutes, how does he establish the truth of the asseveration that the adoption of this bill would giv the District more moral legislation?

The Christian amendment is scotched, not killed. It is almost safe to say that it will not revive during this session of Congress. Yet the Senate committee may force it again upon the attention of the country. It will hav to be watched. Watching will probably be all that is necessary, just now. At present the real struggle is over the two Sunday bills. Let every Freethinker in the country write to the members of the committees which hav the bills on their files. Do not fail to do this. It will be the most effectiv kind of protest. If the bills are reported favorably, it will be necessary to write also to the Representativ from your district and to your Senators. If the national Sunday Rest bill is introduced in the House we will giv you the names of the members of the committee to which it is referred. You hav above the names of all the other committeemen. Write, write at once, and write to as many as you can. Put your protest and sound arguments, in brief, before them. Make yourselvs felt.

Mr. Putnam will obtain hearings before the committees if he can. And he needs financial help. He can get it from none but the live Freethinkers of the United States. We ought to hav a permanent bureau at Washington, and that we shall hav as soon as we can perfect our organization sufficiently and raise the needed funds. Can not some of our Freethought attorneys go to Washington and help Mr. Putnam? The agents of the theocrats are swarming there. Ministers and bishops are pulling the wires that move the legislators of the nation. When the first Sunday bill for the District was pending, the chairman of the sub-committee of the Committee on the District of Columbia was warned that if he reported the bill unfavorably he would not go back to Congress. He did hand in an adverse report, and he did not go back to Congress. Such are the influences that secure the enactment of religious laws. Freethinkers! stiffen the backbones of your Representativs and Senators.

Send for protests against the two Sunday bills.

Moore, Southgate, and Kentucky Law.

Charles C. Moore, of the Blue Grass Blade, should hav little difficulty in showing the court and jury that the charge of "blasphemy" is not in harmony with the letter and spirit of the Kentucky constitution. That instrument says:

"Section 1. All men are by nature free and equal and hav certain inherent rights, among which may be reckoned:

"Sec. 2. The right of worshiping God almighty according to the dictates of their consciences.

"Sec. 4. The right of freely communicating their thoughts and opinions.

"Sec. 5. No preference shall ever be given by law to any religious sect, society, or denomination; nor to any particular creed, mode of worship, or system of ecclesiastical polity; nor shall any person be compelled to attend any place of worship, to contribute to the erection or maintenance of any such place, or to the salary or support of any minister of religion; nor shall any man be compelled to send his child to any school to which he may be conscientiously opposed; and the civil rights, privileges, or capacities of no person shall be taken away, or in any wise diminished or enlarged, on account of his belief or disbelief of any religious tenet, dogma, or teaching. No human authority shall, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience."

Rev. Mr. Southgate can get little comfort from Sections 4 and 5. But this is not all. Mr. Moore was a witness for the state when a man named Bush was on trial for the murder of a Miss Van Meter. The case was appealed on the ground that Moore was a blasphemer and his testimony incompetent in any court. The Court of Appeals sustained the verdict, saying, "It is highly improper to ask a witness his religious beliefs or unbeliefs." That is right to the point.

Of Rev. Mr. Southgate, the Nicholasville (Kentucky) Democrat remarks:

"The preacher who thinks he has a right to stand up before his handful of ethnological curiosities and express his scandalous belief and exercises the right to blast every man who does not swallow his prima facie absurdities, thinks the mouth of these blasted should be sealed, that they should be locked up because he cannot successfully controvert them with logic, reason, and common sense; he appeals to brute force like a Goth with a club or a policeman with a clamper. . . .

"He has made big money by seizing the natural advantages in land and town lots and belongs to that gang of Bedouins of the desert who ride in advance and seize the water and when the famishing people come up they must shell out or die of thirst; the same crowd who hate Thomas Jefferson's doctrin that the earth belongs in usufruct to the living."

The Blade is to be published by the American Press Association of Cincinnati and a large edition will be run off and sold through the news companies. Perhaps Mr. Southgate some day will come to understand that persecution does not pay in this age—that every attempt to suppress but scatters more widely the seed of that which the persecutor would destroy by brute force.

A Methodist View of Hugh Price Hughes.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes still doggedly refuses to take notice of Editor Foote's complete exposure of the "Atheist Shoemaker" story, except by the continued circulation of Mr. Holyoake's alleged "vindication." But Mr. Hughes does not find his course approved by all of his own denomination. The Crusader, a Methodist paper, declares that the time has come when his brethren must stimulate Mr. Hughes "to meet the grave impeachment upon his veracity and good faith." The Crusader continues:

"This necessity is the more urgently laid upon Methodists because of Mr. Hughes's well-known mental incapacity to admit a mistake except under the most overwhelming pressure. Indeed it is difficult to recollect any instance in which he has ever frankly and unreservedly done so. It is enough, however, to say that he must refute the charges now made against him if he is to continue to hold his place in the Methodist connection. · · · Mr. Holyoake's investigation and report carry no judicial weight for the most obvious reasons. The plaintiff was no party to the inquiry, which was secretly instituted behind his back by friendly arrangement with the defendant. · · · The charges against Mr. Hughes's veracity and good faith are no longer the charges of merely Mr. Foote, the Secularist, but of the Methodist father and brothers of the dead man. · · · These relations of the alleged Atheist Shoemaker state that the greater part of Mr. Hughes's book is utterly false, and they furnish the most explicit evidence, demolishing statement after statement for which Mr. Hughes assumed the fullest responsibility."

The Crusader also says that Mr. Foote's proposal for a court of honor is "most fair and reasonable." It remarks that Mr. Hughes is "seldom hampered by inconvenient candor," refers to the "inborn meanness" of some of his actions in connection with this matter, and declares that Mr. Foote "has presented evidence with respect to his allegations amply establishing a prima facie case. He has not merely asserted but is prepared to prove his charges." This Methodist paper closes its article on Price Hughes's veracity and the alleged "investigation" with these stinging words:

"The Atheist Shoemaker is not the first, nor the second, nor the third public statement which Mr. Price Hughes has put forth and failed to substantiate. This time silence will not avail him. He must refute the present charges or descend from his place as a religious teacher. Is the 'Atheist Shoemaker' a true story? Or is it one of the most contemptible 'pious frauds' which members of the church in whose supposed interest it was launched ought to be the foremost to expose and condemn?"

We suggest that the Literary Digest find room for a summary of the Crusader's article, since it so early printed a gist of Mr. Holyoake's letter in the Methodist Times.

"Church Property" will soon be ready for delivery. The first orders received will, of course, be the first filled. We hope to send out within the next three months at least ten thousand copies of this compendium of facts and arguments.

Christianity is always a civilizing influence, and it is getting in its work in excellent shape in South Africa. London Truth says that the authorities at Johannesburg decreed that no Kaffir may walk on the pavement with white men. More than two hundred Kaffirs have received ten lashes each for violating the "law," of which they were probably ignorant. The "cat" with which the whipping was done was first steeped in brine, and after the lashing salt water was thrown over the victim's lacerated back.

Of course English "respectability" is greatly distressed by all talk which hints at the deposition of the reigning family, and it is likewise deeply concerned for the preservation of the "Sabbath." A short time since the Prince of Wales was in Paris, and Figaro reports that he spent a Sunday evening at the Renaissance Theater and applauded the play. At the close of the third act he visited the room of Sarah Bernhardt, whom he felicitated both on her admirable acting and on her choice of the fine drama, "Izeyl." This is a drama in which Buddha is substituted for Jesus and the Magdalene. The London Freethinker asks, "What will English Sabbatarians say to this?" and answers: "Why, they will go on prosecuting barbers and newsboys who try to earn an honest penny on Sunday." The United States are overrun with the same species of pests.

A. W. Shatford volunteers this about two of the books on the shelves of the Truth Seeker Company:

"I am now reading 'Right Living.' As a guide book to good conduct it is worth all the Bibles that were ever printed. Every page bristles with common sense, and the incentiv to nobler action and a better life taught therein is the correct one. I would recommend Miss Wixon's book to those Freethinkers who delay paying their their subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER. It should be put into the hands of the growing sons and daughters in every household. I would also strongly recommend 'Pleasure and Progress.' It too is a grand book."

The Lutheran church of Madisonville, Ohio, sends a memorial to Congress against the Christian amendment. The memorial is signed by the pastor and two hundred communicants. Scores of other Lutheran churches are doing likewise. The Lutherans are putting rival Christian bodies to shame. But the Cincinnati Post is, of course, mistaken in its statement that this protest of the Madisonville church is the first presented to Congress against the amendment. Thousands of names from Freethinkers and others hav been received by both houses.

"There is a family in Oregon which has a peculiar religious faith. They work for six years and rest the whole of the seventh year. They base their religion on the Bible, and claim that all other religions are false."—Cleveland News and Herald.

And they are right; all religions are false which claim to base Sabbath observance upon the Bible and yet fail to keep the seventh-year Sabbath. The biblical sanction for the yearly rest is precisely the same as for the weekly rest. If it is anti-scriptural to work and play on the seventh day (first day, the Sundayite now says) of the week, it is equally anti-scriptural to work and play in the seventh year. These Oregon people are genuin Jews; the Sabbath Observance Union agitators are hybrids.

"A dispatch from Uganda says the British hav declared war against King Kabaraga of Unyoro, because of his aggressivness against King Toro, the ruler of a tribe friendly to the British. Kabaraga, who is a powerful chief, resented the erection upon his territory of several British forts, and sent an army to punish Toro, who permitted the forts to be built. In consequence, a British force, consisting of Nubian soldiers under the command of Captain Owen, has been sent to meet Kabaraga's army. Captain Owen has with him a Maxim gun, and Kabaraga's army is large and well armed. Desperate fighting is expected."

Christian nations seem much more ready to "civilize" the people of Africa with Maxim guns than with Christian maxims. By the way, what would be the feeling in England and the action of the English government if France should cross the Channel and erect several French forts upon British territory? Is there, indeed, so much difference between six and one-half dozen, and hav "savages" no rights which the followers of the "Prince of Peace" are bound to respect?

A meeting of considerable interest to Freethinkers will be the "American Congress of Liberal Religious Societies," to be held in Chicago in May. The call is issued by those who believe in the "great law and life of love" and who desire "a nearer and more helpful fellowship in the social, educational, industrial, moral, and religious thought and work of the world." The signers to this call include preachers, rabbis, lecturers, editors, and other representativs of Congregational, Unitarian, Universalist, and independent Christian churches, Jewish congregations, and one Freethought magazine. A few of the more prominent signers are Revs. H. W. Thomas, E. L. Rexford, M. J. Savage, W. E. Copeland, P. R. Frothingham, Frederick A. Hinckley, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Mary A. Safford, Celia P. Wooley; Rabbis E. G. Hirsch, Joseph Silverman, K. Kohler, Henry Cohen, Louis Grossman; Messrs. William Salter, Francis W. Parker, Paul Carus, B. O. Flower, H. L. Green, Henry D. Lloyd, J. G. Schurman; Bertha Honore Palmer, Prof. John Fiske. About two hundred names are attached to the call.

About Our Books.

We hav just printed new editions of the following works:

"Martyrdom of Man," by Winwood Reade. This is the ninth edition of this splendid work, and since we hav reduced the price (to $1), to meet the times, we hav sold them faster than ever before.

"Lay Sermons," by Col. Ingersoll. This little tract is a sort of exposition of Mr. Ingersoll's opinion on social matters. Price 5 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible," by William Henry Burr. This edition is we-don't-know-how-many thousandth. The Boston Christian crank, Hastings, has got out a "reply" to it, but it's like "Lambert's Notes on Ingersoll"—no reply at all. There can't be any reply. Two and two can never to be made to count five, no matter what the pious necessities of the case. Price of "Self-Contradictions," 15 cents.

"Crimes of Preachers." A list of the clerics who hav been caught, so far as we could discover from a necessarily limited reading of newspapers. And we are still catching them. Most of them are guilty of ministerial conduct with the sisters, and it makes queer reading, considering what they pretend to be. Like Breckinridge, of pious fame, the ministers are great boys with the girls, and several thousands of them deserve an overcoat of exceptional adhesivness and fluffiness.

Remsburg's five little five-cent tracts are good missionary documents, and the people use them freely. "Decline of Faith," "Protestant Intolerance," "Washington an Unbeliever," "Jefferson and Franklin" ditto, hav each sold into the thousands, as well as "Sabbath Breaking."

"Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated" still goes and is still agoing fast. The edition just printed was two thousand, and we shall hav to print another in a week or two. Agents are doing exceptionally well with this book. It sells to almost everybody who sees it. One man sold thirty-six copies in six hours—an average of one each ten minutes. Another sold eleven in two hours, and another a dozen in half a day. It's a great book for fun as well as for solid argument, sound sense, and historical research into Old Testament history. The price is still $1 because we can't make it cheaper.

Paine's "Age of Reason" is a book that sells more and more as the years roll by. New editions of it are so frequent that we forget to mention them. It has probably made more Infidels than any other one book. Price 25 cents, and if anyone wants to distribute a hundred around the neighborhood to make more Infidels we will let them go at a loss. It will come back to us in good works.

"Thumbscrew and Rack," by George Macdonald is in the second edition and on the third thousand already. It's a great eye-opener and every Freethinker who wants to help along should buy a dollar's worth and giv them away.

"The Bible Inquirer," by Andrew Jacobson had long been out of print till we purchased plates and copyright from the author, but judging from the way they are selling it was a great mistake to allow it to lie idle. It has done good and will do more in our hands, for we intend to circulate it extensivly. Price 25 cents.

"Sister Lucy," a revelation of the way things are done in convents, is in its tenth or twelfth thousand. It hits particularly at the Roman Catholic church, and hits hard. Price 10 cents.

Last, but not least, our new Catalog. The descriptions of the books in it are as good as some more pretentious missionary leaflets, and it has the merit of being the cheapest of all. We hav given away several thousands and are willing and anxious to giv away more. Send for it, read it, and you are bound to buy some books, which helps us along wonderfully. The Catalog is free, and the books it advertises are all good and cheap.

A queer little book that we hav published for the author, Baron Harden Hickey, is "Euthanasia; or the Ethics of Suicide." We don't recommend its doctrin, but it is a little startling to find that a great many philosophers hav looked upon suicide as a legitimate method of avoiding trouble. They ought to hav known better. Price 50 cents.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton says that the cause of woman suffrage is making great progress in New York state. That is good, but if she wants to know what progress woman herself has made in the last four centuries she should read Miss Wixon's latest pamphlet on the subject, being her speech at the International Congress of Freethinkers held at Chicago last October. Price 10 cents.

FRANKLIN STEINER is arranging for a trip through Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, the Dakotas, and Wisconsin. Liberals in those states wishing lectures should address him to box 882, Des Moines, Ia.

J. E. REMSBURG has been lecturing in Nebraska. He spoke in Peru, April 12th; Elkhorn, 13th; Hooper, 14th and 15th; Clearwater, 16th; Fremont, 18th and 19th; North Bend, 20th; Wahoo, 21st and 22nd; Crete, 23d; Cooke 24th, 25th, and 26th. He is billed for St. Joseph, Mo., April 29th, and Huron, Kan., May 1st. He then goes to Missouri, where he has the following list of appointments: Warrensburg, May 6th (2 P.M.); Kansas City, 6th (8 P.M.); Liberal, 7th; Ava, 8th and 9th; Siloam Springs, 10th; West Plains, 11th; Dixon, 12th and 13th. Springfield, 14th; Joplin, 15th and 16th; Chanute (Kan.), 17th; Belton, 18th,

"Christianity Outside the Churches."

I.

The above is the amusing heading of an "open letter" in the September number of the Century, by the Rev. Dr. Wm. Chauncey Langdon. The amiable doctor does not intend it to be amusing. Quite the contrary. Nor does it signify to him and his like what those outside the churches see in it.

Dr. Langdon's thought (how kind in him to say it!) is that there are some good men outside the churches. It is evidently a new idea to him. He was doubtless trained, as all clergymen are, to regard Infidels as the enemies of the human race. But he cannot quite shut his eyes to the facts of his time. He shows no acquaintance with the writings of the great Freethinkers, but there is a good deal of thinking, more or less free, done nowadays inside the churches. The reverend doctors are saying things that would hav got men into jail fifty years ago, and into the fire three hundred years ago. Dr. Langdon innocently thinks it safe to read and quote what the Rev. Freethinker, D.D., says; but let him beware. He quotes some very heterodox expressions from Rev. Dr. Newman Smyth ("Personal Creeds") and Professor Bruce ("Kingdom of God"). "There is now a good deal of unformulated and even unbaptized Christianity in the thought and life of men outside the church." "With a high sense of moral honor they prefer to go without any belief in a divine plan of salvation rather than to profess belief in some conceptions which take no activ hold on their experience of life." "Instead of claiming for the church that within it alone is salvation to be found, earnest men are more inclined to ask whether salvation is to be found in it at all, and does not rather consist in escaping from its influence." And more to the same effect.

This guileless and garrulous D.D. seems unconscious that he is telling an open secret, and unaware that the facts he witnesses are premonitions of

> "The tempest of the twilight of all gods,
> And sundown of the spirit that was man."

"The church" is going to reform, he thinks, and then these good men now standing outside will come in. "When the churches," he says, "or any one of them, by her leaders and representativ men, shall, with honest and manly candor, court criticism and the most searching trial of all things which may hav become unreal, when they manifest a sincere devotion, above all things else, to Christ's Christianity, even should the theological traditions of their past be convicted of error, in the new light of truth, and the customs and methods and ecclesiastical life, which are now taken for granted, of unreality by the new revelation; when any church thus illustrates its supreme loyalty to truth and to Christ, then those who now stand so utterly apart, in their own loyalty to both, will return by one and another, and at last in flocks, to ecclesiastical allegiance." And in this hope he is encouraged by Dr. Smyth and Professor Bruce. He quotes the latter as follows: "If, as both faith and philosophy attest, Christianity be the absolute religion, perennial because perfect, not destined to be superseded by any better, because better is impossible, it must be able to shake itself clear of whatever hampers the free expression of its eternal vitality. · · · The need of a new hour of emancipation is a prophecy of its coming."

I hav quoted thus extensivly to show the spirit of these writers. In the whole article the word "Infidel" does not once occur. When doctors of divinity can speak of those who reject their creeds without shooting the poisoned arrows of vituperation, that fact is itself a prophecy of the coming of "a new hour of emancipation." Our war with such men as these is not to the death. They are friends in disguise. But to "the church" they are wolves in sheep's clothing—traitors mining the citadel from within.

In their admissions we read the doom of "the church." All that the most radical Freethinkers hav been saying is here practically admitted by those who call themselvs Christians. But they are unconscious traitors. They do not mean to stab their mother. It is a case of confusion of thought, and we are just beginning to realize how common that is among men. They are the dupes of names. They plainly see that something is wrong with "the church;" that, as Dr. Briggs says in the Forum (quoted in the Springfield Republican), "the church has lost the confidence of the people in its ability to to teach them the truth, and in its authority as a divine institution." But they fail to see that the distinction between "the church" and "Christianity" is a distinction without a difference. "The church" is Christianity, and Christianity is "the church." Or, if not identical, they are Siamese twins, and neither can long drag around the dead body of the other.

To speak of "Christianity outside the churches" is to use self-contradictory language. The unbroken traditions of more than a thousand years of Christian teaching is that outside the church there is no Christianity.

When we play fast and loose with language, we stultify ourselvs. There is one way to find out what a word means, and it is not to evolve it from the depths of our consciousness. We cannot make an unreality real simply by giving it a familiar name. Words are not things. "They are the counters of wise men, the money of fools." Most men are the slaves of names, as they were in Hobbes's time.

Let these reverend doctors emancipate themselvs. Let them escape from the confusion of thought which blinds them to the obvious implications of the truths they now see. Let them attach clear and definit meanings to the words they use. They will then, if they are honest, come out from an institution whose teachings they reject, and join us in open war upon it. They are probably injuring the church as much by fighting it from the inside, but to injure the church is not the only nor the paramount duty of the hour. To tear down the church is a means, not an end. The end is to build up righteousness, to inculcate loyalty to truth, not "loyalty to truth and to Christ," to use Dr. Langdon's absurd phrase, but loyalty to truth, Christ or no Christ. The end is to set mankind free, and loyalty to truth is freedom. The end is to establish justice among men, and liberty is justice. Truth, Freedom, Justice, these three are one; here is a Holy Trinity which all men may worship without fear, without idolatry, without superstition, without mutual hate.

Dr. Langdon shows more kindness of heart than clearness of head when he applies the name "Christians" to "them that are without" (his name for those usually stigmatized as "Infidels" by his brother theologians). That title we must in candor disclaim. We do not know, and we fear our friends do not, in what sense they use the word Christian when they apply it to those who reject all that the world has ever called Christianity. The word has never been extensivly used in any sense that will permit us to call ourselvs Christians. Not only so, but it calls up too many associations that excite our horror and indignation, and we cannot strip it of those associations, however sincerely we may wish to do so.

The word may not perish with the thing it now describes. It may cease to be synonymous with superstition and bigotry, with hate and war and persecution, with the holy Inquisition, with rack and dungeon and fire, with absurd and horrible dogmas, with hell and damnation. It has survived already a thousand changes of meaning. The Christianity that sent millions of witches, Jews, and unbelievers to death is already dead, as extinct as > "Those monsters of the prime

> That tare each other in their slime."

To each of the multitude of wranglin sects which illustrate Christian love by hating one another, the word has a different meaning, and new sects are constantly making confusion worse confounded. Is not Briggsism a kind of religion heretofore unknown? Perhaps this is the new revelation spoken of by Dr. Langdon.

Again I say, let us not be the dupes of words. When Professor Bruce speaks of Christianity as "the absolute religion, perennial because perfect," he uses language that is unintelligible to those who take the word in its ordinary sense or in any sense sanctioned by usage. Nothing that is now called or has been called by that name can be perennial.

Christianity is doomed. In the same number of the Century with Dr. Langdon's "Open Letter" is an article by G. E. Woodberry, in which he speaks (p. 682) of "the modern malady of incredulity" I will not quarrel here with the phrase. I wish to point out that the "malady" is contagious and incurable, and its inevitable spread means the inevitable downfall of "the church." The ages of faith are forever gone. "The thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

The world will dispense with Christianity because it can no longer believe, and will not much longer pretend to believe.

The world will dispense with Christianity because it cannot dispense with righteousness. I need not catalog here the crimes of "the church," nor dwell upon her dark and cruel and bloody history. What needs to be insisted on is that now, though shorn of her power and held in awe by public opinion, she is the prolific mother of evils innumerable. She blocks the progress of mankind. On many of the most momentous questions of the time she is either dumb, or what she says is wrong. Red-handed with a million murders, and still profiting by robbery, she has no moral message for the men of to-day, much less for the future.

A. F. Hamilton.

Freethought and Secular Notes from England.

SUNDAY LIBERTY.

The fanatics of "The Lord's Day Observance Society" are again at their bigoted work. For some time past they hav been endeavoring to compel those whose custom it is to keep their shops open for a few hours on Sunday mornings to close, and also to suppress the sale of newspapers in the streets on that day. Now they propose to take legal action against two gentlemen who officiated as chairmen for the Leed's "Sunday Lecture Society." The idea of lectures and music on Sundays, unconnected with a church, appears to be a very shocking spectacle to Christian men! Pehaps these enlightened (?) members of the Sabbatarian Society will next turn their attention to the famous Baliol College at Oxford, where it is reported that on Sunday, March 4th, "A Memorial Concert to Professor Jowett" was given. The artists were selected from the best talent available in London, and the concert commenced with a requiem, the words of which were chosen by the late master of Baliol College himself. As far back as 1885 he gave his permission for such concerts to be held, and the performances hav not been confined to sacred music. "Sabbath desecration" is winked at when carried on in high circles, but according to orthodox notions it must not be permitted among the humbler classes of sciety. Yet Christians prate about the brotherhood of man, and that all men are equal. O Christian consistency, where is thy blush? These fanatics of the "Lord's day" are too late with their suppressiv measures, even in "Christian England." We hav some freedom, and we intend not only to retain what we hav, but we are resolved to hav more in spite of the church and its narrow-minded followers. Mental freedom has been too dearly purchased for us to sacrifice it upon the altar of theological prejudice and of priestly despotism.

THE ROMAN INDEX.

St. George Mivart's "Happiness in Hell" having been impounded, public attention has been forcibly directed to the proceedings of the holy Roman office for the protection of sound doctrin and the saving of the souls of the faithful from the perils of heretical opinions. A writer in the Cornhill Magazine for March devoted considerable attention to this ancient and sacred office. He quoted from John Milton's historic defense of liberty, where he says the Catholic church thought it had the key of the press as well as the key of paradise. This generation needs to be reminded of the stormy past, when men had to fight for liberty of speech and pen against the most unscrupulous foe that progress has ever had to encounter. If the ruling powers of Rome stop the circulation of the writings of one of its own friends and supporters at the present time, we can readily credit the enormities laid to their charge at a period when freedom was feeble and defenseless. It is curious to find how little is known among the masses of the proceedings of this church and how indifferent most people are in reference to its power. The professed zeal for freedom on the part of the members of the Roman church when they are in a minority is calculated to blind some persons' eyes as to the character of the enemy in our midst. "Put not your trust in princes" should be supplemented by "Put not your trust in a church that takes upon itself to decide what people may or may not read." It is essential to the happiness and advancement of the world that this, like all other churches, should be kept in check and that all its deformities should be constantly exposed to the gaze of every generation. What Roman Catholics would do with Freethinkers if they were in power may be judged from what they hav recently been guilty of in Spain towards their fellow Christians. Chapels belonging to Protestants hav been closed by order of the priests and in other cases those Christians not belonging to the Catholic religion hav been compelled by order of the Roman Catholic prefect to enter their places of worship through a small door in an adjoining house and to leave the doors open during the holding of the service. As Shakspere says, "Can these things come upon us like a summer's cloud, and not command our special wonder?"

A BOLD PROTEST.

The teachers of the various board schools hav, as a body, sent in their protest against any inquisitorial investigation being made as to their religious opinions, and which certainly would be made if the unique proposal of the clerical party were carried out. Such a policy could only be invidious and detrimental to the authority of the teachers in the schools. For those who cannot teach the new "principles" are to "stand aside" and let others perform their duties. The fact is that the only policy of state schools that commends itself to practical and unbiased minds is that of secular education. What is taught at the expense of all should be that upon which all are agreed. What the state requires, and what it has a right to demand for the money it expends on education, is that the best instruction shall be given to children with a view of preparing them for good and useful citizens. It appears to me that the only way out of this difficulty is to send members to the school board, at the election in next November, who are not suffering from theology on the brain. It is therefore a hopeful sign to see that organized efforts are being made to select persons who are in favor of secular education as candidates for seats on the school board at the coming election.

THE RATIONALIST PRESS COMMITTEE.

This committee, which for several years hav been doing some valuable work, hav just issued their "Fourth Annual Report," from which we learn that during the past year, "quietly and unostentatiously, they hav been pursuing their special work, and with a degree of success most marked and encouraging." The report further states:

Three supplements to Watts's Literary Guide hav been published, giving epitomes of Leslie Stephen's "An Agnostic Apology," Lecky's "History of Rationalism," and Renan's "History of Israel." With the approval of subscribers the series will be continued. These supplements are specially useful in drawing attention to the works of cultured Rationalists, and are well adapted for postal circulation and gratuitous distribution. The postal distribution of literature, which the committee hav made a specialty, has attracted considerable notice, and has been the means of introducing our publications to a large circle who were formerly unacquainted with Rationalist views. The committee hav decided to issue and extensivly circulate some leaflets explaining the Rationalist attitude at the impending School Board elections in London.

WHAT FREETHINKERS ARE DOING HERE.

As regards the education struggle, it has engaged the attention of the Executiv of the National Secular Society, and it has been resolved to prepare and to issue to the general public a pamphlet dealing in a comprehensiv manner with the relativ value of Secular and theological education. It has also been decided to run in London one or more of the members of the National Secular Society as candidates at the coming contest in November. It is important work that has to be done, and it will be entered upon in an earnest spirit and with a determination to secure direct Secular representation on the London School Board. The same thing will be done in the provinces, and I hav a firm faith in the success of the undertaking. In the lecturing field Freethought is progressing. Mr. Foote and myself hav large and crowded audiences both in London and also in the principal provincial towns. Besides, there is a large staff of young and rising lecturers who carry on regular outdoor propaganda. This plan of advocacy has proved highly satisfactory in enlisting recruits for the Freethought army. I hav just had a two nights' debate in Derby with a most intelligent Swedenborgian minister upon the "Immortality of the Soul." The audiences were exceedingly large and orderly. I hav two other debates arranged to take place in Scotland during May. Mr. Foote has just concluded a most successful tour in Scotland.

CHARLES WATTS.

Sparks from the Lecture Field.

My three-months' engagement in the city of Wichita has terminated, and by the time this letter is in print I shall be on the rounds again. My experience in Wichita has taught me that more lasting good can be done by such methods as these than by taking a flying trip through the country and giving one or two lectures here and there. True, this expedient must be resorted to chiefly because it is not possible to conduct such a campaign in every town. But if Liberals would only get together and arrange to keep a lecturer in their town for two weeks or a month they would soon realize the beneficial effects to the cause that would be sure to follow.

I hav lectured every Sunday evening in Wichita, from January 8th until April, and twice during the week; and during the entire course my audiences hav fully maintained their standard in both numbers and enthusiasm. Never before in the church history of Wichita hav the clergy been brought to such a pitch of activity to preserve their standing. They tried almost every expedient that human ingenuity could invent to keep the people from attending my lectures. Each Sunday they would refer to my lectures, either directly or indirectly; they advised the young women to rather "marry a drunkard, a gambler, or a burglar, than to marry an Infidel." They employed women to "whistle praises to God," but they failed to accomplish their purpose.

So desperate did the clergy become that at one of the regular meetings of the Ministerial Alliance the matter of my lectures was fully discussed and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, An Infidel of some note is in town, lecturing on Infidelity in the Board of Trade Hall every Sunday night, and otherwise raising the devil; and as many Christian people hav been lured to this place both by curiosity and invitation we find that we are not doing enough to counteract these evil influences; therefore, be it

Resolved, That each member of this Alliance shall make it his special duty to go out to the highways and byways of Wichita and vicinity to preach the true gospel of Christ, as did the disciples of old, to rescue the people from this snare into which they are rapidly falling.

The preachers did get out. They set up their stands upon the street corners in a vain attempt to drag people into their churches with a theological harness around their necks. On the contrary, the preachers became the laughing stock of the community. One of these meetings was in progress, and the sky-pilot who had been selected to take the leading part happened to be making his address to those present when up came five well-known Infidels. The crowd now numbered just seventeen. Among the many bitter attacks upon Infidelity in which the preacher indulged was the following statement:

"I would like to see Bob Ingersoll stretched upon a rack. I would like to see the thumbscrews applied and twisted so tight that every struggle would stain the instruments with his blood."

Thus is the true spirit of the clergy fully made manifest. Here is the true feeling of the orthodox Christian church toward all who dare oppose it. There is not a church in the land that is truly Christian that would not gladly set up another Inquisition on its own account. And these are the men who are now striving for further power by placing "God in the Constitution."

In addition to my work in Wichita, I hav paid regular visits to Benton, a little town in the next county. It is but a small place, though full of Liberals Go where you will, the country round here seems to be alive with them. Remsburg has been over this ground before me and the force of his lectures in preparing the way has been immense. Each time I was favored with an audience of nearly one hundred and fifty people. Each time I was the guest of "Uncle" Henrie, a sturdy old Freethinker of eighty-six years. His son, Clark Henrie, together with C. K. Robinson, H. Wolf, and many more, go to swell the Freethought ranks. They are all so activ and earnest that even the one church can scarcely keep together.

Following this I had an engagement in Columbia, Oklahoma, to giv a series of three lectures, but an unlooked-for circumstance prevented my going. Just on the eve of my departure, when everything had been got in readiness for the journey, news was brought me of the death of one of our friends in Andover, Kan. The parents, being Freethinkers, had expressed the wish that I should conduct the services, and this being in full accord with the principles of the deceased, I gave up my appointment and attended this funeral.

The deceased was Henry C. James, aged twenty-one years, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Freeman James. The funeral took place on March 27th, at the home of his parents. I gave two addresses, one at the house and the other at the grave. Owing to the great popularity of the deceased, there were nearly three hundred people in attendance. The young man had been an enthusiastic and consistent Freethinker. While at college he refused to take part in the prayers, which brought him into a discussion upon the subject with the principal, a Professor Dyre. He also became involved in a religious controversy with the Methodist preacher at Wichita, when again he stoutly defended his views. He has written several short essays upon religious topics, also a little poem entitled "Religion," in which he denounces it as a "bane and a curse."

Death had no terrors for him. Death had been robbed of its sting. He died true to his honest convictions. A life full of noble qualities enabled him to look back upon his past without regret or remorse. Like the calm, soft whispers of the vernal breeze, he fell asleep in nature's arms, the bounteous mother of all, his last words being: "Truth and justice shall come at last."

Freethought Progress.

Robert G. Ingersoll's lectures, "The Gods" and "The Ghosts," are published by P. C. Wezel, Haarlem, Holland. Both translations, which are excellent, are accompanied by a preface by Vineta.

Portugal is announced to be on the verge of a revolution. The propaganda of Freethought and republicanism as organized by Mogelhaés Lima and Prof. T. Braga is bearing fruit. That even the king thinks harvest time is near is evidenced by the fact that he has just got his life insured for $200,000.

We are the recipient of several copies of the two Liberal Hebrew journals, Freie Arbeiter Stimme and The Union Zeitung. We mention this simply as a matter of courtesy, and to show our readers that even the countrymen of Jesus hav heard of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and wish to exchange. What the papers contain we do not know, as our linguistic knowledge does not embrace Hebrew.

The annual report of "Cercle des Soirées populaires rationalistes," of Brussels, Begium, is at hand. During the past years the society held 9 special meetings, 28 committee meetings, 20 persons joined. 10 resigned to form a new Freethought society, 5 secular baptisms and one marriage were celebrated; of excursions and conferences about a dozen were held. Besides this the society took part in two national Freethought congresses, a reception to the orphans of Campins, and several political manifestations, and organized a dramatic company which played to large audiences in Brussels as well as other places. The Belgian Freethinkers can be proud of such a society.

February 23d the fund contributed by Spanish Freethinkers toward the erection of a monument in memory of the late Ramon Chiés had reached the sum of 2,147.65 pesetas. ∴ Every once in a while the Catholic church or a church society is excited by an article in Las Dominicales del Libre Pensamiento. This time it is the central society of "Padres de Familia," which denounces as immoral the many-times damned organ of the excommunicated Demafilo (Fernanda Lozan), because he, in very chaste language, exposed a scandal of the usual kind in the cathedral of Santiago. The "Padres de Familia" must be sorry that they attacked Las Dominicales, for in its issue of Feb. 16, 1894, the latter devotes a whole page to the politics, morals, and general good-for-nothingness of the "fathers."

The church of Arila, Sweden, is not troubled with visitors. At the services held in it on Christmas eve last year there was but one attendant besides the church officials, says Eskilstuna Kuriren. ∴ Lucifer, the Swedish Freethought and Workingman's annual for 1894, is before us. As usual the number does great credit to the publisher and editor. It contains several good portraits and engravings, and among its contributors it counts well-known Freethinkers like Viktor E. Lennstrand, Dr. Knut Wicksell, and Mrs. A. Bugge-Wicksell, Ernst Hellborg, Bjornstjerne Björnson, Axel Danielsen, and others. The price is about twenty-five cents, including postage, and we advise our Scandinavian subscribers to send for a copy to G. W. Wilhelmsson, Grefthuregatan 19, Stockholm, Sweden.

Dr. Bruno Wille, the speaker of the Free Religious Society of Berlin, is engaged in a violent controversy with the pious school authorities. They claim he should hav a license to teach; he says, No. The law is plainly on the side of Dr. Bruno Wille; but then, anything for the glory of God. ∴ The children of Free Religious parents are by law excused from receiving religious instruction in the public schools of Germany, but this does not prevent pious officials from denying this right, but sometimes higher courts sustain the law, as in the case of Karl Brandt versus the magistrate of Halle, which was recently decided. ∴ The National Congress of the German Freethought Federation will be held at Koln am Rhein on May 12–15, 1894. ∴ March 24th, on the occasion of the seventieth anniversary of Professor Büchner's birth, a popular edition of his celebrated work, "Force and Matter," was published in Germany and Holland.

Cremation is slowly but steadily gaining in public favor. The United States has 16 crematories; England, 2; Germany, 3; Italy, 23. In Paris, France, 45 cremations took place in the year 1889, 121 in 1890, 134 in 1892, and 159 in 1893, each cremation according to the wish of the family of the deceased. ∴ The Turnerbund of North America, which is composed of our German fellow-citizens and Freethinkers, is in sore straits. The Protestant Ministerial Association of Chicago has hurled its anathema against our unfortunate brethren by publishing a small book entitled, "Could Jesus be a Member of the North American Turnerbund?" According to last information received, no Turner has been scared into the fold of the church and most likely never will be. ∴ We hav received Rodhuggeren, a Scandinavian weekly newspaper published at Fergus Falls, Minn., by Torkel Oftelie and Ole E. Hagen. It adheres in its columns to its motto: "Friked for Loke soavel som for Thor" (Liberty for Loke as well as for Thor). Price $1.25 a year. ∴ "The municipal bodies of Ottawa, Hamilton, and other cities in Ontario, intend to co-operate in presenting a petition to the legislature demanding the right to tax the ground upon which ecclesiastical edifices (churches, parsonages, and schools) are erected," says a correspondent of the Canada Revue.

Madame Maria Deraismes, one of the most prominent French women Freethinkers and an avowed advocate of woman's rights, died last month at Paris, at the age of fifty-nine years. She was the author of several works on different subjects; from 1881 to 1884 she edited the journal Le Republicain de Seine-et-Oise. She was a member of various Freethought societies and treasurer for Comité à Etudes Morales. Her funeral, which was strictly secular, was attended by all the prominent Freethinkers of Paris, and by several societies as such. ∴ In France, when a Freethought society gets too large as to territory represented by its members, a branch society is invariably formed, so that no excuse regarding time and distance can be offered by members not attending meetings regularly. The city of Amiens, which has about 80,000 inhabitants, had until of late three Freethought societies, besides the Freemason lodges. This number, however, was not sufficient, and last month a new society, "l'Union Laigue," was founded, with a charter membership of twenty-four. ∴∴ According to Taine, there are among the two million nominal Catholics in Paris over thirteen years old 80,000 women and 20,000 men that are Catholics; the others are pagans or Freethinkers. In the provinces, one of every four women is a good Christian, but only one of every twelve men. ∴∴ Everything points to a great battle at the coming French elections between the Freethinkers and Freemasons on one side and the church on the other. Never before were French Freethinkers so activ. ∴∴ Our friend Mr. C. Cilwa has again resumed the activ editorship of La Verité, and all letters and exchanges are to be addressed to Monsieur C. Cilwa, 172 Faubourg St. Honoré, Paris. ∴∴ Among prominent French Freethinkers who died during 1893 we should always remember Victor Schœlcher and Victor Considérant; both hav, in their respectiv spheres—the former as scientist and senator and the latter as workingman—done much for the propaganda of Freethought.

Announcement.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" is now ready for the press. The closing pages will contain the names of paid subscribers to the book. I hereby giv a list up to date. About three week's grace is left for those who hav not sent in their names. Those who intend to take the book I hope will do so without delay. I would like to hav one thousand names.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Paine Monument.

To the Citizens of the United States, and to Lovers of Liberty the World Over.

Like many other pioneers of great principles, Thomas Paine has been misunderstood, misrepresented, and maligned. His motivs hav been impugned, his character has been traduced, and his self-sacrificing labors in behalf of oppressed humanity hav been depreciated by some, and forgotten by many. Truth, however, compels the admission that few men hav done more to establish in the minds of men the love of liberty and justice, and that no man has performed greater and more lasting services for the cause of American Independence, than Thomas Paine.

He attacked vigorously the prejudices and superstitions of his time. His writings are clear and direct in style, but there is no bitterness in his words, his object being to widen the boundary of human thought and to enlarge the scope of human opportunity. Such objects cannot be attained without encroaching upon the preserves of the privileged classes and doing violence to the preconceived notions of the narrow minded and bigoted partisans.

Herein lies the offense of Thomas Paine.

Liberty, to Thomas Paine, was the breath of life. The essay he published in America was a plea for the emancipation of slaves, a work which was not accomplished until ninety years afterward. He was a republican because he had learned that liberty in its full meaning was impossible under mon archcal rule.

He was the first to suggest American Independence, the first to propose the establishment of a nation of free men with the opportunity of carrying out their own destiny, and it was he who wrote for the first time the glorious words, "The Free and Independent States of America."

His little pamphlet, "Common Sense," laid the foundation of the Declaration of Independence, and sounded the note of liberty throughout the world.

His labors extended over the vast field of political, social, philosophical, and religious questions. He illumined every subject he touched, and brought the most abstract question within the reach and comprehension of the people. He had the courage of his opinions, and in the face of bitter opposition from unscrupulous foes, and in the midst of great pers nal peril, he unflinchingly maintained the cause of political liberty.

He exposed the false claims of the church and priesthood, and urged mankind to a life of usefulness built upon the broad and natural foundation of mental and moral integrity.

Such a man is one of the glories of the human race, and his memory is an inspiration to all liberty-loving people.

In the early part of this century the people of the state of New York presented to Paine a large farm at New Rochelle, as an expression of gratitude for his eminent services to the cause of American Independence.

Subsequently some of his friends and admirers erected thereon a monument to his memory. Recently it has fallen somewhat into decay.

The members and friends of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association hav resolved to renovate and beautify it. Arrangements hav been made for the work, and May 30th next (Decoration Day) has been selected as an appropriate time, and New Rochelle as a fitting place, to celebrate the event.

You are cordially invited to coöperate in this glorious work, and to be present on that important occasion.

A special train will leave the Grand Central depot at 12:30 P.M. Tickets to New Rochelle and return, fifty cents, can be obtained from Mr. Thomas Duntze, 24 Stockholm street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Full particulars of the day's proceedings will be announced later.

On behalf of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association,

HENRY ROWLEY, President.
THOMAS DUNTZE, Cor. Sec'y.

News and Notes.

When I arrived in Boston, the 8th inst., April was transformed into furious March. The skies were stormy and the ground was covered with snow. Retreating winter seemed determined to giv a tremendous kick as it vanished from the scene, and it succeeded in making a "spell of weather" which had not been experienced for years. All day long the sleet descended, and I didn't expect a corporal's guard at my lecture in the afternoon at Paine Hall. However, there was a good audience, and I was happily disappointed. This was due in part to the fact that Ingersoll was to lecture in the evening, and that brilliant attraction aided me materially in my humbler pathway. It is a fact that Ingersoll creates such an enthusiasm all round that the whole Liberal field is benefited by his surpassing labors. If Ingersoll should devote himself entirely to the lecture field every one of us would receive an immense benefit. It is my hope that he will do this. Ingersoll is too universal a genius for anything but literature and oratory. Boston Theater blazed with a big audience that stormy Sunday evening, and the great orator was never in happier vein. Ingersoll is a special favorit of Boston. Boston can appreciate him, for although Boston is very fond of elegance and admires literary form it is still delightfully open to new ideas and welcomes original genius, and Ingersoll givs them all they desire in any direction.

I spent the week in Boston, and "enjoyed" the east winds as never before. I made out to get around some and visit in the midst of literary labors. I was at the Rushs', the Fentons', and at Revere with Washburn and other confreres of the Liberal cause, and while we pitied the sailors who were fighting the stormy sea which we could hear thundering on the beach, we had all the illuminations that human life could giv in its onward flow. Saturday I went eighty miles down the cape to East Dennis, where I arrived at 8 o'clock in the evening with the clouds thick and dropping rain. I had a melancholy prospect before me for Sunday, but lo and behold! when I awoke in the morning the sun was pouring fourth his brightness and driving away the gloom. A revival had been going on the whole week, and the Lord hadn't smiled upon it at all, but when the "Infidel preacher" came along nature instantly put on her best attire, and made everything lovely for his work. The old orthodox God is certainly disappearing. At any rate the "clerk of the weather" has concluded to be on the side of human progress.

As before, I found a hospitable welcome at the home of Joshua Crowley, president of the East Dennis Society. In the morning, with telescope in hand, we climbed Scargo—I think that is the name—the highest hight near by, and looked over the broad ocean and surrounding lands. It was a vast and beautiful prospect. We could see the cape in dim distance as it circled to Provincetown, and the ships seeking safety in the still heaving harbors, while beyond could be seen the Atlantic sweeping to the distant shores of Europe. Around us were the pleasant villages of Cape Cod greeting the spring's effulgence. In the sods at our feet were peeping forth the gentle Mayflowers and we gathered bouquets of this avant courier of summer's mass of bloom—the trailing arbutus is the name it goes by in the book, I understand—but I never think of calling it anything else except the Mayflower. That was the name in the days gone by when we gathered them in our wandering boyhood.

I lectured in the afternoon and evening, and fine audiences were present. The East Dennis Society has been organized about twenty years and has sturdy supporters, both men and women. It meets in Worden Hall, named after the first settler or his son Peter, who, from the records, seems to hav been the original Infidel of America.

I return to Boston on Monday. Amidst the orthodox shadows of Wellesley I enjoy the genial Freethought of the Denton family and of Mrs. Shull, who with quiet independence maintain their Liberal views. Wellesley is a lovely place, and I am glad that it is not altogether given over to the church people, who, however, exercise considerable sway on account of the college and its surroundings. And all this ecclesiastical property is untaxed.

I hope that New York Liberals will keep their eyes on the Constitutional Convention. The taxation question will come up there.

The National Sunday Law is now being pushed. The following is from a Washington paper:

Senator Kyle to-day introduced in the Senate a bill providing for Sunday rest. It provides that no one shall perform any labor or engage in any amusement on Sunday to the disturbance of others, in any territory, district, vessel, or place subject to the exclusiv jurisdiction of the United States on the Sabbath, and prohibits the transportation of the mails on that day of the week.

The following also shows the animus of its supporters. They want to stop Ingersoll's lectures, as well as Sunday mails, by law:

The Chapin Auxiliary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; Mrs. Mary E. Cohen, president, held an important meeting at headquarters, in Central Union Mission building, yesterday afternoon, in the interest of a better observance of the Sabbath. Mrs. Mary E. Catlin, superintendent of the department of Sabbath observance for the District, gave an instructiv Bible lesson, and the meeting was thrown open for a free discussion on the subject. The conviction prevailed among the ladies of the union that the estimation in which the Sabbath was held and its proper observance in a community was an indication of the morals of that community. No Sabbath-breaking city was a safe place to rear the young for honorable citizenship. Resolutions were adopted favoring the passage by Congress of the bill offered by Senator Kyle for the protection of Sunday in the District and protesting against the lecture delivered recently in this city by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.

I shall devote special attention to this Sunday legislation in Congress. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Press on the Amendment.

The well-meaning people who want to "put God in the Constitution," and who addressed impressiv appeals to the House Judiciary Committee recently, were painfully shocked at the close of their exhortation to learn that persons desired to be heard on the other side of the question. Shocking as it may seem, the question has two sides, and the side which does the least talking is by far the larger one.—Philadelphia Record.

The fact that "there is no God in the federal Constitution" continues to pain the pietists. Senator Frye has presented a petition to so amend that instrument as to acknowledge the existence of the Almighty. We move that a clause be also inserted recognizing the law of gravitation.—San Antonio Express.

When the church and state join hands and begin to "recognize" one another, and the things of one another, pledging to each other their undivided strength and coöperation, then it is time for the American eagle to take flight and fly as fast as his wings can carry him, for then will begin such a decay of freedom, such destruction of individualism, such a failure of progress and civilization, such corruption and rottenness, as the world never saw. · · · The advocates of this God-and-Christ constitutional amendment are devotees of the letter of things, which means decay, destruction, and death to the nation, if it means anything.—East Oregonian.

The House has tabled a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution acknowledging the supreme authority of God in the temporal affairs of this government. This proposition comes up regularly, and it is regularly bowled over. Nevertheless, a certain set of people continue to expend a great deal of time and talk in the endeavor to prove that this country cannot prosper so long as God is not mentioned in the Constitution. These well-meaning but narrow-minded people seem to think the Almighty can be flattered by resolution or by some formal acknowledgment of his greatness in matters without relation to devotional exercises or religious observance. Such people would insist upon opening a keg of nails with prayer, or would say grace every time they took a dose of salts. Doubtless, they are pious in their way, but their persistent attentions must bore the Lord mightily.—Oakland Times.

Let none underrate the significance of this crusade! Behind its banner march all the Evangelical churches. It is supported by the now on the increase "anti-foreigner" sentiment, of which anti-Semitism and the American Protectiv Association are some of the symptoms and revelations. It will prove the rallying standard of all Sabbatarians and Prohibitionists. Small as yet, it has the uncanny possibilities of developing to huge dimensions. The friends of liberty must be on the alert! The avalanche which buries under its shroud the peaceful hamlet of the valley did not set out on its errand of death as a ponderous mass. · · · The churches are organized, the Liberals are not. The former, in this ostensibly innocent amendment, are solicitous not so much for God and Christ as they are for self. They would fain see the day when no Jew and no Catholic, no Freethinker and no "foreigner" shall be eligible for office. From Jew and "foreigner" they dread the impulse to a more rational religion. And this must be forestalled. The amendment is but the thin end of the wedge. They are profuse in protestations of love for liberty, but it is always their liberty. The Liberals must also bestir themselvs. Majorities are often created by the apathy of minorities. The "populus" is not always amenable to reason. Prejudice speaks as frequently at the ballot box as does well-seasoned conviction. The churches hav a strong hold on their members, even politically. Women are easily swayed by pastor and presbytery, and in turn they are the power behind the throne.—E. G. H., in Unity.

Letters of Friends.

For the Truth of To-day.

NEW YORK, April 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: On the 17th of March, the day when my subscription expired, I was was at your office, and paid $6.50 for your esteemed paper and for Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." I hav been reading your paper for more than a year, and it suits me first-rate. It is just the kind of paper that I was looking for, and I congratulate myself that I hav at last secured a paper that expresses the common thought of the modern civilized world, and not that of the superstitious ancient world.

Yours for liberty, LOUIS N. COHEN.

It is an Aid to Digestion.

CASTILE, N. Y., April 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3.50 for payment of my subscription and one copy in paper of "Yone Santo, a Child of Japan."

I wish to thank you for waiting so long for the money due you, and hope you will not be called upon to do so in the future. The old paper grows better and better, and my Sunday morning breakfast would never digest properly if I did not hav that to read. Take THE TRUTH SEEKER and a pipe of good tobacco, and if a man can not be comfortable after a Sunday morning breakfast he deserves to be shot on the spot. Very truly, F. N. SMITH.

For the Absolutely Secular State.

PENN YAN, N. Y., April 13, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send money order for $5, and wish to renew my subscription for one of the best edited papers in the United States—THE TRUTH SEEKER. Long may it wave! The benefit it has been to mankind, in making for a better civilization, is almost incalculable. Being the awful, wicked Infidel that I am, I feel that I must read it, and probably will, so long as I am able to raise the ducats to buy it. May it liv, and wax strong, until the complete, absolute separation of church and state is obtained. at least. It will hav performed an almighty good work should it liv no longer. But it will probably liv longer, if till then. C. ELMENDORF.

The Same Cry of Hard Times.

SOUTH BEND, WASH., April 3, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find order for $2 25—$2 to apply on my subscription, and twenty-five cents for "Secular Marriage and Funeral Ritual." I hav been canvassing for two days trying to get you a new subscriber, but all in vain, but I think I will get one, or two, after awhile. There are a number of Freethinkers in South Bend, but the hard times make it difficult to get subscribers at present.

We clubbed together, a few of us, last winter, and got Reynolds from Tacoma to come here and lecture. He lectured four nights to a good audience, and to our great satisfaction, but this winter times hav been so hard that very little could hav been accomplished in any way. I expect to be able some time this summer to send for some books, and I will then let you know more from this place.

With the best wishes to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Heston for their good work, I remain yours for liberty and truth, HENRY ELLISON.

Yes, They Are a Bad Pair.

PETERSBURG, IND., April 10, 1894

MR. EDITOR: Franklin Steiner's lecture here last night in the Opera House was a success. His personal appearance and gentle dignity disarm opposition and win the esteem of the young. Five hundred free family tickets, distributed at the door of the public school building, made one-fourth of the audience students, who listened with attention to the "Evidences of Christianity Tested." Mr. Steiner drew back the veil and disclosed to the wondering gaze of our Christian youth, and with telling effect, the fraud, falsehood, and superstition upon which Christianity rests. Every claim made is proven, and every charge he sustains with incontrovertible evidence.

An old gray Liberal said: "I knew it all, but never before heard it told with such force and ingenuity." A Romanist said: "He makes out the Protestant as bad as the Catholic." We hope to hear him soon again. FRANK S. WEAVER.

A Worthy Laborer and Teacher.

PAINTED POST, N. Y., April 7, 1894

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed money order for $3 for your paper. I hav taken it for a number of years, and cannot do without it. I would like to get you one or two subscribers. I am the only outspoken Freethinker in our village of about one thousand inhabitants. There are three churches here. I do not attend any of them. The ministers always treat me politely, but they fight shy of an argument with me.

The Presbyterian minister, a doctor of divinity, commenced an argument with me some years ago on the Bible, and came out second best. He always treats me in a very gentlemanly way, but I cannot get him to argue with me again on the Bible. I am now seventy-six years of age, am a mechanic, and hav always labored hard. I hav five children living, and they all believe as I do. My religion is to do not unto others what I would not have others do to me

With best wishes for your success, I remain,

Yours respectfully, B. C. WOOD.

A Live Lightning Director.

MORRISTOWN, MINN., March 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Find money order for $3 50. Please send me the following books as soon as possible: "The Story Hour," "Ghosts and Other Lectures," "Liberty in Literature," "Bible Inquirer," "Crimes of Preachers," "Self-Contradictions of the Bible," seven leaflets, "Charity and Infidelity." Will say I am station agent here, and that I hav done a good work since I came; hav made two stanch and out-spoken Liberals, and now I hav help whenever I need it. There are quite a number of Liberals here, and we are sowing the seeds of progress that will bear fruit soon. My father and a friend of ours attended the lectures of the Colonel at Minneapolis and St. Paul. He is indeed a grand man, and I love him better than any god or Christ. I hav received the "Dynamic Theory," and it is a splendid work, and one that all people ought to read. I cannot say too much for this book. Will try and get you a new subscriber or two here in the near future.

Who Was David's Mother?

CLAY CENTER, KAN., April 3, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: 1. Who was David's mother?

2 When were the Dark Ages of the world?

3. And how long hav the Old and New Testaments been in existence?

Yours truly, J. B. WISE.

[1. We do not know. Who does?

2. The boundaries of this period are not agreed upon by all students and writers. It may be said to hav begun about the close of the sixth century and to hav extended to the thirteenth, although there are some who would continue it to the fifteenth.

3. The present canon of the Bible, as accepted by the Catholic church, was adopted at the Council of Trent, April, 1546. The Protestant canon was prescribed by the Westminster assembly in 1647. It is identical with the Catholic, except that it rejects the Old Testament apocrypha. For the development of the books of the Bible read Judge Waite's "History of the Christian Religion of the Year 200." One of the best histories of the formation and development of the canon is Bronson C. Keeler's "Short History of the Bible."—ED. T. S.]

Names of Those Who Are Alive.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., March 31, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I send you the petitions that I received from you some time since, with eighty five names attached thereto, hoping they may help to influence Congress to reject the proposed amendment should it come before that honorable body. I suppose there would be no trouble in filling a dozen petitions with names in Woonsocket if some one would take the time to circulate them. My time is so nearly taken up that I hav but very little left in which to see those who would add their names to the list of those that are battling for the right. It would be hardly worth while for me to try to get any more. The names that I hav on the petitions are all alive and probably will liv for some time to come; no kids just born or those that are going to be born again; none that hav been dead twenty years like those that I hear the National Reform Association are putting on their petitions to swell the numbers. These are men and women that are very much alive and understand what they are doing.

Mr. Editor, if every truth seeker in the land will spend time enough to get as many names as there are on these petitions, there will be as many names sent to Congress by us as by the National Reform Association, and names that would hav an influence.

Yours for mental liberty and justice,

WM. SLATER MOWRY.

The Evil of Religious Intoxication.

SANTA CRUZ. CAL., April 8, E.M. 294.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed money for books ordered. The other day a Christian Prohibitionist friend wrote to me: "I can see but one evil afflicting humanity, and that is liquor drinking." Now, she certainly needs such light as she would get by a careful reading of THE TRUTH SEEKER fifty-two times a year. Of course the liquor traffic is a great evil, and the use of intoxicating drink is the great cause of the tramp evil, but by experience we know that the prime cause of misery and poverty is religious intoxication. The Christian God himself is the originator of the gin-mills, and presiding elder in the whisky trust. He had horns coming out of his hand, and there was the hiding of his power (Hab. iii, 4). You savy? Yes, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down (Oba. i, 16). Such is their God's autobiographical chronicle. Of course every person possessing common sense in place of religious insanity knows that the debasing phantasy in whose name woman—and man, too—is degraded to miserable slavery, is the root of all evil. I cannot write all that I think, but I do believe that if every one would consider himself bound to make a business of improving this world instead of confining himself to preparations for another, there would be no more problem of the unemployed, human sympathy and friendly aid would take the place of wholesale serpent's egg corporations, whose deadly, blighting evils are encircling all nations of the earth. Therefore, think and act for yourselvs. Wishing all honest men and women a grand future, I am,

Yours, etc., VICTOR LAINE.

A New Genesis.

HARLAN, IA., April 6, 1894.

. . . And man said: "Let us make God in our image, after our likeness; and let him hav dominion over the fish of the sea and the suckers of the land."

So man created God in his own image In the image of man created he him, and he had dominion over every thing that creepeth and cringeth before him on the face of the earth.

And man saw that God was truly in the image of man. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day of savagery; and man fought and slew and butchered, and strewed the face of the earth with bones and graves; and he worshiped his "Great Jehova" and his "Lord of Hosts," for he knew that he was the invisible leader of the glorious slaughtering expeditions of men, and that he was truly after his "own heart." . . .

The morning was the dawning of the seventh day of savagery, and there began to grow upon the face of the earth creatures that were neither "fish of the sea," nor "fowl of the air;" they were not "cattle," nor did they "creep upon the earth;" and so it came to pass that God had not dominion over these strange creatures.

Men said that they were a vulgar race, known by the name of Infidi, but modern scientists hav proven that they were a true variety of the earliest race of Homines.

Now these Homines went about among men, saying: "Why are all these bones? Is it not more peaceable to liv in peace? Why do you not advance? Is science not growing on all these bushes?"

And the men answered, saying: "Let us slay every homo from off the face of the earth. They say it is peaceful to liv in peace. They say: 'Let us advance;' but it cannot be, for God would no longer be of our likeness. Let us slay the Homines." And it was so.

The Homines were all torn to pieces; but, behold! the climate changed exceedingly, and little Homines grew up all over the face of the earth; even faster than men could hew them down, and the evening and the morning were the last day of savagery; and civilization sent a feeble ray through the dark clouds of superstition.

And the morning was the nineteenth century.

Though Freethought has been oppressed so long, is it not making rapid advancement after all? H. G. BAKER.

Mortuary—William Dippe.

GENESEO, ILL., March 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find a clipping from a local paper, giving an account of the life of Mr. William Dippe.

The deceased was born in Holstein, Germany, Feb. 16, 1821. On Sept. 10, 1844, he was united in marriage to Miss Doris Preper, who survives him. In 1854 they came to America, stopping first in Chicago; and remaining there about one year, when they came to Rock Island, and in 1856 moved to Le Claire, where they hav resided ever since. By occupation Mr. Dippe was a ship carpenter, and was considered a good workman. His maxim in life was, "Whatever is worth doing at all, is worth well doing." He was foreman of the Le Claire boat-ways for a number of years, and the venerable Capt. J. W. Van Sant, who was proprietor at the time, says he never heard him utter a cross word to the men who were working under him. After becoming too old and feeble for the performance of heavy manual labor, he followed the occupation of florist and gardener, and many a heart has he gladdened with a beautiful bouquet of fresh flowers Mr. Dippe has resided in Le Claire nearly thirty eight years, and his life has been that of an honorable, upright man. He had many virtues, but the grandest of them all was in attending strictly to his own affairs. Would that the world had more such men!

I wish to add for the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that Mr. William Dippe was one of the noblest specimens of humanity I ever met. After an acquaintance of over thirty years I hesitate not to pronounce him brave, generous, kind, noble, and honest. He was an out and out Freethinker, and was always ready to avow and defend his views and principles. And while he was nearing the cold, dark river, his faithful and loving wife was an invalid and blind. The would-be pious neighbors called on them and wanted them to let the church people pray for them, saying that the Lord would raise him and restore sight to his blind wife. Feeble and low as he was, he became indignant and ordered them from his house.

He was universally respected. I understand that Mr. Barnes, who officiated at his funeral, was a Freethinker.

Respectfully, L. G. BARNES.

HENRY C. JAMES.

ANDOVER, KAN., April 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Henry C. James, the writer's nephew, died March 25th. He was a bright and accomplished young man, loved and esteemed by all who knew him, and would hav graduated in a short time. He was a Freethinker, and not afraid of speaking his belief to all who happened to approach him on the subject of religion. His death was very sudden. He was sick hardly one day. One pious old lady remarked that it was so sudden that the poor boy had no time to repent, and a moment later a male relativ of hers said the boy did not hav an enemy in the world.

John R Charlesworth was called to deliver the funeral oration at the house of his parents and also at the grave. I will say right here that it was the first secular service ever held in this vicinity. There are quite a goodly number of Freethinkers through here, but not very activ; all afraid of "Mother Grundy." The boy's father, mother, and sisters are highly pleased with Mr. Charlesworth, though many bigoted Christians declare that he did not say anything. The young man died as he lived and believed. His last words were: "Truth and justice will come at last," and Christians hav the audacity to twist and distort these words into another meaning, and hav even gone so far as to say that he did not die a Freethinker, but Mr. Charlesworth put a quietus on all that.

Revivals hav not been a success through this section, although much loud talking has been done. In my town quite a number hav taken their names from the church books during the revival.

I hav been the chairman of our school board for two terms (six years); was defeated two successiv years on account of my opinions on religion. Our school was during this time almost an entire failure, and last fall the Epworth League and others had a general falling out; and in order to punish each other, and to rehabilitate our school, they put me back on the board as treasurer, and some hav even declared that they intend to keep me there as long as I remain in their district.

Imitativ Emotionalism at a Revival.

ELBA, O., April 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR:

Oh, wad some power the gif ie gie us
To see oursels as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us
And foolish notion;
What airs in dress an' gait wad lea'e us,
And ev'n devotion.

Our Methodist revival this year exceeded, in some respects, all similar events that ever occurred near this place, and a description of it by a critical observer will aid the participants in viewing themselvs in a sensible way.

The stationed circuit rider is seldom fitted for revival work, because he is usually required to exhibit some intelligence in the regular work, and habit is a powerful influence; consequently, only a few are able to suppress the tendency to use some reason in their discussions. Judging by knowledge acquired from attending revival meetings, reason and intelligence, or at least the use of such by a revivalist, are a great obstacle to success, and emotional appeals must be relied upon in such work. The preacher here made a great effort to fulfill these requirements and succeeded very well, save for his lack of emotional display. Being aware of this defect he brought a lady from Canton, O., to assist him. This lady possesses the emotional qualities in abundance.

It is both interesting and amusing at times to study the methods and observe the performances of such a combination. It may be discourteous to laugh at serious actions, but those witnessed at an old-time Methodist revival tend to disturb the composure of the most solemn persons, and I was unable to suppress all smiles at this revival.

Tuesday evening, January 23d, a large congregation, including a delegation of recent converts from Macksburg, gathered at the Methodist Episcopal church here and after the usual sermon and song service, some of the "mourners," there being a dozen or fifteen at the "mourners' bench," were "converted." This appeared to cause the lady from Canton and some other emotional people to "shout." The commotion soon became general, and probably forty or fifty people took part in the memorable scene that followed. It is safe to say that no similar event in modern times, considering the numbers engaged, has excelled this one. For probably two and a half hours those engaged in creating the tumult indulged themselvs in the most idiotic actions and hideous noises that could be produced. The noi e aroused the people in the village and surrounding country. Under such circumstances the audience could not be expected to keep its composure. Those who could crowd to the front did so. Others, whose view was obstructed, stood on top of the backs of the old-fashioned seats. The preacher repeatedly stood on top of the pulpit and tried to make himself heard, but could not. By his motions he seemed to be urging "sinners" to join with them.

I hav witnessed Free Methodist, Salvation Army, and colored camp-meeting scenes, but never saw nor heard anything of the kind that equaled this. Old residents tell me that forty and fifty years ago similar scenes were common, but that they never saw anything that excelled this.

If such a disturbance should occur at any other kind of an entertainment or meeting, those engaged in it would be considered either lunatics or savages. They would probably be arrested for riot and dealt with accordingly until lunacy was proven. In this age of the world only wilful or inexcusable ignorance of mental science or incapacity to understand its simplest truths, would cause anyone to consider such actions the result of God's blessing. Experimental religion, or "conversion" in the Methodist sense, is simply a delusion, and when the delusion becomes epidemic the subjects require the exercise of our charity, for by sympathetic imitation our actions and thoughts may be controled even against our judgment and deliberate convictions, the will simply permitting it. If an attempt be made to reason a person out of a delusion by demonstrating its complete inconsistency with the most obvious facts, the reply will usually be to this effect: "The evidence of my own feelings is stronger than any evidence which you can urge." Such people should hav our sympathy, but should be informed of their error, and made to see themselvs as others see them.

The arrogance and impudence of a Methodist revivalist is astounding and the boldness in displaying these qualities seems to paralyze an audience. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God," "Ye fools, when will ye be wise?" and similar statements found in the Bible are model phrases for a revivalist; but they forget that if Jehovah were a gentleman he would not use nor authorize the use of such language. They boldly tell us that we are the vilest of beings and hav the effrontery to call themselvs the saints—the good people—and invite us to join them and be good like themselvs, when to our certain knowledge they are, at least, no better than others. The position they assume is an insult to self-respecting opponents, and yet if we are inclined to defend ourselvs, they consider us worse than murderers, for murderers are usually "jerked to Jesus," and an unbeliever who smiles at the antics and ridiculous things he sees and hears at a revival meeting commits a sin against the Holy Ghost, whatever that may be. This particular Ghost is very sensitiv, too; consequently we are eternally damned for our smiles, and the thought seems to be a comfort to the orthodox pople.

If the energy worse than wasted at a religious revival could be expended in teaching moral and intellectual truths instead of religious nonsense, the community would not be disgraced by such uncivil exhibitions as we hav witnessed here. If the wealth and energy expended in propagating Christianity had been applied to advancing civilization, we might hav been spared the "dark ages;" and yet there are people who ask what our civilization would be without Christianity. Morals and manhood will not suffer by the absence of false doctrins, and it is much better to teach the truth.

W. J. DUTTON.

The Prophet is Grieved.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: My opponent accuses me of being unfair, in that he says that I do not admit that a note accepted by its author, in payment of an obligation due him, is redeemed. If a well-founded charge of unfairness could be brought against me, it would grieve me more than I can express, for I desire, above all things, to be absolutely fair. As to Mr. M.'s statement of this case, it seems to me not strictly in accordance with the facts, which are as follows: Mr. Peck had assumed that a paper dollar is redeemed when the holder gives it to another for value received, which prompted me to ask if his personal note would be redeemed by the holder transferring it to another for goods to the amount of its face? Mr. Macdonald answers this query by saying: "It will be seen that Mr. Peck is placed by his opponent in the position of the government confronted with one of its notes," which was not the case. He continues: "I imagin that, under the circumstances, Mr. Peck would say: 'The expenses of this government require the collection of taxes. Your share of the public burden is this amount; the note is for that amount. Take your receipt and your change—another note—and go to the devil.' The note has done it's work; it is redeemed." Mr. Peck's dollar, it is to be remembered, was not presented to the government in payment of a debt due it, but to another citizen in exchange for goods; yet Mr. Peck said it was thereby redeemed. Now, Mr. Macdonald presents it to its author, the government, in payment of taxes, and says, truly, that it is redeemed, because its maker accepts it. But the government always reissues these notes, and thus puts itself in the same position that Mr. Peck would occupy if he renewed his note at maturity, in which light I think my assertion that Mr. Peck's note had been "redeemed" by Mr Macdonald by an offer of renewal and an exhortation to the holder to go to the devil, not an unfair summary of the latter gentleman's plan of redemption; for it is clear that the government, by reissuing notes, keeps renewing its obligations as fast as it cancels them, and that the "work of a note" is never "done."

Mr. Macdonald begins his reply by making some pedagogical corrections in my arrangement of some of the words contained in what he terms "a startling proposition," though what there is startling about it, except the fact that Mr. Macdonald would hav expressed it very much better—which I admit—he neglects to inform us. Since he makes no claim, however, that the sense of the passage he corrects is obscure, it needs no further comment; but, lest he again accuse me of unfairness, let me say that one should stop writing against the truth the moment that he becomes aware of the fact that he has been antagonizing it, because many see the fallacious reasoning who never see the refutation. When Mr. Macdonald is convinced that his ideas about free silver coinage are fallacious, I do not doubt that he will be found on the other side, trying his utmost to convince others that national prosperity cannot possibly be engendered by enabling owners of silver to exchange forty-six cents' worth of silver for one hundred cents of value in other forms, which is exactly what opening the mints to the unlimited coinage of the white metal would, for a very short time, do. Resuming the discussion, my opponent assures me that cents do not circulate at all on the Pacific Slope, which I accept as being true, while insisting that such non-acceptance has no effect on the assertion that the circulation of fractional currency at its face value is due to governmental monopoly of such coinage, and to the fact that it is exchangeable for any other kind of money at the pleasure of the holder, because—by his own statement—such non-acceptance is entirely due to the fact that such coins are not needed. As to the judge who decided against a passenger who presented a two and a three-cent piece for a car fare, and was ejected from the car upon refusing a larger coin, it would seem as if this judicial luminary should be written down in the same terms as that other Dogberry, of whom Shakspere tells us, was desirous of being described; for the supreme law making power of the land—so far as legal-tender currency is concerned—has decreed that such coins shall be a legal tender for any debt less than a dollar. I think, however, that Mr. Macdonald had better review the case, for it seems impossible that he can be correct in his statement. Mr. Macdonald, then, seems to me to lack logic when he claims that some other causes than those under discussion must be found to explain the fact of their (the cents') currency where they are needed, because they do not circulate at all where not needed. If fractional currency did not pass at par where such coins are necessary, or if such coins were not redeemable, and their fabrication not a governmental monopoly, and they yet were taken at their face value, such conditions would force us to find other reasons; but, as neither of these contigencies is present, we rest our case, confident of receiving a favorable verdict.

Proceeding, Mr. Macdonald says it is plain, from my statement that few desire gold, if they are sure of getting it when they do want it, that one hundred of intrinsic value will float twelve and a half times as much money without intrinsic worth, and concludes therefrom that "a twelve and one-half per cent seigniorage" would protect the government credit under free coinage [of silver, presumably] as efficiently as the same proportion of gold now sustains the government's paper promises to pay." Desiring to avoid captiousness, I will not bear on the fact that the intrinsic value which at present sustains our currency at par, is in no sense seigniorage, and taking it for certain that my opponent is under no misapprehension of the fact that seigniorage is something quite different, I will proceed by calling his attention to the fact that not only does this intrinsic value in gold keep the "paper promises to pay" at the level of the purchasing power of the gold itself, but that it also sustains, at the same time and in the same degree, the silver dollars. If it were not within the ability of the government to giv gold, worth one hundred, in exchange for silver dollars, worth only forty-six, all the gold coin would disappear from circulation; for, silver man though he is, not even my friend Macdonald would let a coin of gold go out of his hand in exchange for less than half its value in silver. At this time the government, having nothing more valuable than silver with which to keep its promises to pay, silver will fall to its commercial value (at most), and will be the standard of our currency, and gold coins will again become a commodity, purchasable only at a premium in silver, or in paper money at the silver valuation. At this point my friend's claim that twelve and one-half per cent of silver, intrinsic value, would sustain our currency, just as gold does now, would be true, but prices would be found to hav risen, when one took these silver or paper dollars to market, in at least the proportion that gold, when computed in silver, had advanced. I would very much like to convince my opponent that this reasoning is sound, and therefore conclusiv as to the inadvisability of opening the mints to the free coinage of silver, for I think he is worth saving. Or, if he denies the validity of the argument, I hope that he will lay aside, for a brief period, his propensity to treat everything as a joke, and treat the subject seriously, for I firmly believe it to be invulnerable; but I will "come off" precipitately if I find it at all shaky.

Mr. Macdonald wonders at the "Prophet's" cocksure and mathematical statement of the cost ratio of silver to gold as being 34:1, on the ground that "the Western miners' association" made a report, about a year ago, which gave the cost of producing silver as being $1.20 an oz., and that of gold as $20 for the same quantity, naively adding that "of course, this expense includes the capital invested in unsuccessful mining ventures," which, he admits, "can only be roughly estimated." Macdonald has absolved me from the imputation of lacking appreciation for humor, but, at the risk of forfeiting his good opinion by accepting seriously what might be only some of George's nonsense, I must call to his attention the fact that the millions lost in unsuccessful mining ventures hav no effect on the present cost of producing silver or gold, as is clearly shown by his statement that, counting in those unsuccessful ventures, silver costs $1.20 per ounce to produce, while reference to any market report will show that that metal sells freely at about sixty cents, while mines enough to amply supply any likely demand are still at work producing silver to sell on a market that has a clear tendency downward. If George counted in all the unsuccessful ventures in the printing line, he would figure the cost of producing THE TRUTH SEEKER at about 'steen dollars a copy, while the retail price is about seven cents. Go to, George! That is a very bad argument or a very lame joke, just as you choose.

As to our money circulating abroad, it is certain that it has no greater currency, as money, than foreign money has here, which is virtually none at all. In conclusion, let me assure my opponent that the fact of a dollar being declared a legal tender, and being receivable for taxes, does not insure its circulating at gold value, since paying taxes is but a small part of the functions of money, and because the legal tender feature only applies to debts contracted before the passage of a legal-tender law, or before a financial crisis, since anyone is at liberty to refuse to sell if the money offered does not suit his notion.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Across the Continent.—Continued.

It was Sunday morning, April 1st, and we were speeding along across the great state of Kansas. We had crossed the Missouri River, and as far as the eye can see there is only a vast extent of level, flat land. Kansas City itself is delightfully situated on a bluff, or plateau, and must be, from its appearance, a beautiful and desirable place of residence as well as an enterprising city.

After crossing the Kansas, or Kaw River, the train stopped awhile, and some of the passengers went out and picked up shells from the banks where they had been washed by the overflow at some time. Then we resumed our journey across the state, 486 miles, taking nearly a day and a night. At noon we stopped for refreshment at Topeka, the state capital. We passed through rich and fertil fields, and through a fine coal section, coming to the Arkansas River near Hutchinson. It was here that a fellow-traveler, Mr. E. P. Hassinger, learning my name, said he had known of my work for years. It was pleasant to find a friend so far from home, and we had a delightful conversation. Mr. Hassinger is intending to establish a hotel at Hutchinson. I afterward met several others who knew me well by reputation, and many favors and attentions were bestowed upon the editor of the Corner in the way of fruit, confectionery, and the contents of dainty lunch-boxes. We looked out at Osage City. The land, as far as the eye can see, stretches out like the ocean, a straight, level, flat surface, and we rode miles and miles without seeing a single habitation. The early afternoon found us at Emporia, and I noted wide fields of winter wheat rising upward from the soft soil. And as I looked, there in the distance I saw a "prairie schooner." "What is that?" you Easterners inquire, as I did. It is a great white-covered wagon, with a stove-pipe projecting from the top, slowly drawn by a couple of horses, and a black dog following behind. It contains a family and their household belongings, and they are sailing over the prairies to a new home in the West.

What a vast country is ours, growing larger and larger all the way as we travel on. It is marvelous. Western people are large-hearted, free, and easy to get acquainted with.

I was much amused watching the people and listening to the conversation. Among the passengers were Mrs. Munson and her daughter Agnes, a pretty, sweet-faced girl of fourteen. Mrs. Munson entertained me with an account of her residence in the Indian Territory, and of life generally in a new settlement. Her husband took up some land in the territory, and she went there to liv while he was away on some business. Well, she had a trying time of it. There were no windows in the log-house, and she was obliged to keep a light burning all the time. Snakes were plenty, not excepting rattlesnakes, and they made themselvs familiar, coming into the house (that is, the common snakes) quite frequently. They coiled in the hens' nests, killed chickens, and swallowed eggs whole. She was obliged to keep water boiling all the time, to scald the serpents who tried so hard to be sociable. At one time there were two "sarpints" in the house, and while she was scalding one, the other made precipitate egress under the door-sill. Once, upon retiring, she found a snake comfortably reposing in her bed, and immediately chopped off his head. Her nearest neighbor was a mile away, and she had never forgiven her husband for taking her to such a wild country, and then leaving her to battle with the snakes. I certainly did not blame her.

It was Sunday, April 1st, but there was no sacredness attached to the day out there on the plains. Instead of Bible reading there were games of euchre, and prayers were superseded by palmistry. Most of the travelers, including the conductor of the train, gathered around a lady who generously read the palms of her traveling companions; they eagerly listening to her revelations and predictions.

It is an experience never to be forgotten to be out on the wide prairies of the West, whose solitude is like the sea. Thoughts would turn, however, every now and then to the Eastern hills and valleys over which was written in large, bright letters the sweet word, "home."

A little group in the chair cars complained that the railroad company, although bestowing plenty of water, furnished neither soap nor towels to dusty, way-worn travelers. Arriving at the next station, a young gentleman volunteered to find some soap and proudly reappeared bearing aloft triumphantly a cake of toilet soap, when there was a scramble as to which of the party should hav the first use of the same, a lady agreeing to supply towels from her satchel. A goodly quantity of the real estate of Kansas had gathered upon the countenances of the wearied wanderers, which being removed, introductions were in order, as individuals presented an entirely different appearance after ablutions, which led to a discussion of the advantages of cleanliness and godliness. It is needless to say the decision was in favor of the former.

To change the scene, at one little station the whole party ran out and inquired of the loungers on the platform where the distinguished people of the town lived—that they desired to call on the prominent citizens, etc.

"There ain't no prominent citizens here," was the reply; "all just alike."

"But where's the mayor?" was the next query.

"No mayor in this town; every man for himself here."

The company thought it was a novel town and laughed at the good joke.

Correspondence.

OSCEOLA, IA., March 23, 1894.

MISS SUSAN WIXON—Dear Friend: I hav never seen a letter from Clarke county in the Corner yet, and as the saying is, there is alwavs room for one more, I still hav hopes that there is left one vacant place, which just this much and no more can fill, if it is not used to fill the wastebasket. Father has taken this paper—THE TRUTH SEEKER—for nine years, and never got tired of it yet. We hav the first paper that was sent to us. Well, for fear of that dangerous wastebasket, I will close.

Yours with respect. MYRTLE JONES.

[Myrtle is very welcome.—ED. C. C.]

MOODY, TEX., March 19, E.M. 294.

MISS WIXON: As it has been raining, and I hav plenty of time, I will write to the Corner. I wrote about six years ago. There are a good many Liberals living around here. A young Christian school teacher is teaching arithmetic in school at night. He teaches every other night. Last Friday a preacher of the same denomination came along and wanted to hold a meeting at the school-house, but the teacher would not giv way for his own denomination; so in order to carry on the meeting, they had to go to a neighbors' house to preach every other night; but I think the meeting is broken up. It has rained to-day till the valleys look like small lakes all over them. I will close by asking some of the writers of the Corner to write to me. W. A. SIMMONS.

SANGER, CAL., Feb. 25, E.M. 294.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I liv three and a half miles from Sanger. My papa's right eye is sore, so he rented the place this year to his two brothers. I hav three sisters and one brother. I and my sister just younger go to school. Our teacher's name is Prof. G. D. Hinds, and he is a church member. The wild flowers are in bloom here. My papa and mamma are both Liberals. I liv a half mile from the school-house. This morning I heard the Salvation Army beating away, and wasting precious time that they can never make up again. Papa and mamma belong to the F. A. & I. U., and are opposed to churches and Sundav-schools. I will be glad to see this in print.

I remain your Liberal friend,
LILLIE ROSE.

[Tell the Corner about Sanger next time, all about the town.—ED. C. C.]

GOLDTHWAITE, TEX., Feb. 26, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter. I will tell you my age. I am fourteen years old. I go to school. My teacher's name is Miss Mary Lou Graves. She is an unmarried lady, and her age is twenty-two. She has taught here two terms. We hav been having bad weather for the past week. It snowed here on Friday last. It wasn't very deep. I will close for this time. I would like to correspond with some boy or girl.

I am your friend, MATTIE BOYES.

[Mattie might tell us something about Texas.—ED. C. C.]

ELBERTON, GA., March 3, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: You asked me to tell what a Freethinker is. A Freethinker is one who does not allow anyone else to think for him, on any subject at all, especially religion. One who thinks for himself.

To-day is my eldest sister's birthday. Elberton has three churches and two schools in it. I used to go to Sunday-school, but I havn't been in a long time. I go to school every day I can. I love to go to school. Yours truly, OLIVE BELL.

[Learn all that is possible. Scientific knowledge is valuable.—ED. C. C.]

ROANOKE, VA., March 1, 1894.

DEAR MISS SUSAN AND READERS OF THE CORNER: It has been a long time since I wrote to the Corner. The Christian scapegoats of this community are holding a revival just opposit our house every night. I was there one night, when one of the good men asked me to join the church, but I told him "No, thank you." I happened in one day at a lawyer's office where I heard some farmers talking about the Atheists; then I told these farmers about my dream. I commenced as follows: I dreamt I was down visiting the devil, and he was carrying me through his palace, showing me where he kept the different denominations and how he treated them; but I didn't see anv farmers, and I said to him (the devil). "Where are the farmers?" And he said, "Around here, come with me." I went, and inside of a red-hot room was a lot of farmers hanging by their necks, and the fire was just burning and crackling under them. I said. "What do you hang them up by their necks and roast them for?" And he answered me, saying, "Because the farmers are so d—n green that they hav to be dried before I can burn them!" I never heard any more from those farmers about Atheists. Now, I don't mean what I said about farmers all being green, because there are some mighty shrewd farmers, especially their daughters. I just told them about my dream, so they would hush their mouths about the Atheists, and they did.

I am very sorry to see so small a number of letters in the Corner, and I think if we larger boys and girls would write more, it would induce the smaller ones to write. Now let us larger boys and girls pitch in and try to keep our Corner to correspond with other Corners in other papers. It would be a disgrace for our Corner to run aground when there are enough of us to keep it going. Now, let us see if we can't hav more letters.

I am going to Philadelphia in a day or two, and when I get there, I will tell you all about my trip.

I will be glad if some of the boys and girls will write to me. I will close before my letter gets too monotonous.

Wishing good luck to the Corner, and more letters, yours, CHARLIE POWER.

[There are letters enough, Charlie. We hav a huge pile on hand all the time, but not space enough to print them.—ED. C. C.]

BLASPHEMY.
Argument by R. G. Ingersoll in the Trial of C. B. Reynolds, at Morristown, N. J. This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled in a trial for "blasphemy." Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

WHAT MUST WE DO TO BE SAVED?
Analyzes the so-called gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, and devotes a chapter each to the Catholics, Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Evangelical Alliance, and answers the question of the Christians as to what he proposes instead of Christianity—the religion of sword and flame. Paper, 25 cents.

THE GREAT INGERSOLL CONTROVERSY.
The famous Christmas Sermon by Colonel Ingersoll, the heated replies of the ministers, and Colonel Ingersoll's rejoinders to the same. Paper, 25 cents.

PROSE-POEMS AND SELECTIONS.
Fifth edition, enlarged and revised. A handsome quarto, containing 383 pages. This is, beyond question, the cheapest and most elegant volume in Liberal literature. Its mechanical finish is worthy of its intrinsic excellence. No expense has been spared to make it the thing of beauty it is. The type is large and clear, the paper heavy, highly calendered, and richly tinted, the presswork faultless, and the binding as perfect as the best materials and skill can make it.
As to the contents, it is enough to say that they include all of the choicest utterances of the greatest writer on the topics treated that has ever lived.
Those who have not the good fortune to own all of Mr. Ingersoll's published works, will have in this book of selections many bright samples of his lofty thought, his matchless eloquence, his wonderful imagery, and his epigrammatic and poetic power. The collection includes all of the "Tributes" that have become famous in literature—notably those to his brother E. C. Ingersoll, Lincoln, Grant, Beecher, Conkling, Courtlandt M. Palmer, Mary Fiske, Elizur Wright: his peerless monographs on "The Vision of War," Love, Liberty, Art and Morality, Science, Nature, The Imagination, Decoration Day Oration, What is Poetry, Music of Wagner, Origin and Destiny, "Leaves of Grass," and on the great heroes of intellectual Liberty. Besides these are innumerable gems taken here and there from the orations, speeches, arguments, toasts, lectures, letters, interviews, and day by day conversations of the author.
The book is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac-simile, has been prepared especially for it. In the more elegant styles of binding it is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.
PRICES.—In cloth, beveled boards, gilt edges, $2.50; in half morocco, gilt edges, $5; in half calf, mottled edges, library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible finish, $9.

Any of the above sent to any address, by express, prepaid, or mail, post free, on receipt of price. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Just Out.—25 Cents—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.
We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about

1300 MINISTERS HAVE BEEN GUILTY

of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.
Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sorts of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria, the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets, Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town, the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portuguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America, Materials of Human History.

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History, Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love.

Price reduced from $1.75 to $1.00. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around, and the stay-at-home to see where he went.
A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

The Creation of God.

By DR. JACOB HARTMANN.

An explanation of the origin of the God Idea, and the mental processes that led to the formation of idols and the worship of them. From the time of Terah's apostasy, Abraham's reformation and his banishment for heresy and blasphemy against the Chaldean idols, to Christ's coming, the principal characters are analyzed and shown to be human, by thought and deed. It is made plain that the peculiar phraseology, cant sayings, subterfuges, miracles, wonder-workings, and supernatural padding are the proper offspring of the then existing barbarism, ignorance, and superstition, constituting the peculiar politics of the day.

WOMAN: FOUR CENTURIES OF PROGRESS. by Susan H. Wixon. Price, 10 cents.

This is, in my opinion, one of the best pamphlets for missionary work yet published by the Truth Seeker Company.

Since women are the mainstay of the Christian churches, our chief aim is to get them interested in Freethought, and Miss Wixon has given us a splendid lecture which can be used for this purpose. Her style is clear and forcible and her arguments convincing, and the pamphlet deserves, and no doubt will hav, a wide circulation.

I wish also to call attention to another pamphlet: "The Crime of 1893: Russia and America." By Wm. H. Galvani. Published by the Jones-Morris Publishing House, Portland, Or. Price, 15 cents. This little book will add much to Galvani's already well-known reputation as a writer. The pamphlet is a review of the treaty recently concluded between Russia and our government No one is more fitted to write intelligently on this subject than Wm. Galvani, who, being born and having spent most of his life in Russia, has himself seen and studied the state of affairs in that sorrow-stricken country. Every lover of liberty in every country should read this little book; should become acquainted with the gross injustice our government has perpetrated in this movement, and should enter his protest against this, our country's "compact with tyranny." Never before hav I read so much of truth and of value in sixty-three pages.

THREE INTRODUCTORY LECTURES ON THE SCIENCE OF THOUGHT. By F. Max Müller, Chicago: The Open Court Publishing Company. Price, 25 cents.

Professor Müller maintains that language is identical with thought. He says there is no such thing as reason, and asks if we hav come honestly by that substantiv. In a letter to a friend who urges objections against this position of the great philologist, Professor Müller says: "Reason is something, namely language, not simply as we now hear it and use it, but as it has been slowly elaborated by man through all the ages of his existence on earth. Reason is the growth of centuries, it is the work of man, and at the same time an instrument brought to higher and higher perfection by the leading thinkers and speakers of the world. No reason without language, no language without reason. Try to reckon without numbers, whether spoken, written, or otherwise marked, and if you succeed in that, I shall admit that it is possible to reason or reckon without words, and that there is in us such a thing, or such a power or faculty, as reason, apart from words. . . . Some people seem to resent it almost as a personal insult that what we call our divine reason should be no more than human language, and that the whole of this human language should hav been derived from no more than eight hundred roots, which can be reduced to about one hundred and twenty concepts. But if I had wished to startle my readers, I could easily hav shown that out of these eight hundred roots, one-half could really hav been dispensed with, and has been dispensed with in modern languages, while among the one hundred and twenty concepts not a few are clearly secondary, and owe their place in my list merely to the fact that in Sanskrit they cannot be reduced to any more primitiv concepts. To dance, for instance, cannot be called a primitiv concept; perhaps not even to hunger, to thirst, to cook, to roast, etc. Only it so happens that in Sanskrit, to which my statistical remarks were restricted, we cannot go behind such roo s as NART, KSHUDH, TARSH, PAK, etc. It is in that limited sense only that such roots and such concepts can be called primitiv. The number of really primitiv concepts would be so alarmingly small that for the present it seemed wiser to say nothing about it. But so far from being ashamed of our modest beginnings, we ought really to glory rather in having raised our small patrimony to the immense wealth now hoarded in our dictionaries."

There follow the "Three Introductory Lectures" thirteen letters from eminent scientists and literary people in criticism of the professor's views, and a communication from him in reply thereto, all reprinted from Nature.

THE FLAMING METEOR. Poetical Works of Will Hubbard-Kernan. Biography by Hon. John R. Clymer. Portrait. Chicago: Charles H. Kerr & Co. Cloth. Price, $1.50.

Above the pen name of "Kenneth Lamar" most of the poems in this handsome volume appeared in the New York Mercury and Meriwether's Weekly, and in various papers in Iowa and other Western states, of which Mr. Kernan was editor Mr. Kernan's extreme views on political questions—he was editor of the famous States, of Okohona, Mississippi—hav done much to prevent the recognition of his great merits as a poet. But it seems certain that the future will giv him credit for the possession of talents of no mean order. He is often compared to Poe, and it cannot be denied that many of his productions at once call to mind the out-pourings of that somber genius.

The contents of this book are classified as "Poems of Pessimism," "Melodies of Misogamy," "Poems of Passing Moods," "Agnostic Arguments," and "Poems Political."

Here are a few stanzas from the poem, "Per Castra Ad Astra:"

"Per castra ad astra"—through camps to the stars—
Ran the demagog legend of old:
It glowed on the banners borne forth to the wars
By the soldiers believing and bold.

When torn by the spears of the truculent foe,
And trampled by hoof and by heel,
They were taught that their glorified spirits would go
Straightway to the Land of the Leal.

Poor dupes of proud devils! They thought if they gave
Of their blood to the glory of kings
They would sweep forth, transfigured, from out of the grave
With a flash of white, fluttering wings!

"Per castra ad astra"—the lie has come down
Through cycles and conquests unknown;
And still it stirs men to march forth for the crown,
And with bayonets prop up the throne;

And still it stirs many to barter the bloom
And the song and the sunlight of time,
For the hope of a blessing beyond the bleak tomb
In a vague and invisible clime.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE.

The beginning of an epoch is always a fitting time for retrospection, and the activ awakening of both man and woman at the present day to the latter's worth and rights to co recognition marks a period where a right view of the past can well be taken and the subject of cause and effect clearly considered. In "Woman, Church, and State," Matilda Joslyn Gage has formulated a collection of far reaching historic facts which in themselvs are silent arguments for the progressiv cause the author so ably champions. Its pages teem with examples of oppression that bear mute witness to the patient endurance and long-suffering of women because of their sex—virtues which in themselvs should at least demonstrate their equality with their persecutors.

From the earliest days of written history to the present time, the author cites the countries and their treatment of women, and many a poignant truism does she evolve.

Filled as the book is with statistical facts, it is yet free from the uninterestingness usually the companion thereof; for the author has interwoven a personality into her writing that keeps awakened the interest throughout.

It is a woman writing about women. And who can better appreciate the subject?

Taken in its entirety, it is treated in a manner that calls for the highest praise, and the work cannot but prove a valuable addition to the literature of progressiv thinkers of the day.

As must seemingly be the case with all writings of advanced thought, the writer has lost sight, in several instances, of the necessity of policy in general as well as individual association and some of the conclusions and inferences drawn are open to criticism on the ground of expedient concessions to the laws of cause and effect.

Naturally, also, there are a few inaccuracies, but they are of minor detail, such, for example, as classing the Christian Register of this city as a recognized organ of the Episcopal church.

But the general truths are not thereby affected, and it may well be "addressed to all persons who, breaking away from custom and the usages of ages, dare seek Truth for the sake of Truth." To all such it will be welcome; to all others aggresiv and educational.—Boston Ideas.

Miss Wixon has taken as her motioes in writing this beautiful book of 292 pages—which she has dedicated to the memory of her father and mother—these sentences from the works of a great synthetic philosopher and a gifted liberal minister:

As with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not.—Herbert Spencer.

Living is an Art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the Arts.—Thomas Starr King.

RELIGION A CURSE,
RELIGION A DISEASE,
RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

Gems of Thought.

THE equality of man is written in the difference.—Katherine Mabley Corbett.

GIV me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties.—Milton.

RELIGIONS themselvs are never new. Buckle declared that he who affirmed that Christianity contained any new teaching was guilty of either ignorance or fraud. If Buckle's life had been spared, he might hav been able to say that Christianity lived in its earliest days because it absorbed Eastern ideas, and that it livs now because it adopts secular methods.—Furneaux Jordan.

LET church organizations, if they so choose, frown upon dissenters and look upon those in pity or resentment who differ from them in their convictions. Before the law of a free land, of a nation of freemen z alous to preserve their inalienable rights, Jew and gentile, skeptic and Agnostic, must not be discriminated against. The unbeliever, if a loyal citizen, shares with the believer the same rights of citizenship.—Rev. L. Stern, in Jewish Messenger.

JOHN MORLEY says with truth: "One reason why so many persons are really shocked and pained by the avowal of heretical opinions is the very fact that such avowal is uncommon. If unbelievers and doubters were more courageous, believers would be less timorous. It is because they liv in an enervating fool's paradise of seeming assent and conformity, that the breath of an honest and outspoken word strikes so eager and nipping on their sensibilities." The time is pretty sure to come to all when they must speak out what is in them or play the hypocrit. Who can doubt which is the manly part?—J. M. Wheeler.

THE present generation of Americans has been reared largely on the most dangerous stimulants. Of course, all wise men know that every spree has its penalty. This country is now sobering up. It is particularly hard on the rising generation that has not been accustomed to economy and to the ordinary hardships of life. It is hard even on the older inhabitants and pioneers, but these hav had some experience on the dead level, and hav long since learned that the boom of a whole nation is quite as unstable and much more dangerous than the boom of a single district or town. A boom is a boom, and ultimately every boom must explode and blow its army of visionary mortals to kingdom come.—Galveston News.

BUT suppose that Christianity, as the nominal religion of the majority of citizens, were adopted as the religion of the state; even then the confusion would not be ended. Shall the state be Catholic or Protestant, orthodox or liberal? Shall it acknowledge the infallibility of the church and pope, or adopt the Bible as an infallible guide? What doctrin shall be set forth in the creed, and what condemned as heretical? What rites and forms shall be prescribed? To entertain such questions is to remove the foundation of republican government and to revive the doctrins and assumptions out of which grew the Inquisition with all its bloody horrors, and make the stake and the fagot once more the terror of dissenters from the orthodox faith.—Oliver Johnson.

THE community at large has an instinctiv distrust for all parade of religion; for all pretentious and obtrusiv piety. The man who should every morning, before opening his business for the day, summon his employees around him and "recognize God" by leading them in public prayer, would lose business and become an object of general distrust, not because people generally distrust religion, but because they hav a wholesome dread of false pretenses. The general instinct does not err. The man who carries his religion on his sleeve; who makes an advertisment of it and uses it to attract attention to himself and his merits, is generally what people take him to be. Neither in business nor in politics nor anywhere else is it safe to trust those who thus proclaim their religion on the corners of the streets. At the opening of the French Revolution there was an admirable illustration of this species of pharisaism. The Girondins, representing the moderate and conservativ element of the French Republicans, were opposed to any profession of theocratic government, but another element insisted that "God must be recognized." This element was the Jacobins, with Robespierre as their leader, and they carried the day. As the champion of the almighty, Robespierre forced through a complimentary reference t the "supreme being," declaring that the republic was inaugurated under his "auspices." This done, the Jacobins proceeded to decapitate the king and to set up the guillotin in the Place de la Revolution —all "under the auspices of the supreme being!"—St. Louis Republic.

☞ I wish to say that I am an out-and-out LIBERAL, and I trust the Freethinkers of the land will give me their patronage and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.—Dr. Fellows.

Not for Parsons.

SON: "Father, why do they call preachers doctors of divinity?" Father (of the old school): "Because so many preachers doctor divinity to suit their own ideas."—Puck.

"ROSS intimated he was very activ in church work. What's his special line?" "He sends New Year's cards to the poor and gets up fasting clubs among the destitute during Lent."—Puck.

"GADSBY, the evangelist who went out West, was shot dead recently." "How did it happen?" "During a camp-meeting he turned suddenly on a cowboy, and asked if he was prepared to die."—Puck.

MAMMA (reprovingly, Sunday): "You told me you were going to play church." Little Dick: "Yes'm." "Then I'd like to know what all this loud laughing is about." "Oh, that's Dot and me. We're the choir."

THE pessimist: "Do you really think the world will ever be Christianized?" The optimist: "You bet I do. And at the rate the heathen are being wiped out by these machine guns nowadays it won't be long, either."

"YES, Grabbit is not only a hoarder and miser, but has the faculty of acquisition developed in him to an extraordinary degree. He wants everything he sees that he can get for nothing." "Why, I thought Grabbit was a Christian." "There, that just shows him. He is a Christian. The moment he heard salvation was free, he froze to it."

"YOUR crop seems to be considerably in the grass," said a passer-by to a negro who sat on the fence. "Yes, sah, General Green's dun got it." "Did you overplant yourself?" "No, sar; planted 'bout 'nuff." "Why didn't you plow it?" "Wife tuk sick. She does the plowin' fur dis place. 'What does I do?' I preaches, dat's what I does. Ef providence comes along and makes de 'oman sick, I kain't help it. Ise been called, I has."—Arkansas Traveler.

MRS. DEXTER has often told her five-year-old daughter, Julie, that she was never alone, because God was always with her. One day Mrs. Dexter left Julie alone in the room while she went to the drawing-room to see a visitor. When she came back she said feelingly, "Why, Julie, hav you been all this time alone? I thought nurse was coming in!" Julie: "Oh, I havn't been alone, mamma, because you see, Dod was with me; but he's dretful poor company."—Brooklyn Life.

THERE was a backward student at Baliol who, for failure to pass an examination in Greek, was "sent down." His mother went to see the master, the late Dr. Jowett, and explained to him what an excellent lad her son was. "It is a hard experience for him, this disgrace," said the old lady; "but he will hav the consolation of religion, and there is always one book to which he can turn." Dr. Jowett eyed her for a moment, and then answered, "Yes, madam; the Greek grammar. Good morning."

WHILE Miss Louis was instructing her infant class last Sunday in the Congregational Sunday-school she was interrupted by Master Pixley, who suddenly conceived an idea, and with great emphasis remarked, "God can see us, but we can't him. He is right here, he is everywhere, he can see right through iron." Little Gladys Uhl (one of the twins) with much expression, said, "Yes, of course, if it's got a hole in it." A smile went around the class, and a sudden digression followed.—Exchange.

"IT's a great secret," said the canny Scot, "but I'll tell you in confidence. The folk I saw, maistly gave three-penny bits. Weel, when I got the money every Sabbath evening, I carefully picked oot the sma' coins and put them by. Noo, as there's only a limited number of three-penny pieces in a little place like this, and as I hav maist o' them at present under lock and key, the folk maun giv sixpences, at least instead. Sae, that's the way the collections are doubled."—Spare Moments.

"I TELL you, William," said a Columbia county sheriff to a farmer whom he was endeavoring to hav meet a cut-throat note, "you'll hav to hustle and pay up, or we will put you in limbo." The old farmer, after his departure, was puzzled to know what limbo meant and sought the country squire. It was very dark for the justice, but after diligently searching Pruden's "Digest" for half an hour, he exclaimed. "I've got it, Bill! Limbo means the outskirts of hell." "Gee whiz!" snorted the old man, looking frightened to death. "Can it be possible that a measly Columbia county deputy sheriff has the power to put a fellow in a place like that? I guess I'd better settle up."—Wilkesbarre Daily Newsdealer.

News of the Week.

A MEDICAL monopoly bill is before the New Jersey legislature.

SEVERAL persons were killed in a labor riot in Denver on April 18th.

THE Great Northern railroad has been tied up by strikers for several days.

THE House of Representativs has adopted a rule for counting a quorum.

NELSON J. WATERBURY, one of the oldest and best-known New York lawyers, died April 22d.

SIX or seven Coxey armies, in different parts of the country, are now enroute to Washington.

THE typhoid epidemic at Montclair, N. J., has extended to Bloomfield. It was initiated by bad milk.

CHARLES W. SMITH, an eleven year old boy, died in Brooklyn last week from the effects of vaccination.

HENRY S. IVES, the erstwhile "Napoleon of Finance," died of consumption at Asheville, N. C., April 17.

MAYOR HOPKINS of Chicago is trying to reform the police force of that city by discharging captains and inspectors.

The supreme court of Colorado sustains Governor Waite in his action removing members of the Denver police board.

MORRISON L. SWIFT, of Boston, has issued a petition to Congress asking the government to giv work to every one.

FRANCE thinks that the betrothal of the Russian czarowitz to Princess Alice of Hesse is a blow aimed by Germany at France.

THERE was a labor riot in Cleveland on April 20. It grew out of dissatisfaction with the very small pay received by street workmen.

AT East St. Louis a year's work, at $1.50 per day, was offered to two hundred of General Frye's industrial army. The offer was refused.

GOVERNOR CARR of North Carolina has appointed Ex-Governor Thomas H. Jarvis to succeed Z. B. Vance, deceased, in the United States Senate.

THE miner's strike may bring about a clash in Alabama. The militia are under arms, as fears are entertained of attacks on the prison stockades.

PROHIBITION carried in Nova Scotia four to one. Manitoba voted nearly three to one in favor, and Ontario gave a majority of nearly 90,000. These votes are phenomenal and unexplainable.

THE Immigrant Bureau of New York finds itself unable to get laborers enough to meet all the demands made upon it. Recruits for Coxey's army of the unemployed are also being obtained in this city.

GREECE has been visited with repeated and destructiv earthquakes. Thebes was almost entirely destroyed, as were many small villages. Athens was badly shaken. Churches fell in upon worshipers. In all, hundreds of lives hav been lost.

THE Supreme Court of South Carolina, by a majority decision of two to one, hands down the opinion that the Tillman dispensary law is unconstitutional. Governor Tillman has bowed to the authority of the court and ordered the dispensaries closed.

ABOUT 130,000 bituminous coal miners went out on strike at noon Saturday, April 21st. More are expected to join the movement soon, and if the strike continues long the evil will be aggravated by the forced suspension of work by manufactories dependent upon the closed coal mines for fuel.

THE Boston detachment of Coxey's "army" was mobbed on the Common last Sunday. The crowd of 30,000 people seemed to be heartily in unison with the "army's" leaders in their demands for state farms and workshops and government ownership of about everything, but the army was scattered and its banners torn into shreds. It next gathered at Hyde Park and marched to Dedham.

FOR a few days serious trouble was threatened at Omaha and Council Bluffs. The Iowa-Chicago railroads refused to furnish trains for the free transportation of Kelly's division of the Commonweal "army." Between 6,000 and 8,000 men marched over from Omaha and seized a train in the Council Bluffs yards. This was manned and sent to Kelly at Weston, ten miles out. Kelly refused to accept the train, as it had been taken unlawfully. Tracks are torn up and few trains running. The "army," about two thousand strong, is now marching across Iowa, being fed by the farmers.

CONWAY'S EDITION

OF

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

COLLECTED, EDITED, AND CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED

By MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY.

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," "Omitted Chapters of History Disclosed in the Life and Papers of Edmund Randolph," etc.

Four Volumes, Royal Octavo, Gilt Tops, Uniform with the Editor's "Life of Paine." Price per Volume, $2.50.

An edition of one hundred and fifty numbered copies bound in half leather, gilt tops, uniform with the limited editions of "The Writings of Washington," "The Writings of Jefferson," etc. Price, per volume, $4.

For the general reader the $3 edition of Paine's works is sufficient, as it contains all of his writings upon which his fame substantially rests. But for those who desire to go deeper into the subject of the man and polemic we can most unreservedly commend the "Life of Paine" by Mr. Conway, and this edition of Paine's works edited by him It is the fullest that we are likely to have, and the student of history, and particularly the writer, should have it upon his shelves.

The work will consist of four volumes, and will be arranged chronologically. The cause of America, as Paine said, made him an author, and the first volume will cover the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1774. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay, and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvani Magazine; these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The second volume will consist mainly of the "Rights of Man," and pamphlets relating to English politics, but will also contain certain papers on French affairs.

The third and fourth volumes will consist mainly of Paine's religious writings, but will also contain some essays relating to American affairs, written in his last years. At the close will be given Paine's poems.

The first volume is now ready for delivery, and the others will follow soon. Orders for the whole set will be taken and filled as the volumes appear, or the volumes can be purchased separately. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.
Descartes.	Kepler.	Pestalozzi.	Cervantes.	Goethe.	French Salon.	Bradlaugh.	Harriet Martineau.
Locke.	Da Vinci.	Froebel.	Marlowe.	George Sand.	French Revolution.	Garrison.	Frances Wright.
Hume.	Newton.	Combe.	Shakspere.	George Eliot.		Phillips.	Lucretia Mott.
Hobbs.	Humboldt.	Spencer.	Gibbon.	Victor Hugo.	Thomas Paine.	Parker.	Ernestine L. Rose.
Kant.	Lyell.	Owen.	Burns.	Emerson.	Jefferson.	Sumner.	Lydia Maria Child.
Hamilton.	Darwin.	Holyoake.	Shelley.	Heine.	Mazzinni.	Lincoln.	Margaret Fuller.
Comte.	Tyndall.	Haeckel.	Byron.	Thoreau.	Bentham.	Bakounine.	Elizabeth Cady Stanton.
Büchner.	Huxley.	Girard	Pushkin.	Whitman.	Mill.	Warren.	Susan B. Anthony.
Feuerbach.		Lick.	Tcherny-chewsky.	Ingersoll.	Garabaldi.	Petrofsky.	Matilda Joslyn Gage.
					Heinzen.		Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens.	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

The Kyle Sunday Bill.

The contradictions, absurdities, puerilities, fallacies, and tyrannies in the Kyle Sunday Bill are almost innumerable. Section one reads as follows, less the enacting clause:

"That no person or corporation or agent, servant, or employee of any person or corporation shall perform or authorize to be performed any secular work, labor, or business to the disturbance of others, works of necessity and mercy and humanity excepted; nor shall any person engage in any play, game, or amusement or recreation to the disturbance of others on the first day of the week, commonly known as the Lord's day, or during any part thereof, in any territory, district, vessel, or place subject to the exclusiv jurisdiction of the United States; nor shall it be lawful for any person or corporation to receive pay for labor or service performed or rendered in violation of this section."

Why should the citizen be denied the right to perform any "secular" work on Sunday, when he is, by the absence of any prohibition, granted the privilege of performing "sacred" work? Why should the preacher, the priest, the church organist, the choir singer, the church usher, be given special privileges? Is not this a discrimination by the law-making power in favor of certain classes and against other classes? Is not this a distinct recognition of religious agents as persons apart from and superior to all other laborers and men and women of business? By what principle of equal justice and under authority of what article or section of the Constitution does Senator Kyle presume to say that the railway conductor has less right to pursue his ordinary vocation on Sunday than the clergyman has to pursue his?

But, we are told, no secular work is to be performed "to the disturbance of others." Why not, then, trust to general laws, which are good enough to prevent such disturbance on the other days of the week? Is the Wednesday evening prayer meeting less "sacred" than the Sunday morning service? And why should people be protected from "secular" disturbers by a special law for one day when they are not protected from "sacred" disturbers on the same day?

Plays, games, and amusements must not be engaged in on Sunday "to the disturbance of others." The plain inference is that they may be engaged in on Monday or Friday, no matter how much they disturb those not engaged in them. But such disturbance is not allowed under the laws now in force. What is disturbance on one day is disturbance on all days. No law particularly for Sunday is needed. The truth is, some people would be "disturbed" by a game of base ball or a Sunday concert ten or a thousand miles distant, if they knew either was to take place. Such people are the ones who inspire or draft these statutes against Sunday work and amusements. All that is needed to "disturb" these persons and set them to clamoring for special legislation to protect their nerves and opinions is to do something they do not approve, such, for instance, as riding on a train, or attending a performance at the theater.

"Sec. 2. That no mails or mail matter shall hereafter be transported in time of peace over any land postal route, nor shall any mail matter be collected, assorted, handled, or delivered during any part of the first day of the week: Provided, That whenever any letter shall relate to a work of necessity or mercy, or shall concern the health, life, or decease of any person, and the fact shall be plainly stated upon the face of the envelope containing the same, the postmaster-general shall provide for the transportation of such letter or letters in packages separate from other mail matter, and shall make regulations for the delivery thereof, the same having been received at its place of destination before the said first day of the week, during such limited portion of the day as shall best suit the public convenience and least interfere with the due observance of the day as one of worship and rest: And provided further, That when there shall hav been an interruption in the due and regular transmission of the mails, it shall be lawful to so far examin the same when delivered as to ascertain if there be such matter therein for lawful delivery on the first day of the week."

The transportation and distribution of the mails is a government monopoly. The citizen is forbidden to avail himself of any other means of transmitting letters, under penalty of paying to the government as a fine the full amount of postage if he sends a letter by any other agent, and this in addition to the private agent's charges. The consequence is that the people hav come to depend upon the postal department of the government to transport and distribute all their correspondence. They are at the mercy of any faction which may, by any means, be able to procure the adoption of such a statute as this proposed by Senator Kyle. Yet if the citizens had provided themselvs with other agencies for shipment of mails, Section 3 of this bill would, if adopted, render those agencies of no use, as that section forbids inter-state commerce on Sunday. So this bill amounts to a prohibition of inter-state transportation of mails on Sunday and of all distribution on that day, and is intended to be such. This is a flagrant denial of citizen rights for which there is not the shadow of an excuse. No one is injured, nor need be injured, by the transportation and distribution of mails on Sunday. On the other hand, millions would be inconvenienced and injured were this bill to become law. Large numbers of people in thousands of cities, towns, and villages depend upon the Sunday morning opening of the post-offices for their reading on that day, which is their one period of leisure. Then they obtain their Sunday papers, and many weekly papers do not arrive before that time. There are also letters, magazines, and miscellaneous mail matter which they want to get at the earliest hour possible. They hav an undoubted right to this accommodation. They pay for it and no other class is justified in denying it to them. If postmasters and their clerks do not want to distribute on Sunday they are not compelled to do so; there are any number of people well qualified for the positions who will gladly do the work. The postmaster is a servant of the people, and no one should accept an office whose duties he knows he cannot perform without violence to his conscience. The patrons of the office hav rights which must be respected, and if any man knows that he cannot respect those rights without stifling his own convictions he has no business in the post-office. In the absence of monopoly and of laws forbidding Sunday commerce there would be no difficulty in giving all the people just the mail service they wish.

Let it be distinctly understood that no patron of the postoffice is obliged to take his mail out on Sunday. He can do just as he pleases in the matter. And, furthermore, it is none of his business whether or not his neighbor follows his example. His neighbor's affairs are his own. B's right to get his mail on Sunday is precisely the same as A's right to let his lie in the office until Monday. Why is it necessary, after one hundred and seventeen years of political independence, to din these axiomatic principles of equal freedom into the ears of American citizens and law-makers?

Will some one say that those who conscientiously object to the Sunday carrying of their mail hav rights which should be respected? Granted, but it is not in the least necessary to invade the rights of all others in order to respect the scruples of these people. Let a stamp be provided—as we understand is done by the Belgian postal department—which, when affixed to a letter, is a notice to all officials and clerks that that letter is to be put into a package with others which bear the "Sunday-rest" stamp, and kept out of the mail-bags that carry the regular mail. The burden of respecting a man's conscience should rest on himself.

The first proviso in Section 2 offers a premium for lying. When a man has a business or other communication which he desires expedited to its destination he will be tempted to put a false statement on its face so as to avail himself of the privileges authorized by this proviso. How will the falsehood thus solicited aid morality? Note the difference in this respect between our suggestion in the preceding paragraph and the proviso now under consideration: The opportunity to affix the "Sunday-rest" stamp to a letter would put no temptation to lie in the way of anyone. The use of the stamp could not be misunderstood, for all it says is, "Do not transport this letter on Sunday." But this permission to write on an envelope, "John is sick," "We hav a baby," "Mother is dead," is a perpetual lure to trap people in the meshes of falsehood; it is a constant menace to truth, an offered partnership with dishonesty. And people who boast of their religious zeal are the ones who thus trifle with the candor and good faith which are the real bonds of social order! Shame to them and to the legislators who encourage them in their assaults alike on truth and liberty!

"Sec. 3. That the prosecution of commerce between the states and with the Indian tribes, the same not being work of necessity, mercy, or humanity, by the transportation of persons or property by land or water in such way as to interfere with or disturb the people in the enjoyment of the first day of the week, or any portion thereof, as a day of rest from labor, the same not being labor of necessity, mercy, or humanity, or its observance as a day of religious worship, is hereby prohibited, and any person or corporation, or the agent, servant, or employee of any person or corporation who shall wilfully violate this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than one thousand dollars, and no service performed in the prosecution of such prohibited commerce shall be lawful, nor shall any compensation be recoverable or paid for the same."

In the above, as in Section 2, the safeguarding of Sunday as a day of worship is frankly stated to be one of the objects of this contemplated legislation. Congress, under the Constitution, has nothing whatever to do with worship beyond the protection of all in their right of free choice of worship or non-worship. It is no part of its duty to provide them with a day of worship, with a minister or priest, or with a church building. All this they must do for themselvs. Should it be objected that their poverty compels some to work on Sunday, when they would prefer to attend religious services, it is answered that their poverty may likewise prevent them possessing a place of worship. If the government is bound to provide them with a day for worship, it is, by a parity of reasoning, bound to provide them with a place of worship. But is the author of the Kyle bill prepared to accept the logic of this plea of the Sunday observance advocates? Suppose that some of these poor laborers want Sunday, not for purposes of worship, but for purposes of recreation and amusement—what then? Are they to be protected in such use of the day? Not at all in any territory or the District of Columbia. Section 1 provides against plays, games, or amusements on Sunday. To be sure, they are interdicted only if they disturb non-participants, but, as already pointed out, no special Sunday law is needed for such a purpose, and we well know how prejudiced judges and juries interpret "disturbance" in Sunday statutes.

By this time it should be perfectly clear to all who can reason and who see the social and industrial worlds as they really are that the claim that special Sunday observance laws are needed to giv the workman a day each week for rest is the veriest nonsense. Such, also, are all arguments in support of the proposition that a considerable amount of Sunday work is not a necessity in this or any immediately proximate stage of civilization. Of course no one questions the fact that a large majority of the working people, as well as those not technically such, prefer to take their day off on Sunday, chiefly as a matter of convenience. But no Sunday law is called for by this preference. Labor is too well organized to be successfully denied its weekly resting time, even no if law intervenes in its behalf. But even if the latter statement were not true, nothing more would be required than a statute making it obligatory upon employers to giv their employees a rest day each week, if the latter desire it, and leaving the selection of the day to the two parties directly concerned.

We hav said that, as a matter of convenience, the majority of the people would choose Sunday as the day of leisure. This would not be true, however, if a minority did not work. Mere abstention from work is not all that makes Sunday or any other holiday desirable to the people. Some want to attend church, but many more prefer other forms of recreation. Hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of city residents, want to go into the country and to and on the water. Libraries, reading-rooms, art galleries, museums, theaters, and almost innumerable other places hav their patrons on the rest-day. This, of course, necessitates that large numbers work. Restaurants, hotels, news-stands, boot-blacks, confectionery and cigar stores, flower stands, livery stables, street cars, railways, etc., etc., are then all liberally patronized. This is no hardship to anyone. There are willing hands for every job of work there is. The majority of those who do not work on Sunday would find the day dreary indeed if it were not for the services of the Sunday workers. There is no more reason in the demand for this law than there would be in clamor for a law prohibiting work on the Fourth of July or Christmas. There is no statute forbidding and setting the seal of disgrace on work on those holidays, and yet labor is voluntarily suspended for a part of the day by the great majority, especially on the Fourth of July. But those who chose to labor can do so without subjecting themselvs to the danger of fine or imprisonment. The enjoyment of the many who do not work is greatly enhanced by the services of those who do. We repeat: There is no more need of a law making labor on Sunday a misdemeanor than there would be for a law making it a misdemeanor on the Fourth of July or Decoration day. Why is there such a persistent endeavor to secure special legislation for Sunday while no one thinks of demanding similar laws for those secular holidays? He who runs may read the reason. There is a large and influential class directly and pecuniarily interested in retaining a monopoly of Sunday. This class is mortally afraid of free competition with the Sunday excursion train, the summer resort, the theater, the opera, the Sunday newspaper, and the contents of the Sunday mail sack. This tells the whole story.

So far as Sunday work on railways is concerned, which is the alleged evil at which the third section of this bill is aimed, there is no need whatever for this law. Business men, travelers, and patrons of the post-office demand Sunday transportation and there is no valid reason why they should not hav it. It is perfectly practicable to divide the men into relays, each relay working six days and resting one day. By alternating the seven relays so as to change the rest day of all each week, if the men desired it, those who one week rested on Sunday would the next week rest on Monday, and so on to the end of the list. And more than this: There might be a few among the men of each division whose conscientious scruples would lead them to desire to always lay off on Sunday instead of on one of the other days. Arrangements to this end could easily be made by the trainmen themselvs, with the no doubt readily obtained concurrence of the companies. By this common sense plan a much larger number of men would secure employment than could do so if all inter-state Sunday commerce were stopped, and neither the mails, business, nor travel would be interfered with, while the priceless principle of equal liberty would be respected and the happiness of all the people augmented.

The advocates of Sunday laws say that they want to secure "rest" for the "victims" of "soulless capital." They say that nature indicates that man should rest one day in seven. But suppose the days are several months long, as in some latitudes! And does not nature say that man should rest at night, rather than in the day time? Well, here are hundred of thousands of "victims" of "soulless capital," who work at night, no doubt to the injury of many of them. Where is the minister, in the Senate or out, who has proposed a law forbidding night-work, nullifying the obligation of contracts for such work, and authorizing dishonest employers and professional informers to sue for the recovery of wages paid for such work? Are there any who cannot see through this talk about "rest"? All Sunday laws are religious in origin and purpose.

"Sec. 4. That all military and naval drills, musters, and parades, not in time of activ service or immediate preparation therefor, of soldiers, sailors, marines, or cadets of the United States on the first day of the week, except assemblies for the due and orderly observance of religious worship, are hereby prohibited, nor shall any unnecessary labor be performed or permitted in the military or naval service of the United States on the Lord's day."

This section is without excuse, like all that precede and follow it. There is no reason whatever for the interference of Congress. Garrison commanders are no doubt as well qualified, to say the least, to determin what days they will parade and drill their men as is a civilian member of Congress. Not even a religious person will contend that this part of the bill was not drafted solely to glorify a certain theological opinion. No one is so dull as to believe that the soldiers are so hard worked in time of peace as to need all of Sunday for "rest." Should this section be adopted its passage would be an act of religious legislation, avowedly and shamelessly such.

"Sec. 5. That it shall be unlawful to pay or to receive payment or wages in any manner for service rendered or for labor performed or for the transportation of persons or property in violation of the provisions of this act, nor shall any action lie for the recovery thereof, and when so paid, whether in advance or otherwise, the same may be recovered back by whoever shall first sue for the same."

Nothing could be more difficult than to criticise this section in temperate, judicial language. It is infamous from first to last. It strikes down the fundamental right of contract, and furnishes employment for an army of scoundrels. What do legislators think they hav the power to do? Do they imagin that they can make sensible men and women believe that acts which invade the rights of no one are criminal? Can not they see that every time they attempt to do anything of the kind they weaken the sense of obedience to law, and thus inevitably help bring the most wholesome laws into contempt? Do they not know that they hav no right nor authority to do collectively what they hav not the right and authority to do as individuals? Which one of them would hav the hardihood to say that he, as an individual, could rightfully fine a man for plowing in his own field, or another for opening the doors of his opera-house on Sunday? Rights not possessed by the units cannot be delegated to the agents of the units. Men hav identically the same right to work on Sunday that they hav to work on other days, and all contracts made in furtherance of the exercise of that right are valid in equity. Any law which destroys the obligation of such contracts is infamous and criminal. Such laws are the nursing mothers of dishonesty, and are mischievous in every conceivable way. They make illegal that which is not inequitable, and therefore they are clearly against public policy, as they are violativ of individual rights.

C, an honest, industrious, kindly man, makes a contract to work for D a certain length of time, including a given number of Sundays. He fulfils his part of the contract. His employer is satisfied with his labor and he is satisfied with his wages. He is paid. Now comes an idle, dissolute spy and sues C for his earnings. He wins his suit, for the laborer's pay "may be recovered by whoever shall first sue for the same." C's family needs every cent he can earn and here he is robbed in the august name of law, subjected to contumely, and compelled to pay for the services of those who assist in stealing from him his labor fruits. Is it possible to conceive of a meaner crime? But this is not all: The law, as proposed by Senator Kyle, would allow the employer to sue for the recovery of the wages he had, by a purely voluntary act, paid to the workman. This section seems to hav been ingeniously contrived to pander to the most despicable traits of human nature. Representativs and Senators, you owe it to your self-respect, if to nothing else, to kill Section 5—to kill the whole bill.

"Sec. 6. That labor or service performed and rendered on the first day of the week in consequence of accident, disaster, or unavoidable delays in making the regular connections upon postal routes and routes of travel and transportation, the preservation of perishable and exposed property, and the regular and necessary transportation and delivery of articles of food in condition for healthy use, and such transportation for short distances from one state, district, or territory into another state, district, or territory as by local laws shall be declared to be necessary for the public good, shall not be deemed violations of this act, but the same shall be construed, so far as possible, to secure to the whole people rest from toil during the first day of the week, their mental and moral culture, and the religious observance of the Sabbath day."

Imagin, if you can, the conflict between local, state, and national authority, the litigation, the expense, the animosities, jealousies, and hatreds which must be inseparable from any attempt to enforce the provisions of this bill, should it become law. See what latitude is given the courts! Each judge would inevitably inject into his decisions a large measure of his private opinions. It could not be otherwise. He is set the herculean task of securing to the people "rest," "mental and moral culture," and "the religious observance of the Sabbath day" (Sunday). What might be rest for one class would certainly be virtual imprisonment for another and very much larger class. And so on to the end of the chapter.

All this denial of liberty, all this corruption, all this spying, all this interruption to the orderly processes of social life, and all this suffering, is for what? Simply and solely to compel all the people to do reverence to a day which a faction of the people say is sacred! That is, it is legislation in the interest of a religious dogma, legislation unconstitutional and subversiv of equal religious freedom. Kill both the Kyle-Johnson bill and Gallinger-Morse District of Columbia bill.

Our Official Christians.

"Hannele" is a play translated from the German of Gerhardt Hauptman. It has never been produced in English, but was announced for a four weeks' run at the Fifth Avenue Theater. It has been presented at the Imperial Theater of Berlin and the Imperial Theater of Vienne. But those cities are in effete monarchies, where the officials are not so anxious for the safety of the Christian religion as are our own gentlemen of that ilk. But we anticipate.

Alice M. Pierce was cast for the title rôle. As she is only fifteen years of age, the theater managers had to apply to Mayor Gilroy for a license. The application was sent to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, as required by law. The president of this Society, Elbridge T. Gerry sent to the mayor a long letter in protest against the appearance of Miss Pierce in the play. The pious old gentleman appeared to think that he was empowered to decide as to the "piety" or "impiety" of the piece, and it is now generally known that Protestants regard any theatrical presentation of so-called "religious truths" as blasphemous, especially if they hav immediately to do with the Jesus legend. Mr. Gerry objected to the play "upon the ground of the impious character of the performance." After describing the first part of the play, this official Christian continues:

"Then (and this is the most impious part of the whole piece) a personage, who is none other than our blessed Lord, but who is described in the manuscripts as a 'Stranger,' appears on the scene, with the auxiliaries of unnatural light, etc., and in his own words from holy writ performs a miracle and resurrects the child, presumptivly dead, from the coffin. The play begins with the name of our blessed Lord, as the initial word of a well-known hymn, and finishes with his personal appearance.

"This revolting and horrible travesty of a resurrection, as a theatrical exhibition in a public theater, is not only perfectly shocking and at variance with public decency, but is well calculated, in the mind of a nervous child, to create a mental impression of a lasting and most injurious character, to say nothing of the awful blasphemy in which she is thus compelled to take part. Not only is such a performance one which should be suppressed by law in all its details, but so far as the child is concerned, if she were allowed to take part in it, all persons in any wise assisting or prompting her so to do would be liable to arrest under Section 289 of the Penal Code."

It is to be understood that all Mr. Gerry can do by law is to forbid the appearance of Miss Pierce; he cannot prohibit the performance of the play. But, as the reader will see, he wants the piece suppressed and, of course, he would suppress it if he had the power. And this because it is impious! And how impious? Why, it represents the performance of a miracle by the "savior," the "savior" upon the miraculous character of whose acts depends the entire system of Christianity which Mr. Gerry is so eager to defend against the attacks of the paynim! Is it not rich? "Our blessed Lord" must be supersensitiv if Mr. Gerry is his truthful interpreter.

Mayor Gilroy had before him Gerry, Rosenfield Brothers—the proprietors of the Fifth Avenue Theater—Miss Pierce and her mother, Mr. Untermyer—Rosenfields' attorney—and Miss Maud Banks, who has a part in the play. After a lengthy hearing he decided that Miss Pierce could not be permitted to appear. He delivered himself of this piece of wisdom:

"I hav no objection to plays that inculcate religious truths, but I feel constrained to deny this application. The teacher, called sometimes 'The Stranger,' seems to me to be intended for Christ. To take part in this production would destroy this child's reverence, if she has any. I cannot believe that this character is intended for any other than that of Christ. I think that at this point the line should be drawn, and there it shall be, so far as I am able."

Oh, dear, what would become of us all if we did not hav the Gerrys and Gilroys to preserve our "reverence" from the felonicus assaults of Christian dramatists! Possibly they hav saved Miss Pierce's reverence for Jesus, but they certainly hav rendered it impossible for her to entertain even respect for themselvs, and for the burlesque on law which they enforce. By the way, that young lady's reverence must hav been badly damaged during the three months that she has been taking part in the rehearsals of "Hannele."

Mr. Theodore Rosenfield said that "there is nothing so strong against cruelty to children as this play. It is the strongest argument against cruelty to them that was ever written, and it is cruelty to them to forbid its production." Mr. Rosenfield is very likely accurate in both his statements, but he evidently did not know Gerry or he would not hav urged those facts in support of his request that Miss Pierce be permitted to appear at his theater. Arguments against cruelty to children are the last things which such professional protectors of children want to hear. When Miss Pierce found that she could not take part in "Hannele," she had a "paroxysm of weeping." She has had very little to do for a year, and stood in great need of the money she could earn with the Rosenfields, but Gerry is naturally indifferent to such trifles. His business is to save "our blessed Lord" from the Satanic machinations of his fellow Christians of the stage. The children can starve or do worse, for all he cares.

See the list on page 285 of agents for THE TRUTH SEEKER and our other publications. We are always ready to add thereto the names of good, activ, efficient men and women.

Mr. Charles Watts writes us that he is going to make a fight for a seat on the London School Board, and he hopes to win. That would be tiresome for some of the ministers in that body, and would hasten the coming of secular education. Success to him.

"Judge Otis, of San Bernardino, California, has affirmed the constitutionality of the Sabbath-closing ordinance, in a test case brought before the court."—Christian Statesman.

Of course, they all do it. Not a judge that does not seem to be in mortal fear of the church. "An independent judiciary!" Fudge! And this decision is rendered in California, a state without a Sunday law. Is it not time Free Sunday leagues were formed?

The London Freethinker, as well as some American Freethinkers, has been misled by the name; the Redemptorist priest, A. Lambert, who recently abandoned the Catholic for the Protestant church, is not the priest, L. A. Lambert, who wrote "Notes on Ingersoll."

The National Secular Society and R. O. Smith, lessee of the London Hall of Science, in 1879, hav joined in an action for damages against the printer and publisher of an atrociously libelous pamphlet containing the report of remarks made by one Walton Powell in a debate with Greeves Fisher. Christian falsifiers are not dallying in primrose paths in England just now.

Representativ M. N. Johnson of North Dakota has introduced, "by request," the Kyle national Sunday rest bill. It was referred to the Committee on Education. That committee consists of these members: B. A. Enloe, Tennesse (chairman); B. F. Grady, North Carolina; A. J. Pearson, Ohio; J. L. McLaurin, South Carolina; Marshall Arnold, Missouri; J. S. Williams, Mississippi; J. F. Stallings, Alabama; J. M. Wever, New York; H. F. Thomas, Michigan; H. C. Van Vooris, Ohio; G. W. Murray South Carolina; S. W. McCall, Massachusetts.

The days of grace are now very few. Those who wish to get their names into "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" should let us know at once. Names and $5's are coming in quite encouragingly, but there are some pledged ones still without the gates, and a large number of others who, we surmise, intend to come in at the eleventh hour. Well, that hour has struck. Do not forget that $6.50 secures THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year and a copy of Mr. Putnam's book, which contains more than eight hundred and fifty pages of reading matter, one hundred and fifty portraits, and the names of all who hav paid in advance for the book. "A man is known by the company he keeps," and no better than this could be found.

Dr. Foote always puts his hand into his pocket—and takes it out with something in it—when a good cause needs assistance. His letter on page 282 tells what he thinks of our "Church Property" pamphlet and of the work that should be done at Albany in May. His good opinion amounts to $5 in the first play. Next there dropped into our den that hearty and generous "wayfarer of the seas," Captain Silas Latham, and laid upon the desk two bright, clean ten dollar bills as his contribution to the work. Others who helped along are A. McGinness, $5; E. Auffurth, 50 cents; Aug. Behrens, $5; Mrs. E. Beveridge, 50 cents; Fred. Koezly, $2; James L. Parshall, $5; C. B. Rouss, $5; C. S. Weeks, 50 cents. Who next for "Justice in taxation"?

Among the "Letters from Friends" this week will be found a communication from D. Webster Groh, in which he suggests that a Freethought "Letter-writing Corps" would be a good thing. We are certain that it would. And the very much alive and eminently practical Liberals who subscribe for this paper will be of the same opinion, we are sure. Mr. Groh has so fully explained the work proposed that we hav no need to enlarge upon it here. What is required is a target. There are plenty. Let the first volley of intellectual missils be fired at the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, which has in charge the Gallinger-Morse Sunday bill for the District of Columbia and the Kyle-Johnson National Sunday Rest bill. The names of the members of this committee will be found on page 259 of THE TRUTH SEEKER, issue of April 28th. Address, giving name, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C. Select your man or write to all, just as you feel disposed. Write brief, terse, and, of course, courteous letters. Those not having THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 28th may write to Senator James Z. George. All together, and let us put in our protests against Sunday legislation. Here's to the "Freethought Letter-writing Corps"!

Some Protestant Associations.

The American Protestant is the name of a weekly paper published in Boston. It is devoted to the interests of various societies which are composed exclusivly of Protestants. In its issue of April 14th, it givs the names of the chief officers of these organizations, with statements of their principles and aims. These bodies are: "American Protectiv Association," "American Protestant Association," "Junior Order United American Mechanics," "The National League for the Protection of American Institutions," "Loyal Orange Institution of the United States of America,' "Patriotic Order Sons of America," "American Orange Knights." It will be observed that there are two "A. P. A.'s."

Of course, all these organizations are aggressivly anti-Catholic. They are divisions of the same army. The purpose that animates one animates all. The journals that are friendly to one are friendly to all. They are all ostensibly pledged to defend "civil and religious liberty." Each claims to be "non-sectarian and non-partisan." And each declares that it wishes to maintain our public school system free from all taint of "sectarian" teaching.

The significant fact that a society which is avowedly organized to oppose a particular church yet calls itself a "non-sectarian" body, should make us very inquisitiv regarding the meaning which it attaches to "non-sectarian." We hav heretofore shown that with these people, as with the National Reform Association and the Women's Christian Temperance Union, "non-sectarian" is simply a synonym for "Protestant." By non-sectarian public schools is only meant schools supported by public taxation and burdened with Bible teaching. The evidence in support of these statements is absolutely overwhelming. Some of this evidence we hav already laid before our readers, and more will be found below. We repeat, the general assertions of these Protestants are unreliable, are confusing and misleading. Take, for illustration, this plank of the platform of the Junior order of United American Mechanics:

"We guarantee to every man the liberty of worshiping God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and would giv every assistance to protect all in the exercise of this liberty, but we object most strenuously to the interference of any church, no matter under what name it may exist, in the temporal affairs of this country."

If this were an honest demand for equal religious liberty, "but we object" would be "and we object," and the two immediately succeeding planks would not be in the platform. Here are those planks:

"We believe that the Bible should be read in our public schools, not to teach sectarianism, but to inculcate its teachings. It is the recognized standard of all moral and civil law; we therefore believe that our children should be educated in its teachings, but that no dogma or creed should be taught at the same time.

"We believe that patriotism and love of country should be instilled into the hearts of children, and that with the sacred words of 'Mother, Home, and Heaven,' our children should be taught that our flag is the symbol of all that makes a 'home' for us. We should place a flag upon every public school in our land, and a Bible within, and the object lesson therein set forth should be a beacon light in every storm that threatens to engulf us."

Is there any Freethinker anywhere who is in doubt what these principles mean, and what their application would imply and produce?

It will be observed that a lame attempt is made to make it appear that the Bible can be read in the public schools without inculcating dogma or creed. This is self-evidently untrue. The teacher, left to himself or herself, will read such portions as he or she deems best, which will be those parts that giv, or seem to giv, support to the views held by the teacher. So we hav dogma at once and inevitably. But if the school board, or some other authority outside of the school room, prescribes the course of Bible reading, we hav merely transferred the dogma-creating or selecting power from the instructor to the officer or legislator. And more than this: Putting the Bible into the schools in itself makes these schools sectarian within the proper meaning of the word, no matter what portion of the Scriptures is read, for the work is a sectarian textbook, and that is why the Protestants want it in the common schools.

Beware of the "non-sectarian" Christian "reformer" and politician.

Ecclesiastical and Civil Marriage.

Some weeks since we referred incidentally to the generally known fact that the Catholic church holds that marriages not solemnized by ecclesiastics are adulterous, and the offspring of such unions illegitimate. A correspondent wishes to know our authority for the statement. We had supposed that the position of the church named was understood by all. Inasmuch as the Roman Catholic church decrees that the services of the priest are essential in the performance of the marriage ceremony, there can be no escape from the conclusion that unions not so solemnized are invalid and their issue illegitimate. Johnson's Cyclopedia says:

"After the papal supremacy was established the church of Rome asserted that marriage was purely a religious act, and was, therefore, within its exclusiv jurisdiction. An elaborate code of rules for its regulation was incorporated into the canon law; and since the canon law was generally accepted and followed, prior to the Reformation, throughout Christendom, these rules were recognized in all Christian countries as the foundation of the local legislation and as the guides for the local tribunals. In asserting its exclusiv control the church maintained that its own concurrence, through the presence and blessing of a priest, was essential to the validity of any marriage. This decree was formally announced by a decree of the Council of Trent (November, 1563), which declared that after that date all marriages not contracted in the presence of a priest and two or three witnesses should be void."

The "Cyclopedia" adds that this position was "vehemently maintained by the Roman church," and, referring to the present civil marriage laws of France, Italy, Austria, and Germany, says: "This legislation has been the cause of bitter controversies between the governments of those countries and the Papal See."

Rev. Dr. Farrell, of Cleveland, Ohio, in a sermon recently delivered in St. John's Cathedral, in that city, stated the Catholic doctrin in these words, as reported in the Cleveland Evening Post:

"We hav rejected, my dear brethren, the usurped authority of the state over matrimony. We hav seen that the secular power has neither the right to bind nor loose; neither the right to declare a marriage valid nor to loosen the divinely-appointed bond."

Mr. Franklin Steiner relates an anecdote which shows that the Catholic laity understand well the position of their church in this matter. Judge Nugent, a distinguished lawyer of Des Moines, Iowa, was one day asked what he, a member of the church and with a brother in the priesthood, would do if he were asked to procure a divorce. He answered: "If the parties were Catholics I would not take the case, but if they were Protestants I would take it, and on the ground that they were never married." By "Protestants" he meant, of course, all whose unions had not received the priestly blessing.

Wanted—More Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two splendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one o the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

Victor Hugo was on his death-bed when the time came to ship Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty to the United States. It was desired that he should write a sentiment in the little book that was to accompany the statue. With weak and uncertain fingers he wrote: "The statue is nothing, but the idea it embodies is everything." He fell back upon the pillow, and it was thought he was dead, but he raised himself, took up the pen once more, and added: "For liberty is woman, and woman is liberty." They were the last words he wrote. There is a wealth of wisdom in both sentences, but the last expresses a hope rather than states a fact. Liberty will be only a dream so long as woman remains the slave of superstition.

"The first chapter of Genesis never made an Infidel, and no explanation of it can remove Infidelity."—H. G. Wilson.

But the first chapter of Genesis has undoubtedly helped to make many Infidels, for men hav compared its statements with the records of the rocks and the stars and they hav found that they would not harmonize. Therefore the story of creation was seen to be inadequate as an explanation of the origin of man and it was relegated to the limbo of legends. It is true, however, that no explanation of Genesis can remove infidelity, and for the reason that all attempted explanations which seek to reconcile it with the revelations of science and the demands of reason are strained, far-fetched, contradictory, and absurd. President Wilson is supported by Dr. Morehouse, bishop of Manchester, England, who says that "science and criticism hav done their work, and the result has been not to increase skepticism, but to rationalize and deepen faith." There is just one answer to this—it is not true.

Observations.

If there be any person who holds that the age of miracle is past, I beg leave to respectfully call him down. I find in the Catholic Review an account of a young man named Smith, who, having donned the "cord of St. Joseph," was enabled to fall from the fifth to the ground floor of a building in this city, by way of an elevator shaft, without sustaining serious injury. The Review asserts the miraculous character of the event, and says it is "clear to all Catholics that the miracle must be ascribed to St. Joseph." The circumstance is of local interest for the reason that the efficient cord was obtained at Father Drumgoole's establishment, a few doors from THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

I get a second instance of miraculous intervention in natural processes from the Christian Instructor, as follows:

At the very time that the House Committee reached its conclusion [tabling the God-in-the-Constitution amendment], the unusually mild weather of March suddenly changed, and blighting frost fell upon almost every part of the country, North and South. Reports from Chautauqua county, N. Y., stated that the frost had destroyed all hope of a grape crop there this year. Over $6,000,000 of capital is said to be invested in that county alone in this industry. From North and South Carolina, from Delaware, and, indeed, from almost every part of the South, came reports of widespread disaster to fruits and vegetables.

It is not for me to comment on the complicity of the Almighty in these felonies, or I might say that the action of the House Committee which brought calamity to the wine industry of Chautauqua county might hav compensatory joys for the Prohibitionists. I might also warn the Christian Instructor against too implicit confidence in the prophecies of the fruit men, who hav been known thus early in the season to predict a short crop in order to stimulate prices. But all this might tend to weaken the lesson of the event, namely, that there is a "connection between the decision to refuse to acknowledge the supreme authority and just government of God in the nation's fundamental law, and these judgments of God poured out in the destruction of the fruits of the nation's fields." And for the same reason I forbear to note the lack of harmony between the theory of God's just government and the fact that the destruction aforesaid has been poured out on the property of persons in nowise responsible for the action of the committee.

I now pass to the third miraculous event, which is:

HODGEVILLE, KY., March 19.—Hugh Warren, a farmer residing near Deyarn, became convinced that Susan Kelly had bewitched his cattle. He procured a silver bullet, and, making a picture of Mrs. Kelly, shot it in the head. Within a minute of that time Mrs. Kelly, who was sitting by her fire, rose to her feet, complained of a sudden peculiar pain in her head, and fell dead.

Having accepted the two preceding accounts as true, the reader will experience no difficulty in getting away with the last one, which is quite as important, since it contains an example of the primitiv superstition upon which, according to Professor Huxley, the others are based. Indeed, I may hav erred in not placing it first, in order that the series might come under the very appropriate heading of "De Yarn."

They hav in Paris, France, an individual who combines in his person the variously detestable attributes of Anthony Comstock, the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, and the Hon. W. C. P. Breckinridge. Of the name of M. Dide, a press dispatch thus describes him:

He is the president of the Association for the Suppression of Immorality in the Streets of Paris. He is seized with speechless horror when he beholds one of the exquisit studies of the nude, and his piety was the admiration of all beholders.

The same sort of hypocrit, evidently, that flourishes on American soil. Under promis of marriage, this Parisian Breckinridge maintained connubial relations with a young woman, whom he discarded in order to marry another. The girl has just committed suicide. Sometime, I suppose, the world will learn that the blatant moral censor is bound sooner or later to embrace the vices which he grows familiar with in his professed endeavor to suppress them. But who ever knew one of these wretches to part with his religion?

The popularity of the current agitation for the right of women to vote must be very gratifying to the veterans of the cause, but the support it is obtaining from the Protestant clergy is a trifle suspicious. Hav these sapient persons dropped to the fact that the women members of their churches are largely nativ born, while many of those of the Catholic church, old enough to vote, are unnaturalized foreigners; and that therefore female suffrage would giv the Protestant clergy a protuberant bulge? There was a famous victory in Massachusetts a few years ago, when Priscilla captured Boston and vindicated against the Catholic priests the teaching of Protestant history in the schools. Between the date of Biddy's declaration of her "intintions" and the day when she could vote, that victory might be repeated many times elsewhere. All of which the A. P. A. should make a note of.

Before the Daughters of the Revolution in this city a few days ago ex-Mayor Hewitt delivered an address on "Liberty," which he defined as "the right of every human being to do what he chooses to do under the law." That is admirable, because, as the reader will observe, it makes provision for denying exactly what it professes to grant. The rule, as applied in Kentucky, givs to C. C. Moore the right of a free press and sends him to jail for exercising it. It did the same for Bennett in New York, Harman in Kansas, and Heywood in Massachusetts. In Tennessee it grants religious freedom to the Adventists, and imprisons them for Sunday labor; and a practice identical obtains in other states. Under the same head, Freethinkers may object to being taxed for the support of the churches, and be sold out by the sheriff. In fact, liberty as defined by ex-Mayor Hewitt means only the liberty of the majority to limit the freedom of the minority. If he had said only that liberty meant "the freedom of every human being to do what he chooses to do" be might hav been misunderstood, for which he could not hav been held responsible, but he would not hav been inaccurate, for which he is seriously to be condemned.

I am asked whether Mr. E. O. Roscoe, the Prophet of Gowanus, with whom I hav been conducting a more or less desultory discussion on the subject of finance, is a real personage, or a creation of my own wayward fancy, conceived to misrepresent the gold-bugs. Such a suspicion seriously questions my sincerity, and I am willing to rest the whole case on the identity of the Prophet with a very intelligent, well-informed, and earnest gentleman of Brooklyn, who is as certain in his own mind that the credit of the country rests on a gold basis as a good Christian is that religion lies at the foundation of all morality worth practicing. Furthermore I request that at this point the reader who cares to follow the discussion turn to page 267 of the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER and read the communication of E. O. Roscoe there printed.

In Mr. Roscoe's first paragraph he has stated the affair of the last note and its redemption as it now stands. I hav to side with Mr. Peck in his declaration that a paper dollar is redeemed (so far as the holder is concerned) when he givs it to another for value received, and that it is finally redeemed when the government accepts it for taxes. I can understand why Mr. Roscoe, in order to avoid admitting that his original question is adequately answered, should contend that this is not redemption, but I am not onto his object in denying that he placed Mr. Peck in the "position of the government confronted with one of its notes." Mr. Peck was clearly speaking of a government note when he inquired if a dollar was not redeemed when a man paid a debt with it (see THE TRUTH SEEKER, Feb. 10, 1894); and when Mr. Roscoe asked if he would regard his own note as redeemed by the holder turning it over to another individual in exchange for goods, I hold that Mr. Peck, for the purpose of the argument, was placed in the position of the government confronted with one of its own notes, especially as he is expected to hustle around for funds wherewith to meet the obligation. But if Mr. Peck was not to be so regarded, then Mr. Roscoe's question had no relevancy, and should be thrown out of the discussion. I regret that he did not see fit to inform me earlier that he was questioning Mr. Peck's individual responsibility rather than that of the government.

The remainder of the first paragraph may be disposed of by saying that the reissue or "renewing" of notes by the government has no apparent disadvantages, such as appertain to the sale of bonds for gold which the government cannot hope to repay without issuing other bonds. Under the one system the redemption and reissue balance each other; under the other, there is a perpetual unreturning outflow from the treasury in the form of interest. Note here the $5,500,000 interest for the month of April.

With respect to Mr. Roscoe's second paragraph, I can only repeat that the facts were as stated, and that I share his opinion of the court. I hav no doubt that silver dollars would be kicked against quite as strenuously in Brooklyn as copper cents are in San Francisco, and with a similar disregard of reason.

All the new matter in paragraph 3 is a prophecy of what would follow the remonetization and free coinage of silver. As I am old enough to remember the warnings uttered when resumption was proposed, and not having lived to see them fulfilled, I do not know why I should be frightened by similar warnings at the present crisis. In 1879 the people used their money to do business with instead of emptying the treasury, and I infer that under like circumstances they would do the same in 1894.

Mr. Roscoe next raises the question whether the millions lost in unsuccessful mining ventures should be regarded as a factor in estimating the cost of producing gold and silver. He holds that they should not. But I cannot get away from the notion that the expense of producing anything determins its cost. It will not be denied, I think, that prospecting, tunneling, and developing by means of labor and machinery, are as inseparable from the production of gold and silver, and as necessary to it, as the actual working of a mine; and such being the case, the expense of these, even when not followed by profitable results, should, in my judgment, enter into the problem of cost. Be that as it may, since my statement regarded gold and silver alike in this respect, there being as many failures in the pursuit of the one as of the other, the ratio is not altered. The free coinage of gold fixes the price of that metal, and the suspension of coinage of silver accounts for the fall in its price; but these circumstances hav no relation to the cost of either. The forced sale of Mr. Roscoe's residence during a period of dullness in the real estate market would be a poor index to the expense of its construction.

"As to our money circulating abroad," says Mr. Roscoe, "it is certain that it has no greater currency, as money, than foreign money has here, which is none at all." Facts furnished me by correspondents convince me that my opponent has been misinformed. One writes: "In the Straits of Magellan I find American money—gold and silver—at a high premium, but what they really prefer down there is American greenbacks. At Valparaiso our money commanded a good premium." Another, who, like the first, has circumnavigated the globe, says: "I found American money the best to exchange in Japan. In China they like Mexican silver dollars particularly well, and United States money is next. In India English money leads, but American money was never far behind it anywhere. In Russia our currency leads the English. I found no place where there was not a premium on American money." This testimony has a direct bearing against Mr. Roscoe's previous statement that American coin is accepted abroad only by weight, and paper money not at all; and I also regard it as supporting my contention that, as with the flag, our nation's credit guarantees to American money a world-wide recognition. The second correspondent I hav quoted adds that Mr. Roscoe "does not appear to know what he is talking about," but the remark will not be repeated here, as I am supposed to represent the ignorance of this combination.

I hav tried to convince my distinguished critic that any sort of money that the government will receive for all dues is bound to circulate at par, which theory he rejects for the alleged reason that "paying taxes is but a small part of the functions of money." Now, the United States government in 1893 received more than four hundred and fifty millions in taxes, or between six and seven dollars from each man, woman, and child; the exact per capita tax, as stated by F. N. Barnett, in the American Grocer, is $6.69, which is more than one-fourth of the per capita circulation. Can that accurately be called a "small part?" And if the one-fourth which the government would redeem in tax receipts is really a "small part," how would Mr. Roscoe describe the one-eighth which can be redeemed in gold? The further this discussion goes, the less excuse there appears to be for Mr. Roscoe, under his own rule, to continue it.

Last week a certain play, by Hauptman, a German dramatist, was announced for production at a local theater. Thereupon one Elbridge T. Gerry, the dry-nurse employed by the Society for the Prevention of the Intellectual Development of Children, demanded to be shown the text of the play, which, having read, he pronounced blasphemous. He then applied to the mayor to hav its production forbidden.

Gerry's objection to the play is that the title role is performed by a little girl, who is supposed to die and to be brought to life by the intervention of Christ, the latter appearing in person and spouting holy writ. Doubtless it is a dramatization of some scene described in the Bible. Gerry sat on the stage of the theater, read the manuscript of the play, and informed the managers that it could not be produced, when, instead of kicking him into the orchestra circle, those urbane gentlemen are said to hav smilingly escorted him to the door.

The arrogance of these volunteer amateur sneaks and spies like Gerry ought in some way to be checked. It is intolerable. In this particular case, before taking action looking to the legal enforcement of Mr. Gerry's opinion on the subject of blasphemy, Mayor Gilroy should at least inquire whether the Judean story has been copyrighted and all rights reserved, and also ascertain what percentage Jesus Christ has over other historic characters in the matter of immunity from dramatic representation.

The too candid Col. Phil Thompson, who defended Breckinridge on the ground that he was not more immoral than the average public man, is receiving greater censure for that open utterance than he would appear to deserve. If there are not a good many others besides the Kentucky statesman who "take their license in the field of time," why the innumerable leagues, unions, and societies for the moral reformation of mankind? Do they all exist solely for the reformation of Colonel Breckinridge? Some years ago, the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in the course of a political argument, contended that if all the men in New York who had broken the seventh commandment were to vote one way they would carry the state by 200,000 majority. If Beecher was right, then Colonel Thompson had a theological basis for his remark.

A detachment of the industrial salvation army of Coxey has reached Washington and camped on federal ground. Until this aggregation of confessed incompetents shall hav been disbanded and mustered out, nobody can guess its effect upon the action of the constituted authorities. Newspaper writers hav got into the notion of calling the movement a phenomenon and something altogether new to history. But it plainly is not. It is a religious crusade with Washington instead of Rome or Mecca or Jerusalem for its destination; and the almighty spook supposed to quarter there is Government instead of God. The brutal instinct which long ago led certain men to erect deities in whose name they might enforce their own domineering intentions on their peers and vicinage has led them to erect a government for the same purpose. As their god was invested with unlimited powers, so is their government; and as the said god could be approached only through the priests, so the government must be invoked with the politicians as mediums. The religious pilgrims of course discovered that after their crusade was over they had to get out and rustle for themselvs; also that the deity's favors were expensiv; which is a lesson that the Coxeyites and some others hav yet to learn. Out of every gift attributed to providence a big percentage went to the priest, and all persons who hav ever received anything from government will probably testify that a good-sized hunk of it remained in the hands of the politicians. God (which is the church) never gave to any man a cent or a crust that was not previously taken from some other man, and there are some who hav concluded to leave the church out and so save the commission. The class of men who hav joined Coxey's army are pre-eminently the producers. Every dime that the government has power to bestow upon them, either as a gift or as wages, has passed once through their hands in the form of some product or material of agriculture or manufacture, and out of it the middleman and the tax gatherer has each in turn taken his expenses, salary, or profit. Now the applicants for government work ask that the same money shall pass out of the treasury through the hands of middlemen—commissioners, superintendents, foremen, overseers, bosses, clerks, paymasters, cashiers, and the rest—and that what is left of it shall be paid to them as wages for work for which there is no demand. That is to say, they want to be robbed twice, or rather, they want the legitimate laborer and producer to be mulcted twice for their benefit. Let them pause for a moment or half an hour and note the process by which the government gets its revenues; let them follow a dollar from the hands of the taxpayer to the United States treasury and note the abrasion. They may get a pointer by reading the report of the secretary of the treasury announcing a deficit, the true meaning of "deficit" being that the collection of the dollar has cost more than one hundred cents. The contributor to a missionary fund who expects that his penny will ever reach the heathen is right next to himself compared with the taxpayer. It is a matter of fact that government employees are overpaid as compared with private employees. It is the scant remuneration of the latter that the Coxeyites and other socialistic labor reformers are protesting against; and yet they expect the government to pay them high wages out of revenues drawn from the meager earnings of those not, like themselvs, favored with public patronage. If that is an economic possibility, then we should be able to subtract five from three and hav a considerable remainder.

Rightly viewed, as I hav intimated, the Coxeyites are drawn to Washington by the same sort of delusion that attracts superstitious Catholics toward Rome; and, by the same token, the wise politician will dismiss them with promises which he knows he will never be able to fulfil.

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

"Christianity Outside the Churches."

II.

Christianity can be spared from the world, because it is a stupendous and melancholy failure. Surely its "divine author" owes it to his own self-respect, if not to the sentiment of mankind, to giv his "plan of salvation" success enough to save it from contempt. Yet, to-day, after eighteen centuries of Christian propagandism, we behold the vast bulk of the living millions on the globe tramping the downward road to death, practically in utter ignorance of the "chief end of man," and utter disregard of their "eternal doom." What a result! Obtained at what cost of blood and treasure! I say nothing here of the exertions of Almighty Love and Infinit Wisdom, and the death of God on the cross. I ask, What Christian can contemplate the visible human effort put forth to accomplish so pitiful an achievement—the holy Inquisition, the rack, the dungeon, the stake, the Christian wars that hav devastated the world, the millions slaughtered by Christian love—who, I say, can compare these tremendous efforts with the result that we see in the world to-day without unspeakable sorrow and despair?

To this proposition I expect the assent of all reflecting readers inside or outside the churches. The present attitude of the Christian world toward the Christian church cannot long endure. These tremendous dogmas are not to be trifled with as they are. If credible they are to be believed with all one's might; if incredible they are to be warred upon with all one's might. For a thousand years men seem to hav taken them seriously, and hate, bloodshed, horrors unspeakable, were the result. The modern world seems to hav determined as the only escape from what was intolerable, not to take them seriously; to giv pro forma assent, to a certain extent, to the propositions, but to empty the words of meaning. Hell shall not mean hell unless one chooses to hav it so, everlasting shall not mean endless, fire shall not burn, nor torment cause pain. Carlyle doubtless had this state of things in mind when he characterized Christian belief as "sham belief and bedlam delusion, damnable, dead, putrescent cant."

But men hav begun to ask themselvs whether the remedy is not worse than the disease; whether peace purchased at such a price is not worse than open war, "war with a thousand battles and shaking a hundred thrones."

The enlightened conscience, we mean the conscience unperverted by ages of Christian teaching, revolts at the spectacle of mankind grinning at one another through the mask of a solemn creed. When the explosion comes, and men begin to drop their own masks in disgust, and to tear off their neighbors' in indignation, what will be the effect on the churches?

We hav heard much, not so much recently, of what are called "revivals of religion." There is a form of that phenomenon at which we outside the churches would rejoice with exceeding great joy. We should like to see historic Christianity (the official creeds) take hold on the lives of those who profess it, shake them with its fulminations, go down to the roots of character, gloom in their conduct every day in the week, every hour in the day, every minute in the hour. We should like to see such a revival, because it would empty the churches.

Christianity is professed in these days because it is not practiced. It is neither preached nor practiced. Hell is still in the creeds, but it is no longer on the lips of the preacher nor in the thoughts of his hearers. And the morality of the New Testament (Christ's Christianity) has shared the same fate. Parts of it cut to the bone. They are impracticable in any condition of society ever known among men. History reveals no time, much less is the present a time, when men could giv indiscriminately or without limit to every beggar, or permit the robber who takes their overcoats to take their coats, or the ruffian who cuts off their right ears to cut off their left also, without wronging not only themselvs but also their fellow-men. Accordingly these rules of Christian morality (Christ's Christianity), repudiated by the common sense of mankind, are set aside even by those who profess to consider them binding, with a unanimity that is found nowhere else in the Christian world. However bitter the controversy between the homoousian and the homoiousian, between the Calvinistic Christian and the free-will Christian, all the wrangling sects are agreed that they will not giv everything to beggars, will not lend without interest and security, will not submit without resistance to every form of outrage and wrong, and will be rich if they can, although they are assured by "the holy scriptures" that no rich man can enter heaven. The rules are in the book, but they hav dropped out of the memory of Christians, and any serious attempt to enforce them would overturn the churches.

But our Christian friends ought to desire such a revival, because it would stop the mouths of those who are affirming that the whole power of public opinion, as far as the churches can control it, is brought to bear to induce men to conceal their real opinions, and to giv their support to dogmas that hav lost all hold on their minds. One of the most serious counts in the indictment against Christianity is that "the church" offers rewards to those willing to prostitute their real convictions, and inflicts penalties upon those brave and honest enough to avow them. When "the church" makes it "pay" to profess religion, she slams her doors in the faces of honest men.

Note the queer prediction of Dr. Langdon. When the churches shall hav done certain things which they cannot possibly do without ceasing to be churches as we now understand the term, then those now outside will return "in flocks to ecclesiastical allegiance." Now, it must be apparent to any one who will reflect a little that after "the church" shall hav committed hari kari, the term "ecclesiastical allegiance" will hav a different meaning from what it now has; and since that meaning is wholly unknown, the prediction is meaningless. What tricks language plays with men's minds!

News and Notes.

I had the pleasure, Sunday evening, of listening to a lecture on the "Evolution of Flowers," by Henry Bird, before the Science Sermons Society, in the vestry of Robert Collyer's church, which is pervaded somewhat by the atmosphere of religion. The subject is a very interesting one, as perhaps in flowers more than in any other form of life do we see the marvels of evolution, many of which are going on before our eyes at the present time. "Show us evolution to-day," says the theologian, and we answer by depicting the process of the flowers. The speaker, who is a florist, and has had years of practical experience with the growth and varieties of flowers, showed to the audience how different forms of the flowers had originated within the last ten years, so that in the flowery kingdom the most conspicuous and brilliant displays of nature's eternal unfoldings are to be witnessed. Mr. Bird had the platform profusely decorated with flowers and plants, and his lecture was constantly illustrated with these vivid pictures of real life, so that it was most entertaining and instructiv. Mr. Bird was followed by Mr. Wakeman, who is always ready to speak out of a full mind on these scientific subjects, upon which he also flings the light of poetic fancy, for, quoting from Schiller and Goethe, he says that what the flowers do unconsciously in usefulness and beauty man must do consciously and by the effort of his will. The old idea of flowers, as taught by Jesus, was that they, in their abundant glory, were a declaration of divine providence—God's care of all his creatures. They teach no such lesson in evolution. They teach no God, as Mr. Bird said; they simply teach man to do his best, and to be satisfied with that, as the flowers are which die in the golden sunshine and expect no reward beyond death. After Mr. Wakeman, Senator Boyd made an enthusiastic speech all in praise of the "great designer," which he declared was exhibited in the beauty and splendor of the flowers. It was quite an orthodox sermon, delivered, however, without any maledictions against science or those who held opposit views. As I was called upon to join in the discussion, I concluded, even if I was in a church, to stick to my colors and declare that in nature there was no God; that the belief in God was merely a sentiment, but not a scientific truth. I found that most of the audience responded to my radical utterances. Mrs. Burnz said that God is love, and therefore love is God, and that all who believe in love believe in God, which, of course, is good as a compromise; but as there is no infinit love in the universe, so there can be no infinit God. There is only a finite love, that is man's love, and woman's too, which is after all the only love that amounts to anything. The discussion was quite interesting, took in a pretty good range for a church fair, and refreshed the ecclesiastical surroundings. I guess the Science Sermons Society, although not extremely radical, has been doing some pretty good work this winter; but perhaps its future success will depend upon its coming out into the broad open air of universal inquiry and inviting to its platform every kind of scientific and Freethought expression.

I hav just received of Allen Moon, Washington, D. C., a copy of the Sunday rest bill introduced into the House by Mr. Johnson of North Dakota. I expect I shall hav to go to Washington to watch this matter. I hope that Liberals throughout the country will be ready to aid and for this work send in their contributions to E. C. Reichwald, 165 South Water street, Chicago, treasurer of the Freethought Federation.

I hope that New York Liberals will realize the special and important opportunity which is opened to them by the State Constitutional Convention to begin May 8th. Unless Freethinkers make an effort for church taxation, nothing will be done. This is our battle, and we must take the lead. An amendment will be proposed to forbid any appropriations to religious institutions. But this is not by any means radical enough. Why not go to the very root of the evil? Why try any compromise? Exemption of church property from taxation is giving the church millions of dollars a year, and is an appropriation in a most dangerous and unjust form. Of course, we are opposed to any appropriations for any purpose to religious institutions of any kind. But an amendment to the Constitution merely against appropriations is not all, but impartial taxation of all property logically and surely takes with it the forbidding of appropriations, and is by far the greater gain for justice. It won't do to be satisfied with half a loaf in this matter. We want simple and absolute justice all round, and it is for this that we must strike, and if we Freethinkers do not do it, nobody else will. Let there be no lack of courage and decision in this matter. Don't think that others will do our work. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Sparks From the Lecture Field.

A day or two before leaving Wichita I received a message asking me to go down to Dover, Oklahoma, and giv a course of lectures. I went. Dover is one of the new towns that hav recently struggled into existence. It is but a small place, but there are scores of Liberals here. I gave three lectures to large and enthusiastic audiences, and the people seemed pleased with them. At the conclusion about forty new members were added to the rapidly-increasing lists of the Federation. Those who signed the Constitution are all good Liberals, and they expressed a hope that I would make Oklahoma the battle-ground for the Freethought campaign, for the special purpose of preparing the territory for statehood. Good work can be done here in this direction. The large number of liberal-minded people will make possible the drafting of a constitution that will provide for the equitable taxation of all ecclesiastical property and the removal of all religious influences from the public schools. I promised them that this matter should receive consideration.

Thomas White, Mr. Tousely, Dr. Bailey, and many others are among the hosts of freedom in Oklahoma. While here I was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. White. It is a Freethought home, and their little children, Thomas and Marguerite, are not to be contaminated by superstition. A short time previous to my advent here a subscription sheet was circulated to secure money to pay the preacher's salary. Mrs. White was approached and solicited for a donation, but the canvassers were met with a frank refusal, and the added remark, "Let the preacher work for his living, as we hav to do."

If all Liberal men and women would do likewise, scores of preachers would very speedily run short on their salaries. How many Liberals there are who donate freely to the church, either from want of thought, or, what is still worse, for "policy's sake." Business interests stand between them and their principles. If they would only giv their money to our Freethought papers and help them in the distribution of rationalistic literature, or to the Federation, to help us in our efforts to preserve our secular institutions, there would be no need for complaint of the lack of harmony among Liberals, and a man's business interests would be as well protected as they are now.

In exceedingly good spirits, I returned to Wichita in time to complete the arrangements for the program consequent upon the closing lecture of the season. We had good music and good recitations. Mrs. Sandford and Professor Blume again composed the orchestra. The program was made more interesting by the recital of Putnam's "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?" by Isis B. Martin and a humorous essay from J. H. Purdy. We were again favored with a packed house, and the closing lecture was received with great enthusiasm. My warmest thanks are due to those noble hearts who aided me in my work here, and in this relation I must mention first and foremost our friend Mr. Tuttle, who financiered the movement. Next comes Isis B. Martin, who never failed to do her share of the work necessary for its success. Also Charley Matthews, J. H. Purdy, J. H. Thomas, W. H. Bailey, E. E. Fitzpatrick, the Collings family, and many others.

The lectures at Morganville, my next appointment, were given in the district schoolhouse, and each time the little place was filled with an eager crowd. This is a busy time with the farmers. They are at work in the fields until the sun has passed below the horizon and we are compelled to begin late in order to giv them time to get in. So pleased were they with the principles and objects of the Freethought movement that twenty more signers were secured for the Federation. Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Tebbe entertained me while here and afforded me a royal welcome. The Freethought pilgrim will always receive a welcome here.

My lectures over, Mr. Tebbe hitched up his team and drove me across the prairies to my next appointment at Oak Hill, fifteen miles distant. On our way we stop at the home of Mr. Fred Pacey and wife, who are English settlers in Kansas. A good dinner and some interesting reflections on their part and speculations regarding the future, cheered us up and we resumed our journey. Mr. Pacey takes me the remainder of my journey, and in due time we reach the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Gwin, where I take supper and then proceed to the school-house, where my lectures are given. I gave two here and from miles around the people flocked in to hear an exposition of the principles of mental freedom, with all the enthusiasm that once marked an old-time Methodist revival. Thirty additional members were added to our rapidly increasing membership. The Federation's lists are now lengthening to an extra thousand. This is encouraging to us as we work on for our cause. The prospects for the continued triumph of the Federation are exceedingly bright.

The continued "hard times," together with the severe drouth prevailing over Kansas at this time, renders it hard work to secure any subscribers to our papers, but with prospects of good crops we hav hopes for the future. The seeds of Freethought hav been sown on fruitful soil, and an abundant harvest awaits us.

Another ideal Freethought home is that of Mr. and Mrs. Gwin. They are both young, enthusiastic, and devoted to their principles. Their little boy is named Darwin Gwin, and their little daughter, Lorena. Both of these little ones are exceedingly bright. These are brilliant jewels that gem the sky of Freethought. In the proper education of the young lies the hopes of our cause and the safety of American liberties. Filled with hope and inspiration to continue our work, I go on again to take up the campaign in other places.

When Christ would meet a sick man he would curse the spirits which infested him, and they would go out of the man and into a herd of swine, or perhaps into some other poor neighbor who happened to be inadvertently standing around with his mouth open. By the aid of science a doctor now deliberately pokes an electric-light tube into a man's stomach, and by its illumination reads all the secret inside working of his personal anatomy; applies the proper remedy, cures the patient, and never once thinks of the legions of devils which the son of God was such an adept in dealing with.

PROF. DANIEL DE LEON spoke before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association last Sunday on "Religion from a Labor Standpoint." He remarked that the church-going capitalist was not true to the religion and morality of the Bible when he took usury, for the Bible plainly said he only could dwell in the Lord's tabernacle who "putteth not out his money to usury," and he defined usury as getting more than a person produced. According to the Professor, as the capitalist does not giv the workingman that value which "is worthy of his hire," he is guilty of usury, and is therefore not true to the religion which he professes. There is a certain bumptious and "know-it-all" individual who attends the meeting every Sunday and who sometimes poses as a capitalist, and is generally very personal in his remarks, who insulted the lecturer after the meeting by calling him an Anarchist and saying his ideas led the young men of the day astray. The honor of the Association was sustained by the president apologizing for the attack.

MR. HENRY NICHOLS spoke last Friday before the Manhattan Liberal Club on "The Chances of Success." He showed very ably the danger that monopolies and corporations are becoming to thrifty and honest citizens who are trying their best to get along, and that if the power of these concerns is not weakened in some way, the chances of success for individuals in the commercial world will be very small. He made the statement that if a person went into the safe business he would spend a lifetime and a fortune before he would be able to command any success, so powerful are the present safe interests. It is the same with all other great manufacturing and commercial enterprises to-day. He proved by facts admitted by monopolistic writers the reality of the dangers into which we are drifting. After the lecture a business meeting was held and the following officers for the ensuing year elected: President, E. B. Foote Jr; Vice-presidents, Mrs. Emma Beckwith, Messrs Perrin and Chamberlain; Secretary, Moses Goldsmith; Treasurer, Miss A. Schachtel; Librarian, Mrs. E. B. Burnz; Trustees, Messrs. Wilson, Good, and Taber.

Gall and Wormwood for Sabbatarians.

LONDON, April 23.—The first public exhibition of pictures to be held in London on Sunday was opened in the Guildhall yesterday, and was attended by enormous crowds. So great was the public desire to take advantage of the new privilege that long lines of people were formed and maintained by constant additions throughout the day. Many persons stood in the lines for hours patiently awaiting their turn to be admitted. The question of opening art galleries to the public on Sundays has been long and bitterly discussed in the councils of the corporation and the success of yesterday's experiment assures the continuance of the exhibition, and also makes it certain that other galleries will soon be opened to the public on Sundays.

Letters of Friends.

It Jars the Tympanums of the Pious.

NIPOMO, CAL., April 4, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find money order for $3 for my yearly subscription to your paper. Your hammering on orthodoxy is resounding through all the land; a sweet sound for the ears of a free people, but a mournful sound for the ears of the fanatical. Thank you.

MRS. C. M. POPP.

First Place in His Affections.

LEE, N. D., April 5, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith inclose you $3 to renew my subscription to your splendid paper. I am free to say that I value your paper very highly, and, while money is tight and hard to get, I would rather do without some other paper in order to be able to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER continue its weekly visits to our home.

Very truly yours, N. C. RUKKE.

The Most Opportune Moment.

NEW YORK, April 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You are doing a good work in circulating that pamphlet on church property, and although I am not flush, I want to chip in. Every one ought to lend a hand. Constitutional conventions are not held every year, and this is the most opportune moment to agitate the question of taxing church property. I inclose you my check for $5, which you will please use as your judgment dictates in circulating the documents.

Yours truly, E. B. FOOTE.

Say It Is Sacrilegious.

BUTTEVILLE, OR., Feb. 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me one copy of "Crimes of Preachers," as I want something to show my Christian friends. I am strong in the faith of Infidelity. I would like to be able to help the cause, but am sick and cannot get out of the house, but hav lots of fun with my Christian friends. I show them the goodness of God to the United States; and I hav the "Old Testament Stories Illustrated." I hav found a few who will not read, either; say it is sacrilegious. Hoping the cause will ever grow, I remain, Yours truly,

J. R. KINYON.

Has Thought Himself Partly Out.

THOR, IOWA, March 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav received from a friend a few copies of your very interesting paper. I am a Freethinker, although raised by Christian parents and taught religion from childhood. I believe in a God, a creator of the universe, but not in the Bible or its three Gods. I believe in being a good man, and in doing what is right by our fellow-men. My bible is nature. I very early saw the humbug and greed of money of the preachers and their followers. I hav not read any papers or books on Freethought, and was very glad when I got your paper. A. C. HOLM.

Heston Induces Bible Study.

TRIVOLI, ILL., Feb. 24, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say that I got the catalog you sent me the other day, and I see that you hav another of Mr. Watson Heston's illustrated Bible books, and I want to get it. I hav the one where Adam is plowing with a big hog, and it has been looked at and read by a good many, and I think it has done some good. I know one man who sent and got a new Bible; he thought the book did not tell the truth, but now he is satisfied, and he has read more Bible this winter than in all his life before. I see by the catalog that the book that I want is $1.50. Please send me the "Handbook of Freethought" also.

GEO. HOVENDEN.

God Couldn't Get His Breath.

BUTLER, PA., April 15, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Should these few lines be read by any of our Christian friends I hope they will not become melancholy, as I wish only to call your attention to the vain attempt Christ made when he undertook to make the fig tree bear fruit at an unseasonable time of the year, and then cursed the tree on account of his failure. This not only givs very poor evidence of his infinit power, but also of the divine heart within. Neither does this show his infinit wisdom. For had he been infinitly wise he would not hav undertaken that in which he knew he certainly would fail. In this he was endeavoring to change an unalterable law in nature, which would be as difficult to do as it would hav been for God to get his breath before he made air.

J. O. FULLERTON.

It Was His Savior.

WESTERN SPRINGS, ILL., Feb. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5 for the renewal of my subscription and Paine's "Great Works Complete," because I like to hav Thomas Paine's works. His "Age of Reason" was the first Freethought book I ever had. It was translated into the Swedish language, and it was my savior from the old superstitions.

I hav been delaying my renewal in hopes of obtaining a new subscriber, but in vain. Send me your catalog, and if you hav the address of the Swedish Fritänkaren, Stockholm, please let me hav it, as I should like to subscribe for it.

Yours fraternally, NELS PEARSON.

Its Light Breaks Through the Clouds.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., April 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: There is a feeling caused by THE TRUTH SEEKER'S weekly appearance, which seems like the breaking away of the clouds of religious vapors that are continually hanging about us. We sometimes in our little home circle feel like a vessel at sea surrounded by a fog, so dense is the religious atmosphere here. THE TRUTH SEEKER, like a ray of sunshine, seems to dispel the fog here and there. It is a ray of light that bids us hope—bids us remember there are others like ourselvs. And I enjoy very much the letters from the truth seekers who reflect back to you a view of their surroundings and workings for truth. Not that we tire of talking to one another here, but occasionally a desire comes to one to exchange views with another of his own mind. JOHN M. CUSHMAN.

Men Afraid of Their Wives.

WALLA WALLA, WASH., April 15, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find order for books and $4.95 to pay for the same. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for three years and could not now do without it. Mr. McFarlane and I are the only outspoken Freethinkers in our neighborhood. There are many that would be Liberals if it was not for their wives or the fear of being boycotted by the Christians.

The Methodists hav labored hard "to save sinners," prolonging their efforts for two weeks at one time, but made only two or three additions to their numbers. But in the town of Walla Walla there has been a great "outpouring of the holy spirit;" the "Christians" and Methodists hav raised sheol in grand style and "saved" perhaps a hundred "souls."

Soon as finances will admit I will send a larger order for books. W. A SHELTON.

Mark Them for Defeat.

NEW CAMBRIA, KAN., Feb. 16, 294.

MR. EDITOR: All Liberals no doubt agree that Mr. Heston made a good hit when he pictured the Congressmen who voted for the closing of the World's Fair on Sundays as asses. Now, we think he would make a still better hit to picture as asses, with their ears exceedingly long, all Liberals who aid or abet in any way whatever their reëlection the coming fall, because, if a person supports another knowing that he is a fraud, he is himself his own worst enemy. We hav had Liberals say to us that if they did not support a candidate of their own party for any reason they would not vote for the opposing party's candidate. Now, we believe, when we strike a man, in hitting him hard enough to knock him down. A man has great respect for the one who knocks him down, and none at all for the half-hearted fellow who makes the attempt and fails. JOHN W. ABBOTT.

Don't Owe the Church Anything.

NEW BOSTON, MICH., Feb. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Some of the Methodist "revivalists" at this place requested me to adjourn our school literary society. As president, I had no authority to do so, but being always ready to accommodate polite people, I called a special meeting to consider the question of adjournment for that week. A very lively discussion followed the motion. Only one argument was presented in favor of the plan. That was that we "ought not to attract people away from the church." This was met by the opposition with such sentences as: "The church is always demanding and never giving" "It has done nothing for us, why should we do anything for it?" "We don't owe it anything." "They havn't converted anyone yet, and probably will not to-night." "That preacher wants the earth," etc. How is that for young America? Heresy, caught in the public schools without doubt. I hav not trained them at all in this line of thought; neither do I read the Bible to them.

I was asked at the Fair to sign a petition to hav the Bible read in the public schools. I quickly said, "No, I don't believe in it." A voice behind me said, "Shake, partner, I'm with you." I turned to meet a very pleasant young man, also a teacher, from New Jersey. He it was who introduced me to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I owe him a debt of gratitude for that.

Yours for liberty, FRANK E. ROMINE.

A Freethought Letter-Writing Corps.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 17, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: All reform movements are somewhat allied, and through the single tax at least one man has become a subscriber to several Freethought weeklies in this manner.

In the New Orleans Times Democrat recently Mr. S. S. Bryan criticised single taxers, saying they were hypnotized by reading Henry George's voluminous writings. I replied, asking if Christians, Mohammedans, Buddhists, etc., were not equally hypnotized?

The Times-Democrat, Picayune, and Truth, each in turn, refused to print Mr. Bryan's affirmativ rejoinder on the ground that it attacked Christianity. Though a total stranger, he then mailed it to me to read and return, which I did, expressing regrets that it was not printed, and saying that only THE TRUTH SEEKER and a few other Freethought journals were liberal enough to publish such articles. Learning thus (and through a succeeding interview) for the first time in his life of these Freethought publications, he sent for sample copies and subscribed for several of them. Doubtless many more, like him, are kept in ignorance of such publications and the cause of Freethought incalculably retarded by the perverse attitude of the daily press. How to change this perverseness is therefore worthy of consideration by the best and noblest Freethought minds.

Until quite recently, the daily press as persistently misrepresented the facts about single tax and denied single taxers a hearing. But, mainly through a Single Tax "Letter-writing Corps" (every member of which pledged himself to write at least one letter to a target the captain of the corps named each week in the single tax newspapers) their attitude has changed.

Cannot Freethinkers profit by this example and do likewise? Editors are very careful of their reputation and circulation. And, when numerous letters, from intelligent men all-over the country, come pouring in, criticising their action, they are not likely to repeat the offense, even if they do not apologize for the one already committed. Reading no Freethought journals, and hence ignorant of the existence of a letter-writing-corps, they would naturally conclude from the receipt of so many intelligently-written letters that public sentiment was changing in favor of Freethought and act accordingly. Naturally possessed of superior intelligence, nearly all Freethinkers could write good letters, neatly, concisely, and grammatically. If, in addition to this, they were written in a kindly spirit, many editors would likely publish them. "Vinegar never catches flies," neither doth harsh criticism make converts. Thus, judiciously managed, a "letter-writing corps" might open to our communications our natural ally—the daily press—which now already is almost driven into Freethought ranks by the persecution it receives for publishing a Sunday edition.

If such a corps is formed, I, for one, hereby pledge myself to write a brief, pointed, respectful letter or postal to the target the captain of said corps names each week. Others approving the plan can push it to realization by similarly pledging themselvs and appointing E. M. Macdonald or some other New Yorker as the seat of Freethought publication as captain of the corps.

Another effectiv single tax campaign plan which Freethinkers might profitably copy is that of having for use on their envelopes, packages, etc., motto stickers, like postage stamps, on which is printed some striking sentence. We might use such as these: "Who made God?" "One world at a time." "There can be but little liberty on earth while men worship a tyrant in heaven."

Agitation of the question of taxation has caused nearly every state legislature to consider bills for changing their system of taxation. As a "rider" to all these bills, amendments "taxing church property equally with all other property" should be offered. To burden it with the rider to which they object, opponents of these bills would vote with church taxationists, thus giving them apparently more strength than they really possess at that time, and thus eventually helping to tax church property.

D. WEBSTER GROH.

A True Man Borne Down in the Battle.

BARNUM, MINN., April 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send you a copy of the will of L. H. Hawkins, who committed suicide April 1st. You can make your own comment on the same, and print any part of it you wish. I did not hear any particulars regarding the funeral, but presume it was conducted according to the will. Fraternally yours,

A. M. TOWNSEND.

"A. M. TOWNSEND, Barnum, Minn.—My Dear Judge: I hand you a copy of my brother's will. After reading, you may send to THE TRUTH SEEKER if you see fit. It shows how bravely a man may meet death without the aid of the orthodox faith.—Yours truly, H. H. HAWKINS, Thomson, Minn., April 15, 1894."

THE WILL.

To my friends, and to all whom it may concern: It being customary, before the physical death of an individual, to make what is termed a will, in which the statement is quite usual that he or she is of sound mind and memory, I take advantage of such custom to make known to the gentlemen whose names I shall presently mention my most sincere and urgent wishes as to the final disposition of my body, after these presents shall come into their hands. To the following named gentlemen, in whom I hav most exalted confidence, both as to their integrity, their honor, and their friendship, I trust the details of my funeral.

As you are well aware, I believe in no system of religion. I am, in its broadest sense, an Agnostic. I hav no fear of death, but court it, as I hav for over a year, with such yearning and curiosity that I am unable to longer wait for its coming. Since the death of my wife, and the settling of my boys in comfortable homes, I hav had no desire to liv. I admit, as society looks at it, I hav been at times madly reckless in my conduct, but to the injury of no one but myself. Had I not plunged into some kind of excitement, I would to-day hav been the inmate of an asylum for the insane, but "Such maddening moments as my past,

They could not and they did not last."

For some reason, unknown to me, all the attorneys of this place, except C. L Pratt, have formed a combination to either humiliate or destroy me. I do not care to make the fight, and hence, to avoid further suffering, I hav concluded to adopt heroic measures, and plunge headlong into the great unknown. To insure dying as I hav lived, an Infidel, it is my demand, that I be buried without religious ceremonies of any kind or character; neither reading, praying, sermons, psalm or hymn-singing shall be allowed. It would please me if my brother, H. H. Hawkins, or some one whom he may select, would say a few words over my body before burial, and let my friends sing, "When the Mists Hav Rolled Away." I desire to be buried beside my wife.

M. L. Toole, Wade Baker, D. M. Gunn, Phil. Casselberg, and E C. Kiley, together with my brother, who livs at Thomson, are the gentlemen in whose hands I trust the carrying out of my wishes as above set forth. Do not, I beg of you, forget what I so urgently ask—to place me in my last resting-place without one single word or act of a religious character. A simple coffin, which any carpenter can make, is all I ask.

I feel that my eyesight, which for many years has been precarious, is again to fail me. My suffering has been too acute in the past to undertake on my part to bear again, and for the following reasons I prefer death: Since my wife died I hav had no desire to liv. My sickness during the past four months has removed all ambition to longer exist. The threatened trouble with my eyes is another reason why I prefer death. And last, but not least, the persistent persecutions of my enemies · · · in their efforts to humiliate and disgrace me, has been the "straw that broke the camel's back," for, in my present condition of health, and in the condition of my finances, I do not feel competent to make the fight and push the conflict, but I do assure you all that I hav committed no wrong, hav indulged in no crime.

Judge Holland, in making his order upon my final report as assignee for Chapman & Dunton, did me a great injustice, which cast a gloom over my life from the time it was served on me by my arch enemy, . . . I want the world to know that the following attorneys, who are now arrayed against me, F. Price aud J. N. True, were formerly my lawyers in the same matter.

I trust, gentlemen, that you, in whose hands I hav placed [the execution of] the most solemn wish of my life, will not allow yourselvs to be influenced by any outside pressure, but will place me at rest just as you find me. Do not remove or change my clothing. I have carefully prepared myself, and as I lie before you in exactly the condition I desire to be buried, place me as you find me, without disturbing one article of my apparel, in a coffin, and lay me away by the side of my wife, the only womau I ever loved.

I now want to say good by to you one and all, and to all of my friends.

"Here's a sigh for those who love me,
And a smile for those who hate,
But whatever sky's above me,
Here's a heart for any fate."

L. H. HAWKINS.

[We are deeply pained to learn of the many troubles and griefs of our friend, L. H. Hawkins, and of his death. He was a man who richly deserved a kindlier fate. His hospitable home at Shakopee was always open to the Freethought worker, and both himself and Mrs. Hawkins delighted to aid the cause of liberty and justice. Some years ago Mr. Hawkins became identified with the Topolobambo enterprise of A. K. Owen, and he went to Mexico as the attorney of the Credit Foncier Company. He soon became dissatisfied with the management of the colony, and returned to the United States, having lost one of his sons by small-pox while at Sinaloa. He stopped at Tempe, Arizona, where he remained for some time. Through all the changes of fortune he stood erect, refusing to the last to bend the knee at superstition's altar. He lived a free man, and such he died. May his surviving sons grow into manhood emulous of all that was tender and noble aud true in the character and life of their father and their mother.—ED. T. S.]

The God of Job.

RAPID RIVER, April 15, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: My father and mother were Presbyterians of the most pronounced type, and with their lessons on election, predestination, man's free will, and effectual calling, they kept my youthful ideas in a state of chaotic eruption, like the seething waters of an angry geyser, and they insisted that the Bible held the key to all these mysteries, and obliged me to read a portion of it every day when a boy. When I grew to manhood I kept up this practice, until its mysteries became absurdities, and ever since I hav left to God the solving of his own puzzles. But, on account of its gauzy delusions, fogbank pretensions, and granite-wall contradictions, I hav studied its pages a great deal since then, and, like the old Roman Infidel, I am surprised that two priests can look each other in the face at any of their pretentious ceremonies without laughing outright, and yet it never dawned on me until a few days ago that our Bible was the inspired word of two distinct gods, with nothing in common between them; but such is the case. The God of Job has no more resemblance to the God of Moses than a human being has to an octopus. The God of Job knows neither Jew nor gentile, creed nor color, bond nor free; the only line he draws is between the upright, fearless, truth-speaking man and the lying, whining, hypocritical knave. If he visits America and sits in judgment on our sanctimonious hypocrits, it will take every bullock and ram on our shores to pay their fines, with a brisk trade in importation going on besides. To make this plain to the reader, it will only be necessary to giv a few of the principal incidents in the story. The author first introduces us to Job of Uz, a wealthy, honest, pious man, with a family of seven sons and three daughters. The sons and daughters are out on a grand spree, which kept old man Job busy offering sacrifices continually, to keep the Lord in good humor, and from taking notice of their behavior. The author, or reporter, then tells us of a gathering of the sons of God at their father's, and Satan came also. From this it would seem that Satan, as a general thing, was too busy with his own affairs to attend his father's levees, or such particular notice would not hav been taken of his presence at this time. And the Lord showed Satan marked attention, aud inquired in the most friendly manner about his wanderings, and does not seem to hav taken the slightest notice of the rest of his progeny. As the feast went on, Job's God became irrelevant in his remarks—too much soma juice, perhaps, or Satan may hav been twitting him with having no followers among the children of men. But the reporter has recorded nothing which led to his saying: "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in this earth—a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil." To this Satan replied: "Job is all for the dollar, you hav bribed him to hypocrisy; but take away the possessions with which you hav bribed him, and he will curse thee to thy face." To use a sporting phrase, Satan had his father in the corner, and he had either to put up or shut up, and as old Jupiter had too much grit to take backwater, he was obliged, much against his will, to giv Satan power over all Job's possessions, and no doubt this rascally father of politicians chuckled with Satanic glee over the way he had outgeneraled his father.

Without giving Job's family time to taper off, Satan, with a four cornered wind, demolished the house, and killed the whole drunken outfit, and with the aid of Sabeans, Chaldeans, and fire from heaven he stole or destroyed the rest of Job's possessions. It is probable there is a mistake about the fire from heaven, as Satan had too keen an eye to business to go to a foreign market for a commodity with which he was overstocked at home, according to priestly accounts.

And it came to pass that Jupiter gave another ball, and Satan was again a guest. At this second party, Jupiter reproaches Satan with great bitterness for inveigling him into the bet to destroy Job without cause. We hav here an open, unequivocal confession from God's own mouth that he is acting unjustly or sinning, and I hav always contended that God's actions were all imperfect, and some of them highly criminal, and felt highly indignant thereat, but when I find him so conscience-stricken over his own shortcomings, and confessing his sins with such open candor to his father confessor Satan, to tell the honest truth, I feel like forgiving him for all the evil he has done, and saying, "Depart in peace, but see that you don't do it again." Satan and the supper overcame all Jupiter's good resolutions, and, to use another sporting phrase, Satan hauled in a fat jack pot, for when this party broke up he was armed with inquisitorial powers to put Job to the torture. "And he smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot to his crown." Then this victim of a set of drunken, gambling gods took a piece of a broken pot, and with the sharp edge of the break scratched himself withal. The reporter, not being up to his business, does not inform us, but it is evident from this that Job's boils were of the scarlet-colored variety, and the pain and itch of them are intolerable. At this time Job's wife gave him excellent advice—to curse God and die. But Job seems to hav been as obstinate as a Scotchman, and was determined to hang on and see the thing through as long as he could sit in the ash-bin. Job's three friends, hearing of his misfortunes, came to see him under pretense of condoling with him, but, as we find from the book, in reality to gloat and rejoice over his calamities. In solemn silence, to which the scraping of the potsherd as it rattled over the boils kept time, Job and his friends sat staring at each other for seven days and seven nights. To relieve Job's weary arms, not one of them offered to take a turn at his back with the potsherd, but in grim silence they sat, which must hav added considerably to Job's discomfort. Those who doubt my veracity will find the foregoing in the first two chapters of Job, and as Bibles, like other weeds, are plentiful, all can investigate for themselvs, and from this out we will giv chapter and verse for all quotations. At the end of seven days and seven nights Job opened his mouth and cursed in very emphatic language his natal day, and put forward a great many whys and wherefores which are still whys and wherefores to all religiously-educated people who hav the honesty to doubt and investigate. One quotation will illustrate all the rest: "Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul?" (Job, iii, 20). This reflects on God's wisdom and justice, and contains the insinuation that he is cruel without cause.

From here to near the end of the book it is pretty much repetition; Job's friends urging him, like Jesuitical father confessors, to make a clean breast of the sins and follies he had been guilty of, over which, no doubt, they would hav rejoiced immensely. And they brought forward a great many orthodox arguments to prove that Job must hav committed some Alpine sins aud follies, or God, being a just God, would never hav used him so. I will giv a few quotations as samples of the comfort they gave Job: "Remember, I pray thee, who ever perished, being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off? Even as I hav seen, they that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same. By the blast of God they perish, and by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed" (Job iv, 7-9). "The wicked man travaileth with pain all his days" (Job xv, 20). "The light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine. · · · His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side" (Job xviii, 5-12). "The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrit but for a moment" (Job xx, 5). I hav given these quotations at random, and all their lengthy harangs are of the same pattern, and it must be admitted that they are of a piece with the cold comfort that is generally given by the orthodox to an unfortunate man. Job will grant nothing of this and maintains his honesty and integrity and impeaches God's justice and laments that kicking will do no good, as God, being so much stronger, will beat him in the end. He reproaches his friends bitterly for taking sides with God against the right, to curry favor—the same as the orthodox among ourselvs. I will giv a few of Job's sayings: "Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him? who will say unto him, What doest thou? · · · For he breaketh me with a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds without cause" (Job ix, 12-17) "Will ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him? Will ye accept his person? will ye contend for God?" (Job xiii, 7, 8.) "My face is foul with weeping, and on my eyelids is the shadow of death. Not for any injustice in mine hands" (Job xvi, 16, 17). "Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment" (Job xix, 7. "God forbid that I should justify you: till I die I will not remove mine integrity from me" (Job xxvii, 5). In Job's speeches we hav the doubting investigator who is beginning to think that God is no better than he ought to be, but is afraid of God's power; while in his friends we hav the utterances of genuin, abject believers who, whatever their real opinions may be, through fear and selfishness are afraid to giv voice to anything but the most servile flattery. Men of this stamp thank God for cyclones, floods, accidents, and hard times, and the crawling sycophancy of their conduct never seems to strike them, and the reason is obvious: They hav been taught to lie to God and about God from their earliest years, and in this duplicity pickled generation after generation until they are hypocrits to the marrow in their bones, and the word of an irreligious pickpocket is more reliable than the oath of a pious Senator.

Job's friends, seeing that he will not confess, keep silence. Then Elihu, a bystander who had been listening to the debate, took up the cudgels in Jupiter's behalf. He occupies half his time trying to impress his audience with the wonderful benefits they will derive from listening to his drivel, and the other half in trying to tell them something he had never known or else forgotten. Elihu is the father and founder of theology, and his disciples are just where he left them. Elihu says: "Behold, my belly is as wine which hath no vent; it is ready to burst like new bottles. I will speak, that I may be refreshed" (Job xxxii, 19, 20). According to Elihu, theology is not an emanation from the brain, but a gaseous exhalation from an overloaded stomach; if science can discover some other way of expelling this gas from our priests and parsons our religious population will be healthier, as it must be confessed, if we believe Elihu, a priest or parson is no better than an open sewer.

How long Elihu would hav trifled with time is uncertain had not Jupiter put in an appearance and demanded with contempt: "Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?" (Job xxxviii, 2.) And Elihu does not seem to hav waited to giv his address, but must hav skedaddled and hid in the scrub; or, as his oration was of a piece with the speeches of Job's friends, he would hav been fined in the wind-up had Jupiter known where to find him. Jupiter challenges Job to debate the case at issue between them, but instead of sticking to the question, which was certainly the justice or injustice of Job's afflictions, Jupiter launches forth into a windy description of creation and the elements, taking credit to himself, as he goes along, for getting up the whole panorama, and asks Job if he knows how it was done or where he was at the time. This no doubt confused Job, as it was entirely foreign to the case and something he had lodged no complaint about. Jupiter then marches a whole battalion of animals before Job's mental vision and dilates on the wonderful qualities of each as they pass; and it must be admitted it will require a well-stretched poetic license to save Jupiter from the accusation of gross exaggeration. As a sample of special pleading, Jupiter's speech is a masterpiece, for Job's boils and other afflictions, which were the grievances Job had complained of, were as entirely ignored as if they never had been, Jupiter knowing he had no excuse for his conduct in the matter. Job, tired out, disgusted, and discouraged, as he well might be in such a court as this, begs off; and here the best of Jupiter's character is seen, for, to use a law phrase, he renders a sweeping verdict in Job's favor, with all expenses, and fines Job's friends, who had praised and flattered himself, for lying, seven rams and seven bullocks each. If Jupiter visits America and fines our pious, oily-mouthed liars like this, we will be obliged to become vegetarians, as there will be no eatable beast left, even the pigs will go to the last grunter. Jupiter paid all loss and damage sustained by Job and gave him twice as much as he had before, but whether he brought the stock from heaven or got Satan to steal them from some other unoffending man the book does not say.

From the quotations given it is plain that Job's God did not consider his actions perfect by any means. He lays claim to great power and mechanical ability, but frankly ackuowledges the injustice of some of his actions, thereby confessing that he was imperfect, a sinner. And Job maintained throughout the book that God was unjust, and in the wind-up God confesses that Job told the truth. And in fining Job's friends we can see that hypocrisy was not one of the weaknesses of Job's God and that he took no pride in being considered better than he was. In strong, emphatic language, without reserve, he declares Job perfect; a perfect and an upright man; a better being than himself; dispelling the priestly fable of original sin, and making it clear that if any son of God died it must hav been to expiate the sins of his father, not of his brothers and sisters; thus leaving that distorted delusion, Christianity, without a foot to stand on, and stamping the rest of our Bible a forgery and a fraud and the God of Moses an overgrown impostor. Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

" Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour." .

Contented Jim.

Everything pleased our neighbor Jim,
When it rained
He never complained,
But said wet weather suited him.
" There never is too much rain for me,
And this is something like," said he.

When earth was dry as a powder mill,
He did not sigh
Because it was dry.
But said if he could hav his will
It would be his chief supreme delight
To liv where the sun shone day and night.

When winter came, with its snow and ice,
He did not scold
Because it was cold,
But said: "Now, this is real nice;
If ever from home I'm forced to go.
I'll move up north with the Esquimau."

A cyclone whirled along it's track;
And did him harm—
It broke his arm,
And stripped the coat from off his back;
" And I would giv another limb
To see such a blow again," said Jim.

And when at length his years were told;
And his body bent
And his strength all spent,
And Jim was very weak and old:
"I long hav wanted to know," he said,
How it feels to die"—and Jim was dead.

The Angel of death had summoned him
To heaven, or—well,
I cannot tell;
But I knew that the climate suited Jim;
And cold or hot, it mattered not—
It was to him the long-sought spot.

Across the Continent.—Continued.

We reached the state line of Kansas sometime Sunday night, and on Monday, April 2d, we were in Colorado. At Pueblo we saw the sun rise in splendor. Pueblo is an odd-looking but pretty place, destitute of grass, as it seemed from the car windows. I remembered that some of our children of the Corner lived in that place, and wondered if some of them might not be among the bright boys who were playing about the station. The railroad runs through the adobe region; and some of the houses of the Mexican village on the right, I noted, were made of adobe. The Mexican women at this village appeared dressed in flaming colors of red and yellow, and the little children were gay as the plumage of Southern birds. Once in a while we saw a coyote running along through the wild cacti. The Mexican soap-plant dotted the sandy way, also, and in the midst of one wide, grassless stretch was the grave of some pioneer who had perished there afar from home and friends. His companions had made him a bed amid the sagebrush and cactus and inclosed it with a wooden railing. But he sleeps as sweetly there as in a more pretentious spot, and the heavens smile as kindly above his resting-place there in the desert as they do upon the splendid mausoleum of the first Napoleon at Paris.

Away to the left were seen the towering Spanish peaks and the snowclad Greenhorn mountains loomed in majesty, while Pike's Peak's snowy top glistened amid the clouds, fourteen thousand feet above sea level.

At Colorado Springs, which was our next station, I was glad to stop off a day and night, and found pleasant rooms with Mrs. Dillon on Pike's Peak avenue. I know our children belonging to the Corner liv in Colorado Springs, but I had no time to look them up, and they did not know I was to be in their town a day and a night. Inquiry revealed that the manager of the Opera House is a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, at least I was so informed, and I was sorry not to hav seen himself and family, as well as others whose letters hav appeared in the Corner.

Colorado Springs is a lovely place with pure, invigorating mountain air. No manufacturing is allowed here, and no saloons, consequently rioting and drunkenness are unknown. Avenues are one hundred and forty feet wide, and every other street a hundred feet across, with ditches for the mountain streams on either side. The laws are rigid, and if the owner of a lot uses it for selling intoxicating liquors the land is forfeited, this being in the deed of sale.

It was voting day, and the women were to vote for the first time under the revised Constitution. They were alert and activ, and were working for special favorits. The horses wore placards bearing this legend: "Vote the straight Republican ticket." Tuesday, April 3d, will always be a memorable day in the history of the women of Colorado.

I looked over upon Cheyenne mountain where Helen Hunt Jackson was buried amid the hills she loved so well. The heap of stones still marks the spot, but her body has been removed to a cemetery since Mr. Jackson's marriage to her niece. When I inquired the reason for the removal of the remains of Helen I was told that too many people went there for picnics. Now, I would be glad to think when I am gone that friends would come and picnic near my grave. It would be pleasant to know they thought so much of me, and I would prefer they should eat, drink, and be merry than that they should weep in sorrow over my last earthly bed.

I rode out to Manitou, six miles. The pretty town lies in a valley that penetrates the great range down through the foothills. The red rocks all around present a most singular and strange appearance, and at first you cannot see the town at all until it is suddenly revealed. There are a half-dozen or more mineral springs here on the banks of Fountain creek, the Navajo, Shoshone, and Manitou being among the more popular. The elevation at Manitou is 6,297 feet, about six hundred feet higher than Mount Washington in New Hampshire. In a sort of park surrounded by beetling cliffs and hills are many curiously formed rocks, red and yellow. Great caverns and mysterious paths are all around. In the Ute pass are the Manitou Grand caverns, and the Cave of the Winds is another wild-looking and strange place. Between Colorado Springs and Manitou is a spot called "the Garden of the Gods," with huge, fantastic rocks, red in color, guarding its entrance—a wild, romantic place.

After chatting with Mrs. Dillon and viewing her poultry yard, noting her Plymouth Rocks and Brahma fowl, we bade good-bye to Colorado Springs and started again on our journey overland, and upgrade all the way, two immense engins puffing and pulling up the train. The rise in some places is four per cent, that is four feet to every one hundred, and the scenery is most impressiv and picturesque—a most wonderful part of the Rocky mountain region of Colorado. Up and away we climb through the Ute pass, the engins tugging harder and harder, passing huge boulders that sometime had rolled down from the top of strange peaks. Cascade City is the first station and then Raymond, two beautiful little villages in the mountains. We noted little houses of the prairie dogs, who with cunning instinct lay up food enough in autumn to last till warm weather comes again.

We passed a "dug-out," forsaken now, probably, but once the home of man, a heap of earth with a wooden door. The earth is dug out, poles or logs put up and slats across, which are covered with mud or clay, which makes a comfortable but, I should think, a rather warm shelter. At Woodlawn Park, up in the mountains, we stopped for dinner.

A gentleman, Mr. Wicks, of Colorado Springs, gave me much information as we rode on toward Cripple Creek, and told me, too, of the little Welsh pony his children had for a comrade and friend—a little colt only forty-nine inches high, which can bow, kneel, and perform several other tricks. He has picnics with the children, eats his corn and then begs for sugar and cookies. If refused, he pulls off the tablecover and runs off with it. He can open the gate with his teeth, and when the button was placed on the other side, he soon found it, and opened the gate just the same. When the little boy was feeding the chickens, and did not giv the pony, whose name is Cute, any corn, he picked him up and shook him out of his pantaloons.

Cripple Creek is a mining town, where a thousand mines hav been opened in two years, and the population is now between seven thousand and eight thousand.

Passing the old stage place, a cleared lot where stages stopped before the railroad was made, the whole route is one of wild, glorious magnificence, the clouds floating in regal beauty below the peaks, which I watched in wonder and awe at the sublimity of the scene.

At the Divide, not Continental, the water begins to run in two directions, one stream down to the Arkansas and the other opposit down to the River Platte. After leaving the Divide, the way grows more and more picturesque and grand.

The region is covered with fir and cedar trees. Among them are immense bowlders and wild, rocky ledges, and occasionally a small shed-like house appears, with a solitary man standing near the door. He has maybe taken up some land for a home, or has a cattle ranch, for herds of handsome cattle are grazing near by.

Our way is still cloudward, the cars sway from side to side, and go rocking like a cradle. Immense rocks are piled one upon another, and layers of stone reach high toward the skies, in many weird, fantastic forms. Great, white flecks of clouds lie upon air around the mountain peaks, presenting a picture beautiful and enchanting as it is wild and strange. The day was clear, the sun shone brightly, and the sky was blue as blue can be. On either side castellated walls of red and gray rocks tower high, while mountain streams break through the patches and banks of pure, white snow.

Talk about heaven, and the glories of the new Jerusalem! pearly gates and golden pavements! It all seems weak and puny compared with these hills and hollows, this grand and magnificent panorama. The scribes who wrote the Scriptures had never heard of the Rocky mountains, their golden sands, and the glory and grandeur that rest upon their lofty hights, never. And what a pity. How much more intelligently might they hav written had they been better informed.

At Florissent, I remembered letters that had been sent to the Corner, and looked out with tender love in my heart for the writers who live there.

Weird and broken shadows played along the rock-ribbed sides of the mountains, and my eyes continued feasting upon the constantly unfolding splendors and glories through which I rode. And when I thought there could be n thing newer or stranger, a sudden gleam of glory would leap out from the sun-kissed chasms in a blaze of new and greater magnificence. S. H. W.

Correspondence.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 7, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: You can see by my address that I hav moved. I read the Corner every week. The school that I go to now is the Annex school. I hav been corresponding with a girl named Deta Hooper. My mamma used to write for THE TRUTH SEEKER before she was married. Her name was C. May McCormack then. Mamma is sick in bed now, and it is very lonesome for my little brother and me when she cannot be about the house. Papa tries to do for mamma and us both, but no one can take mamma's place. Papa also used to write some for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. Bennett visited my grandpa on his return trip around the world, when my mamma was a girl at home.

I had the toothache very bad last night, also the earache. I hope you or any of the children that seat themselvs in your cosy Corner will never hav it, for it is very bad.

Well, as I can think of no more to say I will close. From your Freethinking friend, BLANCHE G. CHAMBERLIN.

[We hope your mamma will soon be well. Please giv her our love.—ED. C. C.]

BRONSTON, KY., March 19, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Several months hav passed since I last wrote to the Corner, so on this beautiful Sunday morning (beautiful from natural causes) I will again endeavor to pen you a few lines. Just now Dame Nature is changing her frosty garments for a cloak of green. The merry birds, the freshening air, the swelling buds, all herald the coming of spring. Soon the lovely flowers, nature's beautiful carpet-tacks, will begin to peep up here and there, on the rugged mountain, as well as in the sweet-scented meadow. There are a great many people in this neighborhood who would be, were we all Freethinkers, outspoken Liberals, but the clergy keep them intimidated, and in order to gain popularity, they dance on one foot to Freethought and shuffle with the other to Christianity. It is terrible to think of the many thick-skulled fanatics who are blindly groping in the unlighted, yawning abyss of ignorance and superstition. We hav a hard fight before us, but if we persevere and hav patience, much good can and will be accomplished. But there are some bigots that never will be reclaimed. They will not let the torch of reason light them out of the fathomless pit they hav fallen into. JEROME B. BROWN.

[Yes, perseverance and patience are needed in the Freethought camps.—ED. C. C.]

GEORGE'S STATION, PA., March 19, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON AND FRIENDS OF THE CORNER: I hav the pleasure once again to write to the Corner. I went to a Catholic church about two weeks ago. A priest from some other church preached. He said if you wanted to win a victory, you were to pray; he said Moses prayed, and he was victorious; then he said he ceased praying and he was defeated. Our school will be out in two weeks and three days. I will tell you about George's Station. There are three houses and the station house, the store and the butcher's shop. There is an oil pipe about a quarter of a mile from the station, up on the hill. Georges is down in a kind of hollow; the pipe got a leak in it and oil is running all over the road; it ran down to a hollow in the road and then it struck a crevice and ran down in the spring. At the store it is running all over everything about the place. The people who liv there are moving away. The man living there has a large tank sunk and he dipped two barrels of oil one day. The railroad runs just below our farm; we can see the train go by. Our school is very small now; a good many of the pupils hav quit, so I do not care about going. I never miss reading the Children's Corner. Good-bye for this time. Yours for Freethought and reform,

IRENE STOREY.

N.B.—I would like if some of the boys and girls of the Corner would write to me. My address is: Irene Storey, George's Station, Westmoreland county, Pa.

[We hope Irene will not lose her interest in her school. The years at school are golden.—ED. C. C.]

TORTURE INSTRUMENTS employed in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries for the Promulgation of Christianity. Being the Nuremberg Collection, and including specimens from The Holy Inquisition.

THIRTY-FIVE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Spanish Collar, Thumbscrew, Iron Collar, the Rack, the Iron Crown, Leg Crusher, the Stocks, the Heretic Catcher, the Iron Boot, the Hot Mitten, a Mouth-pear (gag), Iron Masks recommended by the Inquisition, Breaking and Burning on the Wheel, the Ducking Cage, the Chastity Belt for women, the Spider, the Iron Virgin Up to Date the Execution Bell, etc.

"I used to read in books," says Colonel Ingersoll, "how our fathers persecuted mankind But I never appreciated it. I read it, but it did not burn itself into my soul. I did not really appreciate the infamies that have been committed in the name of religion until I saw the iron arguments that Christians used."

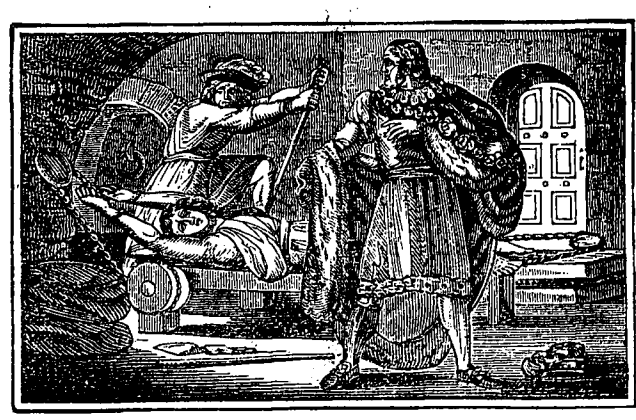
Just Out.—25 Cents.—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about



1300 MINISTERS HAVE BEEN GUILTY

of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's Men, Women, and Gods," and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria, the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets, Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town, the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portuguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America, Materials of Human History.

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History, Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love.

Price reduced from $1.75 to $1.00. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892. which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically unites the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

Three Excellent Pamphlets.

THUMBSCREW AND RACK.

When you hear a person say that Christianity has helped civilization and then hear him go on to tell how much good it has done, just hand him a copy of George E. Macdonald's "Thumbscrew and Rack." Let him read it, and if he does not turn away in sickening disgust and shuddering horror he will be less than human. He can but revolt at a system that evolved such instruments of cruelty, such horrible evidences of malignity, such devilish implements for the purpose of enforcing acceptance of Christian dogmas, and close his eyes with a moan of anguish and sympathy for those who suffered from the barbarity and brutality of a system that still holds human beings in the bonds of ignorance.

If, after reading the book and viewing the illustrations, he should still, by any manner of means, consider the Bible a good, reliable book and the veritable word of God, just call his attention to

THE BIBLE INQUIRER.

This is a key to Bible investigation, and its author has done a noble work and conferred a benefit upon the world in presenting this book to the public. It is one of the most useful of books, a handy volume to carry in the pocket and upon occasion to be used in confounding the ignorant and bigoted. It is indeed an eye-opener, and whoever reads it cannot, in all conscience, continue to take stock in the "Book of Books." If he did, he would at once be rated by all intelligent persons as non compos mentis.

THE GIANT DELUSION.

The old fetiches get a good many hard knocks, first and last, from the level-headed and strong-minded and among the hardest hits may be counted Otto Wettstein's strong and sturdy blows at the old superstitions that every now and then appear in various forms and new dresses.

Mr. Wettstein is a reasoner and brings in his evidence in such a way that one is obliged to see the facts of the case. "The Giant Delusion" deserves to be widely read, and no doubt will be; and if the author's arguments can be refuted he and all others will be glad to know it.

WOMAN: FOUR CENTURIES OF PROGRESS. A lecture delivered at the Freethinkers' International Congress at Chicago, Ill., October, 1893. By Susan H. Wixon.

A noble address by a noble, womanly woman. It should be read by every woman and every man. Especially excellent to place in the hands of women who are members of the churches. Price 10 cents.—Progressive Thinker.

THUMBSCREW AND RACK. Torture implements employed in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries for the promulgation of Christianity. By Geo. E. Macdonald.

A concise, graphic account, with pictorial illustrations, of the instruments of torture used by churchly inquisitors to convert or destroy heretics and Infidels. Price 10 cents.—Progressive Thinker.

The American Israelite, a paper printed in Cincinnati. Ohio, and now in its fortieth volume, in its issue of March 8th makes a two-column extract from "Woman: Four Centuries of Progress," and speaks in its editorial lines after this fashion: "In Chicago and outside thereof none dared to burst this bubble of Christian love except those Freethinkers in their Congress. And there even, we know only of one courageous woman—her name is Susan H. Wixon—who argued clearly and boldly to the point. It was the heel of Achilles in Christian history which she struck.

"TEACHER."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN: WAS HE A CHRISTIAN? By John E. Remsburg. Truth Seeker Co., 28 Lafayette Place, New York. Cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

The motto of Chas. Bradlaugh was "Thorough." Mr. Remsburg may as fairly wear it on his escutcheon—if he has one. The question as to Lincoln's religious belief was raised by one of his biographers, Dr. Holland, and seemingly would not down, but Mr. Remsburg's book is based on fifteen years work in collecting evidence from over one hundred and twenty witnesses, and as the ratio is one hundred to twenty that Lincoln was not a professed Christian, not accepting its vital and distinctiv dogmas, it looks as though Mr. Remsburg had thoroughly settled the question, but such matters are becoming perhaps impossible to settle when the status of a man to-day, like Dr. Briggs, himself claiming to be a Christian, is in dispute. Mr. Remsburg's effort to find out the truth has discovered many interesting bits of biography of Lincoln hardly to be found in other and more pretentious works.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. From a long, critical, and appreciativ review by Stephen H. Allison in the Agnostic Journal we take the following excerpts:

"The Dynamic Theory of Life and Mind," by Mr. James B. Alexander, is a careful work, which must hav cost its author a considerable amount of time, and involved a vast amount of research—in fact, it may, without exaggeration, be called a veritable "Bible of Science." This volume, which extends to 1,067 pages, is embellished with over four hundred illustrations, and the extremely full and accurate index leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. The author has ably marshaled an immense array of facts in support of his thesis that "all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respectiv environments." In order to prove his point, Mr. Alexander has roamed over the whole field of physical science, and has requisitioned the works of such leading writers and thinkers as Agassiz, Bain, Bastian, Binet, and Fere, Charcot, Darwin, Draper, Geddes, and Thomson, Haeckel, Huxley, and others too numerous to mention. . . .

Embryology and the comparativ development of man and other animals are treated by Mr. Alexander in an elaborate and exhaustiv manner. The statement, that it would require an expert to discriminate between the human embryo of four weeks and that of a horse, ox, dog, or rabbit at its corresponding stage of development, will not create any surprise after looking attentivly at the illustration after Haeckel which is reproduced representing the embryos of fish, chick, hog, and man at various stages of development. The resemblance at an early age between the embryos of such different animals is truly remarkable, and the illustration speaks more forcibly than words. A chapter is devoted to the consideration of rudimentary organs in man, showing his kindred with the "beasts that perish;" and I would specially recommend this chapter for perusal to all devotees of the "design argument." In the sixth chapter ten valuable and extensiv tables are given from Haeckel's "Evolution of Man." The testimony of geology is then marshaled in ten chapters, which furnish a complete armory of facts on the subject, sufficient to prove that in the vast geological periods, with their diversity of conditions, there was ample time for the development of the different species of plant and animal life which now exist on this planet. The survey of the geological history of organic life proves conclusivly "that there has been general progress in the types of life from the beginning to the end." . . .

Among other important chapters, that on "The Origin of Sex" calls for special study, as it embodies the result of recent researches by Geddes and Thomson, and other authorities, on this subject. Mr. Alexander then makes an incursion into the field of physics, and reviews in succession the various forces of nature. In his chapter on "Crystallization" there is the following pregnant passage, which expresses the views which he has been led to hold by his preceding investigations: "Since we hav got a habit of talking of the mineral kingdom and of the organic kingdoms, we are apt, inadvertently, to get a half impression that these are independent departments of nature, in which the materials used and the laws governing their movements and arrangements are different and independent. It is our first duty to rid ourselvs of this false impression, and to come to a realization of the fact that nature is only one. We may call it all a mineral kingdom, if we choose, in which we are to consider every organic body as a lot of minerals arranged in a particular form, and, therefore, liable to a particular set of reactions. Or we may call it all an organic kingdom, in which case the so-called minerals become organic bodies of simple constitution." The limits of space forbid my dealing further with this book, which covers such multifarious subjects as the senses, on each of which there is a separate chapter; the comparativ anatomy of the brain, and functions of its several parts; memory, conscience, the will, sleep, hypnotism, animal intelligence, telepathy, language, the ego and multiple ego, consciousness, theological considerations, energy and ether, force and form, and many other topics too numerous even to mention. I advise all who wish to hav a complete scientific education to purchase and read "The Dynamic Theory of Life and Mind."

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Socia Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap, II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered b men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the us-, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman,

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. the book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for is bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

The Creation of God.

By DR. JACOB HARTMANN.

An explanation of the origin of the God Idea, and the mental processes that led to the formation of idols and the worship of them. From the time of Terah's apostasy, Abraham's reformation and his banishment for heresy and blasphemy against the Chaldean idols, to Christ's coming, the principal characters are analyzed and shown to be human, by thought and deed. It is made plain that the peculiar phraseology, cant sayings, subterfuges, miracles, wonder-workings, and supernatural padding are the proper offspring of the then existing barbarism, ignorance, and superstition, constituting the peculiar politics of the day.

Gems of Thought.

THE strongest frailty of a feeble mind is revenge.—Juvenal.

THE most dangerous robbers are those who know how to plunder the people by law.—Galveston News.

He who glorifies his ancestry is an aristocrat, but he who glorifies his progeny is a noble-man.—Katherine Mabley Corbett.

IT is idle to attribute the destruction of superstition to the Reformation. Protestants were as superstitious as Catholics.—Henry Thomas Buckle.

NAY, never falter; no great deed is done
By falterers who ask for certainty.
No good is certain, but the steadfast mind,
The undivided will to seek the good;
'Tis that compels the elements, and wrings
A human music from the indifferent air.
The greatest gift a hero leaves his race
Is to hav been a hero.
—George Eliot.

A GOVERNMENT founded upon anything except liberty cannot and ought not to stand. All the wrecks on either shore of the stream of time—all the wrecks of cities and nations, are a warning that no nation founded on slavery can live. From sand-enshrouded Egypt, from the marble wilderness of Athens, from every fallen stone of mighty Rome, comes a wail—a cry: "No nation founded on slavery can stand."—R. G. Ingersoll.

CREED and faith are antagonistic terms, for we can feel no need of creed unless we doubt the power of truth. The truth can never be put into a creed, because the truth is infinit and creeds are finite. Every sect has been the result of this attempt. A society with a creed is a sect, and what is worse, a sect bound to error; for, even if a creed could be framed broad enough to express the truth to-day, it would fail to express the truth to-morrow. Faith is freedom, creeds are fetters. As for those people who are tired of "freedom" and "democracy," an ethical society would not seem to be the place for them; the holy Romau Catholic church affords a warm fireside for those who cannot bear the fresh, clear air of freedom.—Isaac Hull Platt.

WE begin to get the large point of view. When our great principles run into common life, we know that we hav realized their measure. Elsewise they are eidolons, dreams, vague offerings, unjoined outlines and patches and dashes of inharmonic color. Every American believes in liberty. What is the quality of this liberty? It shifts, it is up or down, with every individual you meet, so that, until we know the individual fully, we do not know the quality of his "liberty." Freedom of conscience? It was one thing to Roger Williams, another to the Quakers, another to the Puritans; it is freedom within Christian lines to many to-day, or freedom within present social principles. Beyond that the offender finds only wilderness.—Horace L. Traubel.

No practice is commoner with small-minded folk than that of trying to knock down persons of an opposit way of thinking by hurling at them some big, unpopular name of mysterious import. A man takes a broad, unitary view of the universe, and immediately some little word-monger launches at him, "Pantheist!" No epithet is more grossly misused in this way than that of "Materialist." Every one whose reasoning follows closely the visible order of things, and who refuses to accept unverifiable assumptions, is immediately branded Materialist. But does it not look as if the epithet might be retorted with far more justice? The most obvious criticism, it seems to me, of those who take what they call a spiritual view of life is its exceeding unspirituality. Such folks, in general, hav only the grossest, most infantil notions of spirit.—Wm. H. Johnson.

IT is no light thing to hav secured a livelihood on condition of going through life masked and gagged. To be compelled, week after week and year after year, to recite the symbols of ancient faith and lift up his voice in the echoes of old hopes, with the blighting thought in his soul that the faith is a lie, and the hope no more than the folly of the crowd; to read hundreds of times in a twelvemonth, with solemn unction, as the inspired word of the Supreme, what to him are as meaningless as the abracadabras of the conjuror in a booth; to go on to the end of his days administering to simple folk holy rites of commemoration and solace, when he has in his mind at each phrase, "What dupes are these simple folk, and how wearisomely counterfeit their rites"; and to know through all that this is to be the one business of his prostituted life, that so dreary and hateful a piece of play-acting will make the retrospect of his last hours—of a truth here is the very abomination of desolation of the human spirit indeed.—John Morley.

THE JAFFA AND JERUSALEM RAILROAD.

A little double iron track,
A station here, a station there;
A locomotiv, tender, tank,
A coach with patent swinging chair;
A postal car and baggage too,
A platform of the Miller make,
With buffer, duffer, chain, and spike,
And nobby automatic brake.
Such is the pride of orient hordes,
And Syria's brightest modern gem,
The railroad train that snails along
'Twixt Jaffa and Jerusalem.

Beware, O sacred mooley cow,
The engin when it rings its bell!
Beware, O camel, when you hear
The whistle's sharp and warning swell!
And, nativ of the Holy Land,
Unused to modern travel's snare,
And soothed by guileful taffy talk,
The awful peanut boy beware!
Else, trusting to his words and wares
Thou may'st hav reason to condemn
The style of traffic that prevails
'Twixt Jaffa and Jerusalem.

And when, oh, when the bonds fall due,
How vexed and wroth will wax the state;
From Nebo's mound to Nazareth,
The cry will sound, "Repudiate,"
From Hebron to Tiberius,
From Jordan's banks unto the sea,
Will swell the chorus loud and long,
Against that "——— monopoly!"
The horny-handed shepherd swain,
Oppressed by bonded stratagem,
Will curse the corporation line,
'Twixt Jaffa and Jerusalem.

YAHWEH IS A JUDGE OF LIVE STOCK.

And as for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I judge between cattle and cattle, between the rams and the he goats.—Ezek. xxxiv, 17.

J. W. THROCKMORTON, pioneer in and ex-governor of Texas, has recently deceased.

IN New Rochelle, New York, private detectivs were arrested and fined as vagrants.

NINETEEN members of the San Francisco police force hav been dismissed in disgrace.

IN the House of Commons a bill has been introduced providing local self-government for Scotland.

THE most famous hotel in the South, the St. Charles. of New Orleans, was destroyed by fire on April 29.

IN St. Paul, the Socialists, Populists, and Prohibitionists hav united in the municipal campaign. It is suggestiv.

SENATOR FRANCIS BROWNE STOCKBRIDGE, of Michigan, died in Chicago, April 30. Born in Bath, Maine, April 9, 1826.

ON April 26, Asquith, Home Secretary, moved in the House of Commons the disestablishment of the church in Wales.

IN the House, Cooper, Democrat, of Florida, introduced a bill for the free coinage of silver dollars of value equal to gold dollars.

EDITOR ROSEWATER, of the Omaha Bee, was sentenced for contempt by Judge Scott to serve thirty days in jail and pay a fine of $500 and costs.

JAMES M. HARVEY, of Kansas, ex-governor and ex-United States Senator, died near Junction City in that state on April 16th. Born Sept. 21, 1833.

SINCE the decision of the South Carolina Supreme Court against the dispensary law the saloons hav generally opened again. A test case will soon be made.

COXEY bands hav seized trains in Indiana and Ohio, and in the latter state the governor, McKinley, ordered out the militia, and "Colonel" Galvin surrendered.

A LANDSLIDE into the river Ste. Anne, near the village of River Noire, Quebec, caused a dozen or more deaths and destroyed $500,000 worth of property.

THE strike on the Great Northern continues. All traffic is suspended, to the incalculable damage of business interests. But wage earners are suffering still more.

THERE are divisions of the "Commonweal army" at Washington, Des Moines, Chicago, Portland. Tacoma, Sacramento, and in Ohio, Indiana, New Jersey and other states.

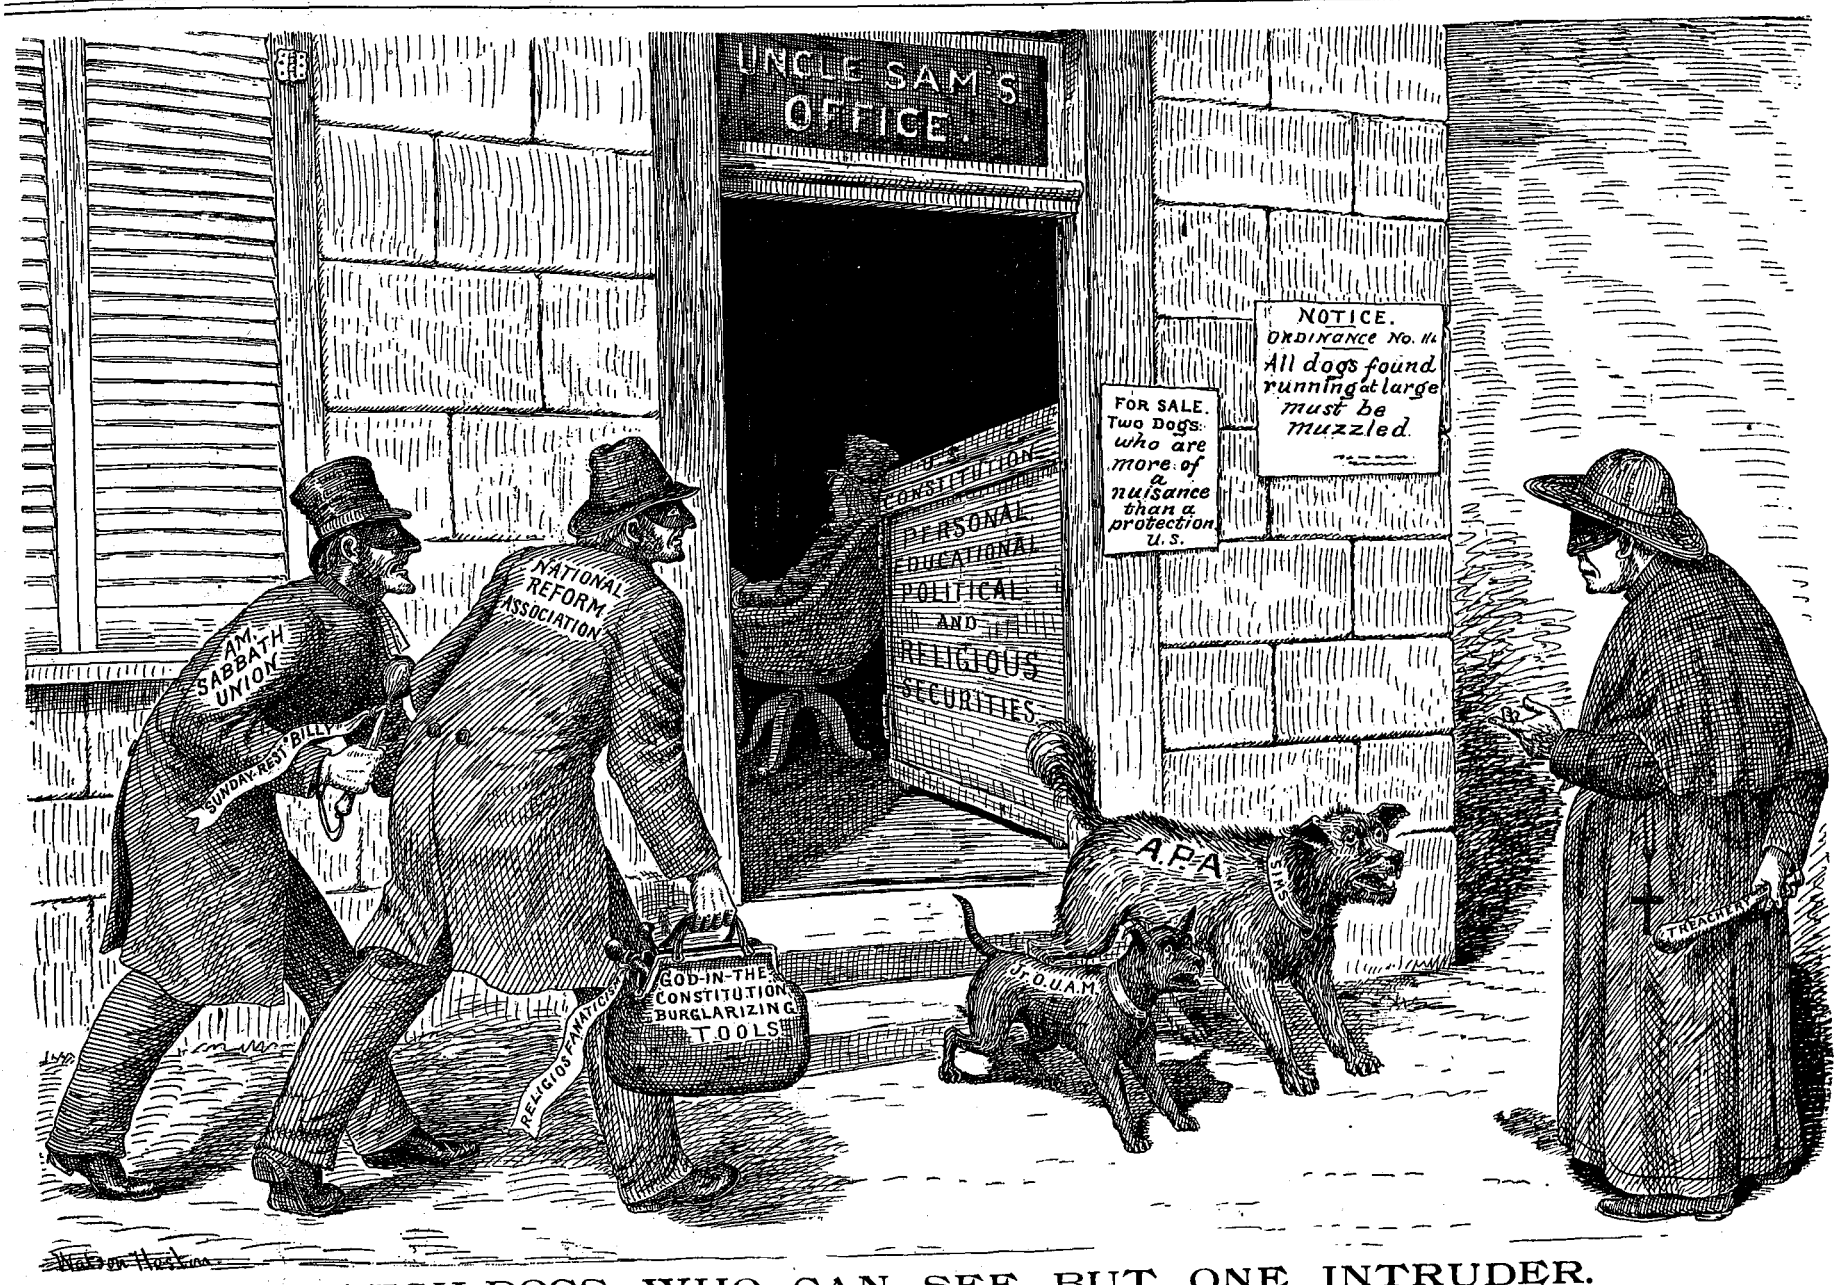
FEDERAL troops were ordered out in Oregon to protect property of the Great Northern from Coxeyites. A Union Pacific train was captured but recovered by federal cavalry.

ON April 24th Frank Hatton, of the Washington Post, was prostrated by a stroke of paralysis, and died April 30th. He was formerly editor of the once famous Burlington Hawkeye.

ANARCHIST EMILE HENRY, who caused the explosion in the Café Terminus and Rue des Bons Enfants, Paris, was found guilty on April 28, and sentenced to death. He was insolent and self-glorifying.

WILLIAM MCGARRAHAN, who for forty years has been trying to secure from Congress recognition of his claim to the lands Panoche Grande in California, is dead. He had undoubtedly been shamefully treated by those in authority.

SECRETARY MORTON, of the Agricultural department, says that the march of the "unemployed" upon Washington is the natural sequel to the crusades of the Protectionists. The demands of the former are the logical extension of those of the latter.



W. W. COLLINS, Freethought lecturer, has been elected to the New Zealand parliament. His grandfather, John Collins, Chartist leader, suffered imprisonment in Warwick jail in 1839. Ten preachers stood for parliament in New Zealand election. All defeated.

A DETACHMENT of the Coxey army stole a freight train of the Great Northern at Butte and started for the East. At Billings a conflict with federal marshals took place, and several persons were wounded. At Forsythe the Coxeyites were surrounded by United States troops from Fort Keogh, and surrendered.

CONWAY'S EDITION

OF

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

COLLECTED, EDITED, AND CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED

By MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY.

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," "Omitted Chapters of History Disclosed in the Life and Papers of Edmund Randolph," etc.

Four Volumes, Royal Octavo, Gilt Tops, Uniform with the Editor's "Life of Paine" Price per Volume, $2.50.

An edition of one hundred and fifty numbered copies bound in half leather, gilt tops, uniform with the limited editions of "The Writings of Washington," "The Writings of Jefferson," etc. Price, per volume, $4.

For the general reader the $3 edition of Paine's works is sufficient, as it contains all of his writings upon which his fame substantially rests. But for those who desire to go deeper into the subject of the man and polemic we can most unreservedly commend the "Life of Paine" by Mr Conway, and this edition of Paine's works edited by him It is the fullest that we are likely to have, and the student of history, and particularly the writer, should have it upon his shelves.

The work will consist of four volumes, and will be arranged chronologically. The cause of America, as Paine said, made him an author, and the first volume will cover the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1774. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay, and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvania Magazine; these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The second volume will consist mainly of the "Rights of Man," and pamphlets relating to English politics, but will also contain certain papers on French affairs.

The third and fourth volumes will consist mainly of Paine's religious writings, but will also contain some essays relating to American affairs, written in his last years. At the close will be given Paine's poems.

The first volume is now ready for delivery, and the others will follow soon. Orders for the whole set will be taken and filled as the volumes appear, or the volumes can be purchased separately. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits,

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

Archdeacon Farrar's Hits and Misses.

In McClure's Magazine for April, Dr. Frederic W. Farrar, Archdeacon of Westminster, has an article entitled, "Christianity—True and False." Its argument may be fairly summed up in this way: "All the bad deeds of those who profess to be Christians must be attributed to either their natural depravity or the demoralizing influence of the paganistic survivals in the religion of the Nazarene. All the good deeds of those who bear the Christian name or hav been subject to the influence of Christianity without identifying themselvs with any of its branches are to be attributed to the true and beneficent teachings of the carpenter." It is according to the old familiar rule, "Heads I win, tails you lose." This is one of the latest attempts to make it appear that religion, and particularly Christianity, is a moral cult. Theological dogmas are as coolly eliminated as though they were not, as they are in fact, the warp and woof of every religion, in so far as that religion is distinguished or distinguishable from all other religions and from systems of secular morality.

Dr. Farrar says in his opening paragraph that "many hav argued, and hav, unhappily, argued with serious and passionate conviction, 'that religion has been a curse to the human race;' 'that Christianity has inflicted upon mankind more harm than good.'" The next paragraph we giv entire, because it, in connection with the closing part of the article, embodies the fundamental misstatement that religion, and especially that peculiar form of it which goes under the name of Christianity, is only an ethical code. Says the Archdeacon:

"Now, to us who believe and know that religion is the one saving, ennobling, inspiring, uplifting element in life; that without religion mankind would not only be as the beasts which perish, but would be more guilty and more miserable than they; that it is religion alone which enables us bravely to face the duties of life, and cheerfully to bear its trials—does it not become transparently clear that no human being could maintain that 'religion has been a curse to the human race,' if he used the word religion in the same sense as ourselvs? And to us who know that Christianity has conferred upon mankind boons which utterly outweigh every other boon which man has received from his creator, is it not obvious that the thesis, 'Christianity has inflicted on mankind more harm than good' can only be redeemed from utter senselessness when we become aware that those who hav argued in its favor use the word 'Christianity' to mean something absolutely different from that which we mean by it."

Now let us turn over a few pages and we shall at once see why the Rationalist means by "religion" and "Christianity" "something absolutely different from that which we ["Christians" of Dr. Farrar's school] mean by it." "What is religion?" asks Mr. Farrar, and he answers that it is not church membership; that it is not "intellectual acceptance or profession of a set of dogmas;" that it is not outward observance, such as "rites, forms, ceremonies, feasts, fasts, new moons, sacraments, sacrifices, and so forth." He declares that the meek, the just, the pious, the devout, "are all children of heaven, and they shall meet and recognize each other when their various masks and liveries are taken off." The Archdeacon concludes:

"'Religion' means, as the great thinker, Benjamin Whichcot, said, 'a good mind and a good life.' This, in essence, is its true and only meaning. How, then, can it be, or ever hav been, otherwise than one infinit blessing to mankind? And 'Christianity' means that belief in Christ, and that following of the example of Christ, which renders a good mind and a good life possible to every child of man. It means that faith in Christ, and in the broad, simple teaching of Christ—unencumbered by the mountain-masses of falsification and corruption which were accumulated around it after the first century—which enables every child of man to obtain forgivness of past sins and strength for future service. The acceptance of the gospel has nothing necessarily to do with the shibboleths, the ceremonies, or the constitution of this or that church or sect; it means sincere love of God, and self-sacrificing service to man. Any amount of nominal religion which is not accompanied by love, meekness, truth, purity, contentment, is no better than sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. To belong to the strictest sect of the purest religion—to be as orthodox as Thomas Aquinas—to be as devoted to forms and ceremonies as Durandus—to macerate one's self, like St. Peter Damiani or Henry Suso—and yet not to be holy, humble, and loving, is as useless as to rely on the clacking of the Tartar's prayer-mill. 'The kingdom of heaven is within you.' To true religion, to genuin Christianity, no human being ever was, or ever can be, an enemy; for they only express the true relation of man to God, and the beauty of holiness, the godlike elevation of spirit, the pure consistency of character, the love and self-sacrifice which spring from that relation."

There is nothing left of supernaturalism for Dr. Farrar. All has been swept away by his own hand. Gone, the creation of all from nothing; gone, the fall; gone, the immaculate conception; gone, the miraculous conception of Jesus; gone, the resurrection; gone, the hell to be escaped and the heaven to be won by belief and baptism; gone, dogmas and creeds and "plans of salvation;" gone, marvel and miracle and the ceremonial essential to life eternal, and gone, belief in the foreordained murder of the innocent for the redemption of the guilty. Now, what is left? Human rights and human duties. And is the acknowledgment of these peculiar to the religious man, to the Christian? Most assuredly it is not. Nothing could be more baseless and misleading than such a claim.

It may be said that Dr. Farrar does not giv up all of supernaturalism, that he still insists that Christianity is "belief in Christ," that he calls for the "acceptance of the gospel," and talks of "sincere love of God," and of the "true relation of man to God." But all these expressions are qualified and explained by other statements of his, as, for instance, that wherein he says that, "in essence," the "true and only meaning" of religion is "a good mind and a good life," and, again, when he quotes approvingly the assertions of St. John that "he that doeth righteousness is righteous," and "he that doeth righteousness is born of God." In short, conduct is all, belief, in itself, nothing.

This is substantially the position that the Freethinker occupies. He avers that belief cannot in itself make a man a good neighbor or a good citizen. If his belief, when a good one, is not supplemented by a good life, it fails largely of its purpose. It may be objected that "good" is not the proper word with which to qualify belief, that no moral quality inheres in belief, it being a purely intellectual condition. To which we answer that by a 'good belief" we mean only a belief or accepted principle regarding the relations of the acceptor to his fellows, and we aver that, no matter how earnestly he may believe that he should respect the equal rights of all other people, if he does not do so his belief or logic of life is largely worthless. On the other hand, a bad belief is almost sure to lead to bad actions, for it has no restraining influence upon the holder, as has a belief which includes acceptance of the fundamental canons of social equity. We can not in reason expect men who believe in a partial and thieving and revengeful God to respect the rights of their fellow men. To the extent that they do so, they hold personal safety or secular order above creed and the supposed duty of being like the God they worship. If their God persecutes, they will persecute and generally in the direct ratio of the intensity of their belief.

Those who hav declared that "religion has been a curse to the human race," and that "Christianity has inflicted on mankind more harm than good," hav keenly realized that there was an intimate and logical connection between men's conception of the unknown and their treatment of those who did not agree with them in religious belief. Religion is not conduct, Christianity is not conduct. Both affect conduct, it is true, and the way they hav most potently affected it is by intensifying many of the worst tendencies and passions of man. Ambition, avarice, lust of power, envy, hatred, cruelty, fear hav all fed upon the basic dogmas of Christianity and waxed strong. Tell ignorant and believing men that an eternity of felicity is to be gained and an eternity of agony is to be escaped by the profession of certain beliefs and the performance of certain rites and ceremonies, and such a reign of religious terror as that of the Middle Ages is inevitable. The Bible declares that salvation is possible only through belief in Christ and the acceptance of baptism. Here you hav the doctrin of exclusiv salvation. It was a warrant in the hand of Bigotry for the extirpation of the unbelieving. We do not care what you may say about errors of translation and misconception of the meaning of certain texts. Enough that the Bible reads as it does read; that the Christian world accepted it as the infallible word of God; that it itself pronounced anathemas upon him who should add to or subtract from it, and that many of the people to whom it was brought believed in it and endeavored to force all others to believe in it, as the book itself and its interpreters commanded them to do. That which sets Christianity apart from other religions is its body of doctrin, just as the body of doctrin of each of the other world religions sets its apart from all the rest. Of course, there are some tenets in common, as the affirmation of the existence of a God.

It is a very modern idea that the Christian church is not chiefly the custodian of definit, connected, essential truths concerning the existence of certain supernatural beings and man's relations thereto. Historically this is what Christianity is. It is too late to attempt to prove, as Dr. Farrar does, that a few disconnected and contradictory moral aphorisms, said to hav been uttered by a young man who may hav lived about two thousand years ago, constitute the religion known as Christianity, the religion which has left an indelible impress upon the modern world. Christianity was and is essentially dogmatic, not ethical. Broadly yet truly speaking, it has never laid emphasis on the moral teachings associated with its theology. These teachings hav been subordinated to its creedal affirmations and necessities. For a few decades now a number, not easily ascertainable, of its teachers hav sincerely striven, and a much larger number hav pretended to strive to exalt the ethical above the religious. This would never hav happened had not the growing intelligence of the world lost faith in the legends, myths, and miracles which giv to Christianity all its really distinctiv attributes. At least one poison yet remains in the blood of the average religionist, and that is the virus of intolerance. The prototype of the modern Christian persecuted in the name of God and to save souls from hell in the hereafter; the present-day Christian, and some who scornfully disclaim the appellation, persecute in the name of morality, and to save bodies and minds from the hells of this world. In both cases the aim challenges our admiration, but the means employed were and are diabolical, and the results disastrous beyond measure.

The trade-mark, so to speak, of every great religion is its theology. One intolerant command from the lips of its legendary or real founder will outweigh a score of commonplace moralisms. "Thou shalt not kill"—"thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv"—which has the Christian world obeyed? Jesus enjoined his disciples to love their enemies, but he also incorporated this in a parable: "But those mine enemies that would not that I should reign over them bring hither and slay them before me." Does any intelligent student of history ask which has received the approval of Christians? Dr. Farrar quotes Paul's "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," etc. Over against that theological glittering generality we set this positiv injunction from the pen of the same apostle: "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye hav received, let him be accursed," and accursed and tortured he was through the long, terrible night of the Christian centuries, spite of the Paul-proclaimed "fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man." When Archdeacon Farrar tried to prove by St. John that Christianity is primarily the teacher and conservator of "righteousness," that is, right-doing, he forgot this injunction of the same penman: "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrin, receive him not into your house." The believing Christians of all nations hav interpreted this as a command to hustle the heretic off the earth in the shortest possible order. And how could they do otherwise when they had but to turn from the proscriptive utterances of Matthew and Mark and Paul and John to the Old Testament, quoted and indorsed by the New Testament writers and by Jesus, and read such God-given commands as this:

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers; namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him. But thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hand of all the people."

Yes, Dr. Farrar, we do mean by Christianity something "absolutely different" from that which you mean by it. We mean the Christianity of the Bible and of history. You mean by it a few texts, some of which embody the world's conception of human relations and are therefore common property, and the others of which voice the utterly impracticable dreams of a visionary.

Something Good for Everybody.

Our energetic friends of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association are arranging a fine program for the Paine Celebration at New Rochelle on Memorial Day, May 30th. Several of our best speakers will giv their tributes of eloquence to the memory of the Author-Hero, and everything possible will be done to make the occasion one of joy and inspiration. But only a few of our readers will be able personally to testify by their presence their appreciation of the services of the man who wrote "Common Sense," "The Crisis," "The Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason," and partake of the intellectual feast that will be spread at his graveside. So we hav determined to make amends, as fully as we can, to the distant comrades for their deprivation. The issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 26th will be an ILLUSTRATED PAINE MEMORIAL number—a souvenir issue. It will contain testimonials to Paine from his contemporaries and from men of later generations; short extracts from his chief works; a fine portrait of Paine and a picture of his monument at New Rochelle, etc. This devoted apostle of Liberty has too long been neglected and contemned; at last his name is coming out from under the clouds of priestly defamation which hav hidden it from the eyes of the American people, or made it appear as the cognomen of one vicious and criminal; at last justice may be done if we fearlessly bear our testimony to the noble character and priceless labors of Thomas Paine.

Let us know at once how many extra copies you will want of the PAINE MEMORIAL NUMBER, that we may know what orders to giv our printer. It will be an excellent number to hand to your inquiring and even to your orthodox friends, but if you do not order in advance you will be unable to get it.

About Present-Day Infamies.

Comstock morality has gone to seed down in Jacksonville, Florida, where they sentenced a merchant to the penitentiary for one year (but subsequently released him because of the opinion aroused in his favor,) for the awful crime of exhibiting in his shop window copies of Rubens's immortal paintings, "The Judgment of Paris" and "Pandora Before Prometheus and Epimetheus." The prosecuting attorney fiercely denounced the tradesman who had been so unlucky as to take up his residence in that province. Such verdicts will continue to be rendered until the patience of sensible and respectable people is strained to the breaking point. Some day we shall put a stop to the rule of the foul-minded meddlers who now dominate this country. These ignorant and vicious creatures are perpetually obtruding themselvs upon decent people. Only the other day here in the city of New York a petty official of the custom house branded as "obscene" Raphael's "Lucretia and Tarquin." The copy is an etching on parchment of the date of 1524, and is said to be very valuable. The little fellow in the custom house refused to admit the picture, but Collector Kilbreth remarked that "the original had been on view in Berlin for many years," and so he decided to admit the copy.

We execrate the religious bigotry which, in England, sent Richard Carlile and scores of other independent men to prison for selling the works of Thomas Paine, and we wonder how men could hav been found to execute the infamous statutes under which they were convicted. A century hence our grandchildren will execrate the moral bigotry which sent James Douglass to the penitentiary for exhibiting "The Judgment of Paris" and they will wonder how men could hav been found besotted and vindictiv enough to execute the law under which he was convicted. This might be a tolerably decent world in which to liv if only the people of each generation would visit their wrath upon the infamous laws of their own time instead of expending all their ethical strength in denouncing the bad government of their predecessors. It is so easy to be tolerant and kind and just five hundred years subsequently.

"There are now over 250,000 words in the English language acknowledged by the best authorities, or about 70,000 more than in the German, French, Spanish, and Italian languages combined."

But among all these words the theocrats can not find any in which to make their "explanation" of the difference between the union of church and state, which they condemn, and the union of religion and the state, which they favor, intelligible to plain, blunt men, of common sense and candor.

The Canada Revue has brought suit for damages against the Archbishop of Montreal. "His circular withholding the privileges of the church from those who should read, sell, or circulate it reduced the publication from a condition of prosperity to absolute ruin," says the New York Times. The archbishop relies upon his spiritual privileges as a defense. We should suppose that the paper could get no redress in the courts of a state whose people were foolish enough to boycott a publication at the command of a priest. People who are afraid of being sent to hell by a clergyman if they read what he forbids are not likely, through their tribunals, to reimburse the journal for the losses it has sustained because of their slavish ignorance.

Rev. Joel R. Hicks, of St. Louis, is called "the storm wizard." He is said to hav "predicted many of the most disastrous calamities that hav befallen this country in the last ten years." He also said, in 1874, in the Eden Chapel of the M. E. Church South, in St. Louis county, Missouri, that the soul of Abraham Lincoln "went howling from the theater down to hell." Was it his prophetical insight that gave him such extraordinary knowledge? It should be added, in the interest of historical accuracy, that Mr. Hicks made this remark, not because he disliked Lincoln, but because he had the clergyman's instinctiv and unreasoning hatred of the theater.

The brave refusal of the teachers of London to obey the instructions of the majority of the School Board is very encouraging. The reader will find in Mr. Watts's "Notes" this week an account of the struggle in the metropolis over the question of religious instruction in the public schools. Think of that meeting of one thousand teachers, gathered to protest against the prostitution of their high calling to the ignoble ends of the sectarists! Who can doubt that the love of fair play of our English friends is one of the best elements in their character? When the teachers of the United States become equally averse to giving sectarian instruction n the common schools the beginning of the end will be near. Such sensitivness will evince the possession of a sense of justice which will lift the consideration of grave issues out of the mire and filth of partisan and theological politics.

"Any association that comes to be a rival of the church, that occupies a higher place in one's affections than the church occupies, and that demands and receives the time, energy, and money that should be given to the church, is an institution of wrong and should be abandoned by all friends of Christ."—Christian Reformer.

This was written in the course of an argument against secret societies, and by the editor of a rabidly Protestant paper. Wherein does it differ from similar declarations of Catholics against secret bodies? More than this: Why condemn the Catholics and organize against them because they are supposed to hold allegiance to their church above allegiance to the government? Does not the Reformer demand that Protestants do likewise? And is not the family included in the condemnation which the Covenanter editor visits upon those organizations which occupy "a higher place in one's affections than the church occupies"? And is Dr. McAllister an inconsistent Christian because he takes this position? No; does not Jesus say: "If any man come to me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple"?

Contributions are coming in for the work before the Convention and Congress. We hope that many others will realize the importance of this matter and that now is the time to do something. We cannot work without funds. We cannot print and circulate pamphlets without money, and that is one of the greatest means of advancing Freethought. No doubt the Sabbatarians will vigorously push their Sunday bill in Congress, and use the same means as before. So far as we hav been able to find out, the opinion is prevalent among the delegates to the Constitutional Convention in favor of impartial taxation. There is quite a sprinkling of Liberals if they will only hav the courage of their convictions. A perusal of the TRUTH SEEKER pamphlet on "Church Taxation" would no doubt strengthen their backbone. We must bring into play every influence possible, and not relax our efforts. The following, in addition to those already reported, hav sent in their contributions. It is hoped that every Liberal will make an extra effort at this time.

Henry M. Taber	$5 00
John L. Way	2 00
J. A. Smith	1 00
Miss Lilla Turney	3 50
M. H. Goldowsky	50
John Dean	1 00
Paul Fisher	1 00
M. F. Balee	2 00

The Christian Reformer is apprehensiv that the Kyle Sunday bill will share the fate of the Christian amendment, and it proceeds to utter dire threats, presumably by direct inspiration from on high. It says:

"Without doubt this nation is in the midst of a most important crisis. The gospel of the kingdom has been, for months past, preached to it as never before. The claims of Christ and his word hav been pressed upon the lawmakers at Washington. We anxiously await the result. There will either be some evidence of national repentance and reformation, or there will be a hardening of heart. There will be either national reformation, or divine judgments and national ruin."

What a pity that the representativs of sixty-five millions of people of diverse opinions did not instantly capitulate to a little knot of Covenanter clergymen and incorporate their theological notions in the Constitution! It is little less than scandalous that the sophisms of the good theocrats did not as quickly convert all our lawmakers as that famous "light" did Saul of Tarsus. Because they cannot make their contemptibly narrow and cruel creed into a legal scourge for the laceration of the backs of Freethinkers and Jews these modern elect of God are sure that the jealous and remorseless king whom they worship in fear and trembling will avenge in a whirlwind of wrath the slight put upon his henchmen by the politicians. No other form of "national ruin" could equal in horror and destructivness the accession to complete power of the National Reform party.

Quite a number of years ago, Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D., was disciplined by his church for permitting a woman to speak in his pulpit. The castigation appears to hav been taken to heart, and he evidently resolved to never again be caught advocating larger privileges for that sex. At all events, he is now making speeches for the women who do not want the word "male" stricken out of the Constitution of the State of New York. In the course of his remarks at a recent meeting of prominent "society" women in Brooklyn he said:

"There is one argument against imposing the burden of civil duties on women that delicacy allows us only to hint at. It is that the creator has put an interdict on the participation of a large number of our sister sex in public affairs through certain physical disabilities which belong to wifehood and maternity."

When a man feels that "delicacy" demands that he shall only "hint at" the natural, unavoidable, and indisputable fact that all of the genus homo who liv on this earth were "born of woman," we can only conclude that his mind needs a thorough washing and disinfecting. The reverend gentleman had a father and a mother, as we all had, or hav, and we deliberately affirm that the man who says that this fact is of such an immodest or indecent nature that it is indelicate to more than "hint at" it is a man either too ignorant to vote or too depraved to mingle with clean-minded men and women.

The American Sentinel, quoting and indorsing an article of ours in exposure and condemnation of the intrigues of the theocrats, asks this question:

"Why should not one who sees unrighteousness so clearly be able eventually to fathom the mystery of righteousness?"

Why should there be any mystery about righteousness? Ignorance there is, to be sure, concerning social relations, but this ignorance distinguishes no less those who hav had the benefits of a revelation than those who hav been left in "natural darkness." Men loved justice and were kind long before the Syrian scriptures were written and before Jesus and Paul and James spoke in the East. Mr. C. P. Bollman of the American Sentinel and Dr. D. McAllister of the Christian Reformer read the same Bible, accept the same Christ and worship the same God, and yet manward they are greatly different. Mr. Bollman stands for religious liberty and civil justice, while Dr. McAllister would strangle religious freedom and deny civil justice to non-conformists. Why the difference? Is it not to be found in the fact that they are organized differently and hav been educated in opposing principles? For all practical purposes, so far as human rights and duties are concerned, Mr. Bollman is nearer us than he is to his Christian brother McAllister. But they both profess to hav fathomed "the [divine] mystery of righteousness," while we are in total ignorance thereof. What is the use of a revelation from God if its interpretation and application depend wholly on the character and mental bias of him who receives it? What does it reveal?

A Pittsburg paper published in the interests of the Covenanters, or God-in-the-Constitution party, recently discussed the Inquisition, and maintained that the Romanists are still desirous of using it. This we do not doubt for a moment, nor do we any more doubt that the Protestants of the Covenanter party would resort to it as willingly. The paper in question leans this way strongly itself, for it says:

"Beyond question the danger among Protestants today is this extreme of license of speech and the press and conduct generally. A sheet is issued weekly in New York city which is full of vilest blasphemy. A recent number of it contains a cartoon of such outrageously blasphemous character, as to make its circulation a crime against the order of society."

This refers to our recent cartoon, "Jesus Paid It All." Naturally the Christians are angry at having the absurdity of the doctrin so plainly pictured, but they should recollect that the fault is in the doctrin, not in the exposition of it. The offense is in themselvs, not in the pictures. Other people regard the cartoons with great favor, the "general public" as well as Freethinkers. In front of THE TRUTH SEEKER office there are two bulletin boards covered with Heston's artistic work. They are always surrounded by crowds, some of the limber ones getting down on their knees to see the bottom pictures. Some of these people do not like the cartoons, but they never howl for the Inquisition, because they are not sufficiently Christianized. They are just plain folks from whom early religion is wearing away. If they were real simon-pure, God-in-the-Constitution, Covenanter Christians they would probably throw stones through the window at the Editor. Being men of common sense they enjoy the pictures, come in and buy a paper and get a catalog, and afterward come back and purchase the "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated" or the "Pictorial Text-Book," and subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

If the Covenanter crowd think they can suppress THE TRUTH SEEKER we cheerfully invite them to make the attempt.

About Our Books.

We hav just printed new editions of the following works:

"Martyrdom of Man," by Winwood Reade. This is the ninth edition of this splendid work, and since we hav reduced the price (to $1), to meet the times, we hav sold them faster than ever before.

"Lay Sermons," by Col. Ingersoll. This little tract is a sort of exposition of Mr. Ingersoll's opinion on social matters. Price 5 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible," by William Henry Burr. This edition is we-don't-know-how-many thousandth. The Boston Christian crank, Hastings, has got out a "reply" to it, but it's like "Lambert's Notes on Ingersoll"—no reply at all. There can't be any reply. Two and two can never to be made to count five, no matter what the pious necessities of the case. Price of "Self-Contradictions," 15 cents.

"Crimes of Preachers." A list of the clerics who hav been caught, so far as we could discover from a necessarily limited reading of newspapers. And we are still catching them. Most of them are guilty of ministerial conduct with the sisters, and it makes queer reading, considering what they pretend to be. Like Breckinridge, of pious fame, the ministers are great boys with the girls, and several thousands of them deserve an overcoat of exceptional adhesivness and fluffiness.

Remsburg's five little five-cent tracts are good missionary documents, and the people use them freely. "Decline of Faith," "Protestant Intolerance," "Washington an Unbeliever," "Jefferson and Franklin" ditto, hav each sold into the thousands, as well as "Sabbath Breaking."

"Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated" still goes and is still agoing fast. The edition just printed was two thousand, and we shall hav to print another in a week or two. Agents are doing exceptionally well with this book. It sells to almost everybody who sees it. One man sold thirty-six copies in six hours—an average of one each ten minutes. Another sold eleven in two hours, and another a dozen in half a day. It's a great book for fun as well as for solid argument, sound sense, and historical research into Old Testament history. The price is still $1 because we can't make it cheaper.

Paine's "Age of Reason" is a book that sells more and more as the years roll by. New editions of it are so frequent that we forget to mention them. It has probably made more Infidels than any other one book. Price 25 cents, and if anyone wants to distribute a hundred around the neighborhood to make more Infidels we will let them go at a loss. It will come back to us in good works.

"Thumbscrew and Rack," by George Macdonald is in the second edition and on the third thousand already. It's a great eye-opener and every Freethinker who wants to help along should buy a dollar's worth and giv them away.

"The Bible Inquirer," by Andrew Jacobson, had long been out of print till we purchased plates and copyright from the author, but judging from the way they are selling it was a great mistake to allow it to lie idle. It has done good and will do more in our hands, for we intend to circulate it extensivly. Price 25 cents.

"Sister Lucy," a revelation of the way things are done in convents, is in its tenth or twelfth thousand. It hits particularly at the Roman Catholic church, and hits hard. Price 10 cents.

Last, but not least, our new Catalog. The descriptions of the books in it are as good as some more pretentious missionary leaflets. and it has the merit of being the cheapest of all. We hav given away several thousands and are willing and anxious to giv away more. Send for it, read it, and you are bound to buy some books, which helps us along wonderfully. The Catalog is free, and the books it advertises are all good and cheap.

A queer little book that we hav published for the author, Baron Harden Hickey, is "Euthanasia; or, the Ethics of Suicide." We don't recommend its doctrin, but it is a little startling to find that a great many philosophers hav looked upon suicide as a legitimate method of avoiding trouble. They ought to hav known better. Price 50 cents.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton says that the cause of woman suffrage is making great progress in New York state. That is good, but if she wants to know what progress woman herself has made in the last four centuries she should read Miss Wixon's latest pamphlet on the subject, being her speech at the International Congress of Freethinkers held at Chicago last October. Price 10 cents.

Freethought and Secular Notes from England.

THE DAWN OF SPRING.

If we in England do not progress as rapidly as many of us desire in social and theological matters, there is no denying that a marked improvement is taking place in our climate. Never within my recollection has spring dawned upon us more brilliantly robed than it has in 1894. For some time snowdrops hav met our eyes on every side, and "wee crimson-tipped flowers" hav been seen among the springing grass of the meadows. And now the windflower puts long streaks of quivering silver by hedgerow and wood and the blackthorn is loaded with its snowy bloom. For many weeks the cuckoo has been heard in different parts of the country, the swallows hav encircled the old homesteads, martins hav twittered softly beneath the eaves, the nightingale has sent forth her welcome melody, and the slanting showers hav let fall on the eager flowers beneath a rain of pearls which the rosy sunbeams greet as they glint thereon, scattering the perfume of primrose and hyacinth, and waking the birds to song. In our gardens and orchards we behold with delight clouds of snowy plum and pear blossom peeping over wall and hoarding, as if to giv promis to the wayfarer of a bountiful crop. Not only pears and plums show abundant bloom, but apricots, peaches, and cherries giv promis of healthy abundance. As nature now appears around me, so exquisit in her budding beauty, I am forcibly reminded of the sweetness, the variegated foliage, and the powerful fragrance with which I hav been so often charmed on the American continent. Let us hope that the grandeur which now adorns the English climate will not be merely temporary. Still nature is very fickle upon this "little island," and King Frost may yet cast a withering blight upon the existing beauty. As Shakespere says:

> This is the state of man: To-day he puts forth
> The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
> And bears his blushing honors thick upon him.
> The third day comes a frost, a killing frost.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

The rescue of the education of the young from the control of the orthodox party is now the task that is engaging the most earnest attention of the Secularists and the liberal-minded men and women of all sects and classes in London. The battle is a desperate one, for, in spite of determined protestation, the clerical party on the London School Board persist in their efforts to enforce the teaching of orthodox doctrins to the children. In my former "Notes" I hav explained the circular which has been sent out to the teachers, authorizing them to include religious instruction in their daily tuition. To this be it said to their honor the teachers decidedly object, and they point-blank refuse to obey the orthodox mandate. At a recent indignation meeting, over a thousand strong—the most largely attended, most enthusiastic, and most determined ever known in the annals of Unionism among teachers—a resolution was carried which is a crushing reply to the clerical party in the board. It plainly stated that the teachers regarded the issue of the circular as entirely uncalled for, and the statements it contained a serious reflection upon the performance of this most important duty by the teachers. Coming to the contents of the circular, they very properly expressed the fear that "it will create disabilities, and be made the means of persecuting some of the most conscientious among us." Closing their dignified and unanswerable statement the teachers asked that the circular might be withdrawn. Finding that the small majority upon the London School Board refused to listen to their reasonable request, the teachers held a second meeting, at which they decided to issue a manifesto that concludes thus:

> Our strongest objection to the circular rests in the fear that it will create disabilities and be made the means of persecuting some of the most conscientious among us. We greatly fear that it will operate as a religious test, and that individual teachers who may ask to be relieved from the duty of giving Bible instruction will thereby debar themselvs from promotion and make themselvs obnoxious to some managers and members of the board. Under these circumstances we most respectfully and earnestly appeal that the circular may be withdrawn, and until such withdrawal is carried out we feel that we cannot conscientiously continue the instruction, and we therefore respectfully ask to be relieved of the duty.

OTHER PROTESTS.

It is encouraging to friends of Secular education to find that orthodox bigotry in this matter is meeting with unmistakable condemnation from all parts of the country and even from some prominent churchmen. At the sitting of the National Conference of the Unitarian and Free churches at Manchester last week the policy of the London School board was very adversely criticised. A resolution was adopted, expressing the indignation of the conference and adding:

> We protest against any such instruction as an outrage upon the minds of children, as involving a religious test which no school board has any right to impose upon its teachers, and as introducing a teaching of sectarian dogmas at the public expense. We thank the minority of the board for the resolute way in which they hav opposed this measure, and hereby call upon all friends of liberty to unite in condemning a policy which if finally carried out in London must inevitably lead to dissension throughout the country, and arrest the cause of national education.

The bishops of London and of Rochester hav both publicly condemned the action of the school board bigots. The latter bishop has published a long letter, in which he expresses the hope that the next school board election will not turn upon the religious questions which were raised in the recent controversy within the board. The bishop may continue to hope, but in vain. It is now too late and the orthodox party will hav to suffer the consequences of their foolhardy actions. It is curious to note that at the same time there comes from Dean Gregory of St. Paul's a wail on behalf of the poor voluntary schools, badly equipped and badly supported. And it is for these weaklings that the board schools are being neglected.

THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

The question whether or not the education of our board schools is to be corrupted by being burdened with theological nonsense must be decided at the school board election which will take place in November next. In the meantime the National Secular Society is not idle. Before these "Notes" are read in the United States and Canada a pamphlet written under the auspices of the executiv will be circulated throughout London by thousands. It will contain a full statement of the position taken in the struggle by the Secular party. Moreover, it is intended to run Secular candidates at the coming elections in London and in the provinces. It is my intention, at the request of the executiv of the National Secular Society, to stand for a London constituency, and my program will be thoroughly Secular. I shall hav nothing whatever to do with any compromise. Believing that education given in public schools should be free from all religion, I shall fight unreservedly on that ticket alone. But more upon this point in my next "Notes."

OTHER VALUABLE AID.

The Rationalist Press Committee has published a valuable supplement to "Watts's Literary Guide" for April, under the heading of "Religion in Board Schools." It is an excellent and timely manifesto showing the folly of the religious instruction given in the public schools and the injurious effect it has upon the youthful mind. Among other useful information it demonstrates that Christian teaching is a mistake and unsuited to children's capacities:

> This is affirmed on three grounds: (1) Christianity rests on doctrins of supernatural beings—God, angels, devils. None of these are capable of reduction to clear ideas. What is God? Can man by searching find out God? Can a child's tiny lantern discover the secret? Why not wait till the Jew, the Christian, the Moslem, the Hindoo, and the Buddhist can agree as to what are God's attributes, and then go and tell the urchins of London? God is our father, says Christianity. Board-school children repeat a prayer daily to "Our Father who art in heaven." It is, however, well for the majority of London boys and girls that they hav an additional father in the flesh-and-blood parent who feeds and clothes them. Some children hav only a heavenly father, and they drift into the workhouse, the reformatory, or Dr. Barnardo's homes! There is an excellent organization called the London Schools Dinner Fund, which provides meals for the little ones who are neglected by both the earthly and the celestial father. Even then all the starving children are not fed. Hungry lads and lasses, as the clock strikes twelve, are made to assume a devout posture, and sing:
> "Be present at our table, Lord;
> Be here and everywhere adored;
> These creatures bless, and grant that we > May feast in paradise with thee."
> They are dismissed, and go home to gaze at empty plates and meditate on the teacher's glowing description of God's paternal love. These things are so eminently suited to the capacities of the children! How easy of comprehension is the proposition that the absolute and infinit, in whom we liv and move and hav our being, took the solid form of a Jewish carpenter. He planed wood at so much per foot, and we are "bound to trust and serve him as our God." The carpenter died, and the board-school children sing the reason:
> "He died that we might be forgiven,
> He died to make us good;
> That we might go at last to heaven,
> Saved by his precious blood."
> In other words, a London boy's rudeness, untruthfulness, cruelty, or dishonesty will be forgiven him through the blood of a Jewish person long since deceased, yet stated to be still living—this person being a man whom the young Londoner has never seen, never shaken hands with, never received a letter from, nor hav any of the young Londoner's friends. The members of the school board are educational experts, and, by the application of scientific principles, they hav been led to the conclusion that such doctrin is suited to the capacities of the children. Or take the subject of "God the Holy Ghost as our sanctifier." The teacher must not point out that the natural basis of holiness—i. e., wholesomeness of thought and life—lies in cleanliness of body and habit, in converse with good people and good books, in good employments, in self-respect. No, but he will tell how an invisible, intangible, imponderable person, having neither body, parts, nor passions, is the agent of purity. However filthy the child's skin or clothes, however grimy the slum he resides in, however overcrowded the attic he sleeps in, still God the Holy Ghost is his sanctifier. Meanwhile, as the lesson proceeds, the clock hand creeps toward the hour of ten. Ten o'clock strikes, and the secular time-table begins its official course. The teacher then resumes the language of common sense, and, if perchance the topic of bogies crops up, wisely warns his pupils not to believe in ghosts. Next morning he may find it needful to withdraw the advice, for it may fall to his lot to discourse on ghostly angels and devils. How many sane people honestly believe in the existence of a devil, or suppose that angels haunt the streets of London? Yet these theological fictions are considered fit material for juvenil study. (2) Christianity rests its doctrins on supernatural events. The world is now learning to carry on its work without any expectation of miracles. Science and industry, political and social movements are promoted on purely secular lines. No man looks for God's interference in a scientific experiment, in the prosecution of trade, in political agitation, or in social reform. All has to depend on human energy and human control over natural forces. Why, then, do we thrust upon the undeveloped intellects of children false statements about the flood, the division of the Red sea, the resurrection from the dead, or an ascension to heaven? The child-mind needs right, clearness, simplicity, reality. The school board supplies it with false history, perplexing theology, and barbarous conceptions of the order of the world.

NEW EDUCATIONAL CODE.

No doubt it will be of some interest to the numerous readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER in the United States and Canada to learn from the official "Educational Code" just published that there are nearly 2,500 school boards in England and Wales, with 4,869 schools under their management, and there are nearly 15,000 schools under voluntary managers, of which 12,000 are in connection with the Church of England, 530 are Wesleyan schools, 1,000 are Roman Catholic, and nearly 1,400 belong to the British and other undenominational managers. The number of departments under separate head teachers is all but 30,000, and 4,000,000 pupils are in average daily attendance, while the sum distributed by the Education Department for the purposes of elementary education now exceeds £6,000,000 sterling. These figures are enough to show what an immense body of persons now exist whose duty it is to make themselvs acquainted with the Code of Regulations of the Education Department, by which the parliamentary grant is administered. Of teachers alone, whose daily work in the schools is mainly governed by the departmental regulations, there are more than 100,000, one-half of whom possess certificates of merit, obtained after a searching professional examination. The annual appearance of the Code and of the instructions to the inspectors, therefore, is a matter of great interest to a vast body of persons, and parents themselvs are now showing an intelligent and anxious interest in the conduct of the elementary schools in which their children are to receive the instruction which is to fit them for the battle of life. Female Suffrage.

The policy of woman suffrage is being more and more widely discussed, petitions advocating the measure are in circulation for signatures, and in some places it has to some extent already been adopted. It may be both interesting and useful to inquire what are the reasons and objects that now inspire so many of the fair sex in an effort to grasp and wield the handle of state.

Do these women imagin that the male suffragists, in exercising the solemn duty and the intoxicating privilege of casting a ballot for a cut-and-dried candidate, really improve the world, and that they desire only to share in the blessed work? Or do they think that he, ignorantly or viciously, oftener than otherwise, votes for the worst candidates and worst measures, and that, unless they can counteract him at the polls, the country will soon go the way of old Babylon? Or do they hope to get control of the scales of justice, and retaliate on man for so long playing the part of lord and master over women and cattle?

If the last hypothesis be the true one, then woman has a strong case. According to orthodox authority, the first man that the potter, God, moulded of dirt, treated his wife meanly—turned state's evidence, which brought upon her double punishment. Although all creation is carried down in the fall, Adam manages to get on top, becomes the head of the race, and a record of the male branches only is kept. The murders and thievings committed by them are piously recorded, while woman is seldom noticed, except as when giving birth to some scalawag, or as, in lump form, serving the man with God's heart and his wise son. All the way down through the Bible centuries woman has been subject to man's whims, caresses, and brutalities, and it is still difficult for him to understand why everything that pleases him should not please her.

Now, it will be generally allowed that man possesses not only greater physical power, but more will power, along with his superior stubbornness and ugliness, and that woman is more sympathetic, confiding, and impressible. It is now well proven that there is such a thing as hypnotism, and that man, more than woman, can subject a susceptible person to its influence. When, in the times of magic, miracle, and mysticism, a priest or other deceiver hypnotized a fair, confiding damsel, the issue was supposed to be a god, or at least a demigod, and sometimes the mother was specially honored. But it is vastly different nowadays, when a like transaction occurs in a Christian community. The offspring, instead of being worshiped, is insulted, and the mother, instead of being called "blessed," has the scornful finger of piety pointed at her.

The status of woman was low enough previous to the apostolic epoch. Then she was crushed. The sainted Paul, who was the real founder of the Christian hierarchy, declares his God to be the head of the man, and man to be the head of woman—a big difference; and, no matter how mean and ignorant the man may be, the wife is ordered to stay at home and submit to his will and instruction. That Christian women should most admire the apostle who most degrades them is a marvel to one who thinks. The only Christian privilege allowed young women in early times was to become nuns—to gather in convents and do the begging. At times one of them would be sainted—a bait for recruits.

The greatest wrong perhaps ever done to woman by man was his making her the principal subject of witchcraft. Most of the accusers, and all the judges, during that cruel period, were men; and of the estimated nine millions of victims slaughtered on that charge under Bible authority at least nine-tenths were females. Paul hated women. In revenge he peoples the air with spirits—mostly bad ones; and some of his successors hav been mean enough to think that Paul's bad spirits could and did hypnotize women. Hence one of the cruelest periods of human history.

Now, can a woman who belongs to a church that eulogizes the saint who has so degraded her be trusted with the ballot?

At no time has Christianity treated woman as man's equal She has gained in that direction just in proportion to the increased influence of Freethought. In most Christian countries the wife is yet almost a nonentity in the eye of the law; and in England, not many years ago, a man could flog his wife with impunity, seize and dispose of her property and earnings at will, and forbid her to see her own children. And some of that brutal Christian common law is in force in this land to-day, and should be abolished. But the church is in the way. A few years ago Dr. Cuyler, a Presbyterian minister in Brooklyn, who had disobeyed Paul, was tried by the church court for allowing a woman to speak from his pulpit. He promised to do so no more.

Now, with the above facts in remembrance, surely woman cannot be blamed for wishing to get hold of the lash of the law and make man howl for a time.

If the first cause suggested—that the world is being renovated in proportion to the number of voters—indicates the reason why these women desire the right of suffrage, they should consider the natural results. Should the wives of all Republicans, and all Democrats agree and vote with their husbands the relativ strength of parties would remain the same, nothing gained; but should a wife vote in opposition, the husband would be mad, his vote would be wasted, incompatibility of temper would be more frequently alleged, family discord increase, and the hypnotic influence fall to zero. This view of the subject is not encouraging.

But the second hypothesis is more likely the true one. The charge that many voters are bought or blindly led by partisan leaders, to obtain the spoils of office, we will let alone, for one might hunt all day in vain for a single fact to disprove it. But would women voters be proof against just such influences? They, more than men, are now led by the priest. They fill the churches three to one. And when a woman addresses her pastor as "dear," and speaks of him as being "so lovely," we know that she is in a slippery state of hypnotic susceptibility. Better throw off the priest before taking on the politician.

Now, the reader who has bet that this writer is unconditionally opposed to female suffrage, loses. But think for a minute. Has universal male suffrage proved a blessing? At the end of a century does economy in government and fraternity among the people prevail? Or is not extravagance and discord the rule? Did nation ever before grow and ripen so fast and show signs of rot so soon? We hav now in this country about twelve thousand legislators annually engaged, for the most part in plundering the states and nation through schemes for private gains. There seems to be a corresponding relation between the number of voters and the number of officials; and the salaries of the latter are often increased at the expense of the former while promising them higher wages. To be candid, is not the man who has no property the most likely to vote for extravagance? He thinks he has nothing to lose and hopes to gain something. Good government, not personal advantage, should be the object of the voter.

Stop another minute and think. When a farmer hires a landless man to help him he does not giv the man equal control in running the farm. And why should such man possess the right in town-meeting to vote to tax his employer for means to enlarge and beautify the poorhouse? Without such a right is he likely to suffer in any way? If the nativ-born young man can safely liv in the land without the right to vote till he is twenty-one years old, would any danger likely befall him if he should liv a while longer without the right? And if the immigrant can safely exist here for five years without exercising the inestimable privilege of voting away his liberty, why could he not safely continue that kind of existence indefinitly?

For the good of the nation and fairness to women, the right of suffrage should be limited to those of American birth who hav reached the age of thirty years, who own real estate to the value of at least $300, and who hav paid at least one annual tax on the same; and all females who possess these requirements to hav the right of suffrage equally with males.

Oligarchy? Oh, no! The number of voters would still be large enough to prevent danger in that direction. Of course some folks will bristle up with the claptrap claim of manhood sovereignty vs. jackass-property qualification. But, having seen a trio of manhood paupers slily carted from poorhouse to town hall and there hold a balance of power at the ballot-box, I entertain a due respect for the jackass.

Melancholy Man.

When Nature draws her mantle o'er the earth
And floods it with a darkness, dreary-cold,
When all seems dead and silent as the tomb,
I then my melancholy thoughts unfold.
A most secluded, noiseless spot I seek,
Where night has cast her shadows all forlorn,
And pacing to and fro, with heavy heart,
I sadly think the man was made to mourn.

My fevered brain prevents the boon of sleep,
My heart is beating loud with nameless fear;
I fairly curse the hour I first saw light
Of day upon this miserable sphere.
"Is there a God?" I shriek, in blind despair,
My conscience smites—"Agnostic thoughts, away;
I fear your subtle voice, your deadly touch.
Rule others, if you will, with silent sway."

Why rasp the soul, and torture it with fears
Of punishment eternal, slow, but dire?
If God be just, would he confuse his work,
And then consign it to hell's burning fire?
While thus I ponder o'er this time-worn theme,
Which slowly seems to eat my brain away,
A thousand fears and fancies fill my heart,
And torture me until the dawn of day.

I see my youth and manhood slowly pass;
A loving, cheerful mother, long since dead,
Forgotten friends and foes, too, join the march,
Which fills my soul with fears and nameless dread.
My mind is slowly bending 'neath the strain.
On earth I hav no longings now to dwell;
No more I'll linger in this vale of tears,
But find a home in heaven or in hell.

Churchly Purpose and Performance

The treasurer of the National Reform Association reports its financial condition better than for several years past. ∴ The Sundayites sometime since held a mass-meeting in Washington in behalf of the Blair-Gallinger District of Columbia Sunday bill. Members of the House, Senators, and ministers of the city delivered addresses. ∴ At the College Springs, Iowa, convention of the National Reformers, Mrs. Woodbridge, a national officer of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, was one of the principal speakers. ∴ Copies of Dr. McAllister's "Christian Civil Government" were presented to the libraries of Tarkio (Missouri) and Amity (College Springs, Iowa) colleges to train "those young, eager brains in the ways of Bible government for America."

Don't quote poetry in Vienna. A young woman has been sentenced to eight days' severe confinement in jail because she quoted at a public gathering of women Heinrich Heine's "Heaven we surrender to angels and fools." ∴ The provincial synod of Brandenburg, Prussia, has issued a bull which deprives every Christian that marries a Jew or Jewess of the benefits of the church and denial of "Christian burial." This in the year of our Lord, the Jew Jesus, 1894. ∴ The provincial synod of Saxony, Germany, clamors for the establishment of a Protestant inquisition to prosecute the writers and publishers of books which "blaspheme" the holy queer. ∴ Bishop Goux, of Versailles, France, has written a book in which he proves by chemistry, to his own satisfaction, that the only genuin "holy coat" is to be found at Argenteuil. ∴ Wilhelm Harnish, editor Lichtsrahlen, Berlin, has been sentenced to one month's imprisonment for poking fun at a Catholic church invention. He had written a rather pointed article about the only genuin holy coat of Jesus, which is found at Trier, Moscow, St. Petersburg, and various other places. ∴ The Pope forbade cremation of Catholics some years ago. An Austrian, Count Tarouca, died and willed one hundred thousand gulden to a Vienna cloister upon the condition that one of the monks should accompany his remains to Gotha crematory, and that his ashes should be deposited in the cloister church. The one hundred thousand gulden made his "Infallibility" the Pope become fallible. ∴ Santiago Salvador, the convicted and confessed Anarchist, who caused the catastrophe in the Barcelona theater, is a very pious and orthodox Catholic, who never forgets his "crosses" or prayers, and who attended mass regularly. The church papers all the world over which stated that he was an Atheist must feel sore now, yet it is not to be expected that they will retract a word of their former statement. ∴ Mrs. Williams, wife of an ex-attorney-general of the United States, is the head of a new sect in Oregon. She says that she is the greatest woman in Portland, because God speaks through her. Microbes, she declares, "were placed in the blood as a penalty for the sin of Adam, and it is only when the blood is purged of them that the body can acquire the condition of Adam before he had sinned. This minute life cannot subsist on the food partaken of by myself and my people during our periods of fasting, and the blood polluted by the microbes is supplanted by the blood of God. It is only at God's command that we undertake a fast, and we cannot die if we obey him, for he sustains us. After a fast all passion is dead. There is no desire to sin. Married people liv apart and young people hav no wish to marry. Will not this depopulate the world with one generation? Yes; but do you not know that the millennium is at hand? Why should more children be born to share the fate of mankind? I am teaching my people to prepare for it." Alas! the poor, weak brains that come to grief in their encounters with the old wives' fables of the Bible! ∴ The species of religion known as male Christianity has struck in deeply in the South. Here is one of the many symptoms of the disease. "The pastors of Savannah, Ga., hav recently expressed themselvs nearly unanimously as adverse to the practice of women preaching or exhorting. Commenting upon this the Savannah Press says: 'Some women are persuasiv speakers, and no objection can be urged to their leading their own class meetings or conducting Bible lessons at their Sunday-school or prayer rooms. But the practice of encouraging women evangelists and women preachers, or women stump speakers will not prevail down here.'"

Frank Steiner is a young nativ of Des Moines now abroad making a name for himself. He will be remembered by a number of attendants at the West Des Moines high school as a remarkable student of history. It used to be said that when Frank's turn came to recite in this particular branch of study. Professor Call always had to knock in his knees to get him to sit down, and to muzzle him to get him to shut up. The professor himself, even, went so far as to admit that Frank could possibly giv him a pointer or two in history, from the theoretical monkey period all the way up to date. For reasons best known to Frank, he left school a year or so before his graduating term began, privately, however, continuing his studies diligently. He left history temporarily and turned his attention to theology and philosophy, and came out of his researches into the wisdom of the world an Ingersollian disciple. When B. Fay Mills was here a year ago last winter, Frank took occasion to correct a number of the gentleman's misapprehensions concerning the character and works of one of Frank's idols, Thomas Paine, in a two-column letter to the Register, which, for reasons sufficient and satisfactory to Mr. Mills, and quite apparent to the casual inquirer, was not honored with a reply. Frank also, some time since, took the liberty to except in the matter of certain views advanced and assertions made by the Rev. Mr. Sooy in the course of a Sunday evening sermon, and fathered a rather incisiv pamphlet letter addressed to the gentleman, which did not, however, elicit a response. Frank attended the World's Freethought Congress in Chicago and delivered an address. During a convention there of the Freethought Federation of America he was elected its first vice-president. He is presently engaged in lecturing from the Freethought platform, his engagements covering a period of some three months, and including the cities of Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and a number of the smaller cities of the East. In a private letter he irreverently refers to his lecturing as "preaching" and to his lectures as "sermons." He has met with success highly complimentary to his ability and not unflattering to the capacity of his purse. The Boston Investigator speaks of the youthful heretic as follows, in the conclusion of a column report of one of his "sermons" before the Ingersoll Secular Society: "Mr. Steiner has a good presence, a good voice, and made a favorable impression at once. His ideas were clothed in fine language, and he was applauded time and again as he scored point after point against Christianity and the church. He is an eloquent speaker, a careful student, an original thinker, and a keen, logical debater. At the close he was accorded an encore." Steiner will return to his home in De Moines about May 1st to rest up for an extended trip in the interest of his particular form of heresy in the Northwestern states.—Correspondent Des Moines Saturday Review.

Observations.

From present indications it is to be judged that the play "Hannele," the suppression of which was undertaken by Elbridge T. Gerry on account of its alleged impious character, has been indorsed by the public and that its production will not cease through intervention of policemen's clubs. I had never read or beheld anything that struck me as blasphemous, but on the representation of Mr. Gerry that "Hannele" was such, I went to see the play on the opening night. My first objection to it is that it is not a play but a scene. The Fifth Avenue Theater was full and uncomfortably hot. The seat I occupied was constructed to accommodate a soda cracker set up edgewise, and did not fit me, but it was nevertheless costly, and so I did not complain. The scene opened and continued on the darkened interior of an almshouse in Silesian Prussia. Several inmates, who, it seems, are in that country permitted to go out to beg or steal, were on the stage. In one corner was a cheap bed. After the minor characters hav wearied the spectators in the usual fashion, a robust young man looking like a priest comes in out of the snow, bearing in his arms a young girl, whom he places upon the bed. He is Gottwald, a school-teacher, and she is Hannele (pronounced Hahnelly), alleged daughter of one Mattern, a mason, who quarters at the almshouse. On account of hardship and abuse by her putativ father, the girl has attempted suicide by drowning, being rescued by Gottwald. A constable, a magistrate, and a doctor appear, but are unable to draw any information from the girl. Gottwald is more successful and finds that Hannele immersed herself in the pond because she saw Jesus beckoning to her from the depths. Evidently her mind is overwrought by contemplation of her misery and by religious instruction. Other inmates disclose the cruelty of Mattern and he is apprehended. A sister of charity or deaconess is called in to nurse Hannele, but goes out occasionally, and during her absence the girl has the visions which constitute the blasphemous portions of the alleged play. First returns the cruel father, who accuses Hannele of shamming illness and orders her out of bed to replenish the fire. In endeavoring to obey him she falls in a faint, and Sister Martha, the deaconess, rushes in and restores her to the couch. The sister again absenting herself, Hannele's dead mother appears and describes the glories of the blest. Again, angels present themselvs at the foot of the bed and gladden the sufferer. Further on, the dark angel Death is seen; he claims the girl, but is "avaunted" by the deaconess, who recognizes him and interposes her "consecrated hand." Then are brought crystal slippers and gorgeous robes wherewith Hannele apparels herself, and lies upon the bed, a beautiful corpse. The school-master Gottwald, with the school-children, Hannele's playmates, appear, to whom the teacher delivers a homily; neighbors flock around, and four youths in white bring a crystal coffin, placing therein the dead girl. Now comes Mattern, the alleged father, who is not aware of his daughter's demise, and whom the neighbors hiss at as a murderer. But Gottwald assumes the character of messenger and accuser; Mattern denies his complicity in the girl's death; a flower upon her breast becomes incandescent; thunders roll and lightnings flash, and Gottwald calls Mattern a liar. Some of the critics hav shuddered because at this point the mason threatens the messenger with personal violence, but as the former is a man of magnificent physique, while the latter is comparativly undersized, no serious apprehensions as to the result are entertained by the audience. Finally the cruel father slinks away; Gottwald's somber vestments drop off, and he stands transfigured under calcium lights as the Stranger, that is, Jesus Christ. He approaches the coffin, clasps the dead girl's hands, speaks her name, and she arises to shelter herself under his protecting arm. Angels and seraphs are summoned, who appear in a blaze of effulgence from the wings, and the master leads Hannele up a flight of stairs at the rear of the stage into regions supposed to be those of ineffable glory. Whereat the curtain falls to rise again momentarily on the interior of the almshouse, showing the dead girl in her former rags on her miserable bed. That is all.

Though there are two scenes in "Hannele," it is really one, the curtain's fall at about the middle of it affording only a three-minute intermission, during which the audience is respectfully requested by the program to remain seated. On the whole, the production is pathetic and what my Snohomish partner, Mr. C. H. Packard, would call tear-starting. It would be nobler if Gottwald, instead of merely rebuking the brutal parent and then taking the girl's spirit to heaven, would throw him out of the window, after the style of Josh Whitcomb, and transplant Hannele to some old homestead where she would grow healthy and happy, but that of course is not the dramatist's scheme in this instance. Christ the Stranger, as represented by Mr. Richman, is a character that no Christian need be ashamed of, and although the angels on the whole are not quite so agreeable personages as women ordinarily are on the stage, they are not offensiv, despite their wings, which are a misfit. The piece holds the attention of the spectator, and is no more suggestiv of blasphemy than the living picture of Moses in the bulrushes at the Garden theater.

I hav seen the advance sheets of a sketch of myself which is being printed in Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." It is quite flattering, but I think I could hav made it more that way if Mr. Putnam had allowed me to write it myself intead of getting the Editor of this journal to do so. My biographer, I observe, claims that I am "pudgy," which is a circumstance that, left to myself, I should not hav revealed, although I am duly vain of the virtuous habits and untroubled conscience that hav permitted me to be fat. There are many things in the life of a fat man which he would fain forego, especially if his weight accumulates while he is young. Among all the girls I hav ever paid marked attention to in a life quite assiduously devoted to that delusion, I never found one who was not sensitiv on the subject of a fat beau, and I hav for that reason been at a disadvantage in the presence of other males with less beauty, as I viewed them. It is true that this sensitivness on the part of the female disappears after marriage, and that the conjugal mate of a chubby gentleman finds joy in poking her fingers into the adipose tissue covering his ribs, but that does not offset the other inconveniences. For example, when pleased it is not agreeable for him to be obliged to repress all evidences of hilarity for fear of shaking down a stovepipe or cracking a chair. He would like to be able, sometimes, to sit with his legs crossed, or to pull off his boots without getting red in the face. He feels a trifle guilty for taking up so much space in the world, and he is bound to be squeezed in public places. He is expected to be good-natured at all times. Any one who wants a favor will pick him out from a dozen lean men. He is condemned for being late at a fire. He may find more pleasure than others in sitting down, but in the enjoyment of this comfort he is called indolent. His clothes are as mealsacks, his hat as a bushel measure, and his shoes spread over a large acreage. On a warm day he steams like a clambake; the heat vexes him, and the sharp elbows of his neighbors crucify his flesh. Such is the penalty of the virtuous life and the untroubled conscience by which I am marked, and such are the griefs from which my biographer in "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" has torn the veil with ruthless hand. A picture of the undersigned accompanies the sketch and adds great value to the work as a whole.

A contemporary having stated that "the preference given by industrial employers to the man who does not use intoxicating liquors has done more to sober the nation than all the Prohibition drum and trumpet rant that has been uttered since Neal Dow first posed as a Prohibitionist;" Editor Funk, of the New York Voice, says: "You forget, however, that when Neal Dow started his Prohibition crusade 'industrial employers' had an idea that neither they nor their men could do a full day's work without intoxicating liquors. Their present attitude is itself one of the results accomplished by the Prohibition agitation."

I judge from this utterance of the Voice that Prohibition, rightly comprehended, means that the sentiment of abstinence has more influence than its enforcement; for certainly Prohibition can claim no practical results except in a comparativly few isolated instances, while discrimination against drunken employees is world-wide. It is no sentiment which leads to this discrimination, except, perhaps, in the case of Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, and I am inclined to believe that even they would prefer a competent workman who drank occasionally to an incompetent abstainer. The reason why employers prefer non-drinkers is obvious—they are more reliable; and it must follow, as a natural result, that when a workman finds he can not hold a job and drink, he will, if sensible, giv up the drink. This might occur in New York; but if in New York there were no objection to a drinking employee, I do not see how Prohibition in Iowa, Kansas, or Maine could influence him to swear off.

The anti-woman suffragists are exerting themselvs unnecessarily in endeavoring to thwart the intent of their sisters to hav the word male stricken out of the Constitution of New York. There is little likelihood of its being done, and if there were, no argument which they hav put forward could hav any influence with sane persons such as it is hoped the constitutional convention is composed of. Their plea is that the suffrage is not a right or privilege, but a duty which they would feel bound to attend to if enfranchised, and their prayer is that the cup may pass from them. If these anti-suffrage women could be conceived of as sufficiently intelligent to be funny, their petition might be regarded as a joke, but it seems they are quite in earnest. There are plenty of strong objections to women's voting, the first being that their participation in elections would nearly double the expense of the process, with no corresponding advantage to the public. This matter has not been put forward strongly by the antis. The argument in its favor is that since men vote, there is no conceivable reason why women should not, and I know of no other nor see the need for any.

There is now and has been for the past fifty years an unmistakable inclination among great numbers of the more intelligent persons to keep out of politics, to cease their attempts to govern others, and to follow the more desirable occupation of governing themselvs. I wish that the women like Mrs. Stanton and her female brethren had chosen to join this class, though I suppose that in the regular course of evolution it is necessary that women should go through the legislativ period in order to get out of it. They must learn, as some men hav, what an impotent thing is the ballot and how poor a gift is the privilege of the suffrage. The evils of an ignorant, prejudiced, bigoted, and vicious ballot are so apparent that no one denies their existence, and we hav therefore placed legislatures, the executiv, and the courts between the ballot box and the statute book. These will remain when women vote, and they can rely upon it that the general result, beyond increased expense and corruption at the polls, will not be affected. Political reform is not going to be brought about, however, by restricting suffrage to males or by disfranchising "ignorant foreigners." It will begin at the top, and will come through the large class of which I hav spoken who are a law unto themselvs and who will refuse to be governed or robbed by the politicians and their mob of electors, male or female. As I said before, I wish the advanced women had chosen to identify themselvs with these, instead of the others.

In Cincinnati, the other day, the Rev. Father Dominick O'Grady, a Catholic priest, shot a girl dead, his reason for doing so being that she rejected his attentions and made him jealous. A few months ago the Rev. Father Conley, a Catholic priest of Duluth, Minn., ravished a thirteen-year-old girl, and was sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary. It is only fair to female members of the Catholic church to say that their conduct does not often lead to the tragic and disastrous results here noted, and that it was wholly irregular for the young women concerned to giv the reverend fathers cause for such extreme measures. The priests hav the women of the church fairly under control, and a frequent repetition of these developments need not be looked for.

I observe from Mr. Charles Watts's correspondence in this issue that the writer has been touched by the beauties of returning spring, his remarks thereon being quite as poetical as though he had thrown them into the form of verse. All the mildness he has noted in the English atmosphere can not be confined to Europe, but is quite conspicuous here; and the posies are in blossom, daisies and forget-me-nots, some of them along the wayside, but the most of them in pots. As I write, a calla-lily, which we brought from Puget Sound, all the way across the country, to transplant in Eastern ground, in the kettle where we placed it, now is sending branches out that remind me of my boyhood and the bright potato sprout. In the park the green is spreading as the sunny moments pass, and in vain the park policeman strives to keep it off the grass. There's the cuckoo in our country, and his voice is often heard in our halls of legislation, but it's not the English bird. By a strange concatenation of phenomenal events, the blossom of the plum-tree can be seen inside the fence; and the colored circus poster bourgeons on the rented hoards, though such lumber in this country is denominated boards. In the yard upon the clothesline hang the carpet and the rug, while the young man's wayward fancy lightly turns to thoughts of hug. You can tell that spring is with us, not because the sun is hot, but the Editor is restless to be sailing on a yacht. (Since the snow fell in November and the wintry breezes blew he has raised a crop of whiskers for the winds to wander through.)

Coxey's horde of Commonwealers throng the highway and the town; Christ has been reincarnated in the person of Carl Browne. In the churches contributions now are given with a zest for the minister's vacation and the congregation's rest; while the voices of the captains from the rivers inward float, and the people take excursions on a Coney Island boat. Oh, the spring has dawned for certain, like the one we had last year, and when the snow has gone again another will appear.

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

News and Notes.

The "Sunrise Club" is a unique institution, and stands for all sorts of looking forward to better times. It is a reform affair, permeated with the sociable spirit. I had the pleasure of attending on Monday, May 7th, its club dinner, and I found a very congenial atmosphere. There was plenty of intellectual excitement, with the good things that pleased the palate. It is rather encouraging for pioneers to sit down to a good, square meal, and then, with a satisfied appetite, discuss the radical problems of human life. It givs a brightening aspect to the forlorn hope. The question discussed this evening was, "Is Socialism Practicable?" No conclusion was reached, but a great variety of bright and conflicting ideas were expressed. There was no unanimity of opinion. Starr Hoyt Nichols opened with what might be called the hard, common-sense view of the whole matter; and I followed with a statement of Freethought democracy, which, to my mind, is the path of political reform; and then Idealists mainly occupied the floor with a delineation of what might be if human nature were only perfectly right. Most any kind of "ism" would be practicable if all men and women were supremely wise. But as we hav to deal with ignorance and crime, that alters the condition of the problem. However, we all believe in "Sunrise," in a better and brighter day for humanity, notwithstanding all difficulties; and it is well to come together, and view the Sunrise and its manifold and spreading lights, even if we don't hav the same standpoint, or see the same glory. So I hope the "Sunrise Club" will long fling its shifting hues upon the pathway of reform.

Next comes the Liberal Club, with its heterogeneous independence, and this time a woman dared the criticisms of this Socratic audience, which is always asking questions and demanding a reason for everything; and unless one has a reason there is no use of talking. Mrs. Stanton-Blatch, a daughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, was the speaker of the evening, and she gave luster to the ancestral name. She discussed that burning question—woman's rights and woman's work. She did not deal at all in sentiment, but in facts and logic. It was a straightforward discourse and hard to be answered, and the critics of the Liberal Club did not antagonize it, but made opposition only on some side issues. A dusky Indian princess was present, who added interest to the occasion, and gave some quite vivid ideas about aboriginal life and its superiority in some respects to civilized life. It seems that we can learn something from the Indian. Mrs. Stanton-Blatch gave one of the best expositions of the woman question I hav yet heard. She has evidently studied the question in all its aspects, in the true scientific spirit, and supports her arguments with statistics. Her main point was that in the world of industry woman has always been as potent a factor as man, only she has been a slave. It is better for man and woman that woman be free in the realm of industry, for in the end it will be higher wages for man and woman, and co-operation and not competition.

On Tuesday evening I listened to the Theosophical Hindoo monk, who is quite eloquent, and who created somewhat of a sensation at the World's Parliament of Religions by his presentation of Oriental philosophy. I really cannot find anything new in these Theosophical speculations. They are simply metaphysics. But since they are anti-orthodox and help to stir people's minds, it is quite enjoyable to listen to their exposition in a picturesque manner. The monk appears in his nativ costume, has a fine, intellectual face, a pleasing voice, and without doubt is master of his subject. He reasons subtly, and unless one follows him closely he is pretty apt to be ensnared in the Hindoo's dazzling idealism. Perhaps these philosophical fancies are a good pathway to many minds out of the bigotry and darkness of orthodoxy.

I myself lectured at Newark Sunday afternoon on "Liberty and Authority." The Newark Liberal League is flouri-hing. The audience is ready to listen to all sides. Liberty and authority present the most difficult problem of all, and even among Liberals there is by no means entire agreement. Of course all are in favor of abolishing the authority of church and Bible and priest and king, but when it comes into politics and the sphere of the state apparently wide differences arise. Two great tendencies are in the "people's advent"—to Collectivism and to Individualism; and it looks at first as if one must triumph at the expense of the other. But I am inclined to think that the broad-minded and acute Stephen Pearl Andrews is right when he says that the problem is to unite these two. Certainly we desire in the future of humanity splendid individualities, grand personalities, great men and great women. Can there be any supreme civilization without these? And yet must there not be throughout humanity a unity of action and a common interest? This, to my mind, is the sublime goal.

I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bird, amidst the splendid sunshine and the beautiful flowers, and so the pathway of the Secular Pilgrim is filled with the bright colors of hope and friendship, and the toils of the future are gilded with promis.

I lecture at Northport, Long Island, June 4th–8th, and after that I shall push Westward on my year's lecture trip. During the month of May I shall devote myself to the Constitutional Convention and open the way for Freethought work as far as possible.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"Four Hundred Years."

The finishing touches hav been put on the plates of Mr. Putnam's big book, and it is now in the hands of the pressman. An elaborate Index has been prepared, so that any character or subject touched upon may be turned to at a moment's notice. Although the printed pages number more than eight hundred and fifty, the illustrations are so numerous as to occur at about every sixth page. An ample Introduction sets forth the object of the work and tells the reader how it is to be regarded—not as a biographical dictionary, but as a chronological history of the development of Freethought. At the same time there is much of date and biography. The frontispiece is Bruno, who, standing at the threshold of the new era, looks forward to the great Ingersoll, the typical Freethinker of today; the latter, with daughter's babe upon his knee," holding, as it were, the blossom of the present and the promis of the future in his hand. Under the head of "Proem" the author, in one of the best poems he ever wrote, has set forth the significance of the group as no other could.

There are twenty-five chapters in the book, with subdivisions as follows:

Chapter I.—Proem, Introduction.
Chapter II.—Columbus, Vasco de Gama, and Magellan—The three Voyages.
Chapter III.—Before Columbus.
Chapter IV.—Astronomy.
Chapter V.—The Reformation.
Chapter VI.—Philosophy: Bruno and Spinoza.
Chapter VII.—Pomponazzi, Telesio, Campanella, and Vanini.
Chapter VIII.—The Critical Philosophy—Descartes, Locke. Hume, Kant, Hamilton, and Comte.
Chapter IX.—The Final Scientific Answer—Monism.
Chapter X.—Education and Ethics—Bacon, Comenius, Pestalozzi, Froebel, Combe, Herbert Spencer, Huxley, Holyoake, Owen, Haeckel.
Chapter XI.—Literature—Provencal, Rabelais, Montaigne, Cervantes, Mysteries and Moralities, Marlowe, Shakspere.
Chapter XII.—Gibbon.
Chapter XIII.—Voltaire, The French Revolution, Thomas Paine, Rousseau, The Paris Salon, Condorcet, Volney.
Chapter XIV.—Shelly and Goethe—Homer, Virgil, Milton—Modern Poets—Burns, Wordsworth, Scott, Keats, Byron, Lessing, Schiller.
Chapter XV.—Geology—Age of Man—Age of the Earth—Order of Evolution.
Chapter XVI.—Evolution—Methods, Proofs, Results—Religion—Morality, Progress.
Chapter XVII.—Modern Europe—Politics—Kossuth, Mazzini—Garibaldi, Proudhon, Bakounine, Marx, Castelar, Bradlaugh.
Chapter XVIII.—Modern Europe—Literature—Religion—Tennyson, Swinburne, Massey, Hugo, Zola, Ibsen.
Chapter XIX.—America Before the Civil War—Puritans, Abolition, The Yankee.
Chapter XX.—Woman's Emancipation—Woman and the Bible. the Church, the State, Before Christianity.
Chapter XXI.—America To-Day.
Chapter XXII.—Freethought Organization—America, England—Continental Europe.
Chapter XXIII.—American Biographical Sketches.
Charter XXIV.—English Biographical Sketches.
Chapter XXV.—Freethinkers of Continental Europe.

The following names of subscribers to "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" hav been received since the last acknowledgment a week ago. The entire list, which is to appear in the book, will be reserved for the last form. Reader, is your name written there? It is the book of the kingdom of Freethought, and there is nowhere a brighter page.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Milwaukee Liberal Club meets at Severance Hall, 421 Milwaukee street, every Sunday at 7.30 P.M.

THE Radical Library meets in Skerrett's Hall, Ridge avenue and Green street, Philadelphia. Open on Tuesday, 7.30 to 10 P.M.

THE First Secular Church of Portland, Or., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Katie Kehm Smith, lecturer. Sunday-school in same place at 12:30 P.M.

THE Manhattan Liberal Club meets every Friday evening in German Masonic Hall, 220 East 15th street, New York, at 8 o'clock. Program for May:

May 11th—"Liberty and Authority," S. P. Putnam.

T. B. Wakeman, Henry Rowley. Samuel P. Putnam and Joseph Warwick, so far constitute the speakers for the Paine Celebration at New Rochelle on May 30th. There will be others, and a splendid and lively program may confidently be expected.

FRIENDSHIP LIBERAL LEAGUE of Philadelphia will commemorate the anniversary of Stephen Girard's birth with appropriate exercises, Sunday. May 20th, at 2.30 and 7.30 P.M., in Warner's Hall, Broad and Wallace streets. Able talent has been secured for this occasion, and having a commodious hall with a seating capacity for one thousand people, Liberals are cordially invited to participate.

GEO. LONGFORD, Sec.

THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome. Radical Library open 7.30 to 10 P.M. Program for May:

May 15th—"Essentials of Socialism," Dr. G. Metzler.
May 22d—"Woman and Single Tax," George Stephens.
May 29th—"Woman in Journalism," Mrs. T. H. Symon, Sec. U.L.L.

ON Friday last, at the Manhattan Liberal Club, Mrs. Stanton-Blatch, daughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, spoke upon "The Economic Freedom of Women." Notwithstanding that adverse criticism was invited, the critics commended the lecture in every way. It was an appeal for the economic freedom of women, a plea for the better management of children, and coöperation in the affairs of home. The lecturer did not see any reason why men should not help themselvs more, instead of thrusting so much upon women, using valuable time, which could be employed better than in sewing on buttons, and doing other things which men could do just as well.

MRS. EMMA BECKWITH spoke last Sunday before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association on "Where Are We At? From a Woman's Standpoint." It was an interesting lecture, containing many facts and sprinkled with bright remarks. Looking at thiugs from a bookkeeping standpoint, she thought that socially and religiously we had a balance on the right side, but in politics there was a deficit somewhere and the lecturer was not sure where we would come out. She thought that no person should be allowed to vote until he had resided here for 21 years, and that America should hav absolute monetary independence.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for May:

May 13th—"Liberty and Authority," S. P. Putnam.
May 20th—"The Science of Life," Rev. F. E. Mason.
May 27th—"A Study of Shelley," Henry Rowley. Concluding meeting; report of season's work; vocal and instrumental music.
May 30th, Decoration Day,—Paine Celebration at New Rochelle. Tickets, including railroad fare, 50 cents. Tickets are exchangeable for railroad ticket to New Rochelle and return by special train of the New York, New Haven & Hartford R. R. Co., which will leave Grand Central Depot at 12.30 P.M. The return ticket from New Rochelle will be good on any train during the day.

Sunday-school Teacher: "Now, who can tell me why Satan was cursed? Hold up your hand." Dave: "'Cause he told the truth."

A high, broad forehead is like a red rag to a priest. The boy built on that plan will eat of the tree of knowledge and tell the truth about it, even if he is alone in a neighborhood of Christian liars, slanderers, and gossips who are ready to vilify intelligence by any low means in order to carry their precinct for the master who ordered all the men, women, and little children killed, "saving only the maidens alive" for purposes which are excluded from the United States mail unless religiously connected with the postmaster-general.

Letters of Friends.

A Veteran's Order.

WYOMING, IA., April 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1 for ten copies of the arguments on taxing church property. ABNER KIMBALL.

For the Advancement of Freethought.

SOEGHO, KY., April 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2. You may use same for the advancement of Freethought in a way that you think will do the most good. M. F. BALEE.

Would Make a Strong Team.

ZURICH, KAN., April 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 to extend my subscription. If it were not for your paper I do not know where I would turn to find out what the Christians are doing in Congress in trying to get God into our Constitution. I think that will never be accomplished, at least, not while we hav men like Putnam defending our cause. I do wish R. G. Ingersoll would take hold with Putnam; they, combined, would make a strong team to fight the dastardly hypocrits. S. I. CLEAVELAND.

Since Bennett's Arrest.

FINDLEY, MICH., May 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $6.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." I am rather late with my remittance. I hav been trying to get a new subscriber to send along with mine, but the times are so hard I could not make it out. I hav been a Freethinker ever since I can remember; hav taken and read THE TRUTH SEEKER with interest ever since D. M. Bennett was arrested at Watkins by that orthodox band. I am well pleased with the paper, and expect to take it as long as I liv, if I can raise the stamps. M. A. DEXTER.

Truthful and Reliable.

LEON, N. Y., April 30, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I send in registered letter $2, to extend my subscription to the end of the year. There are many things of interest, both to Secularists and church believers, now pending, and I find that THE TRUTH SEEKER givs information more direct and reliable in regard to such matters than can be found in other publications within my reach.

It is highly important that both Secularists and church believers keep themselvs posted on pending issues, and I think your paper has, or should hav, credit for being truthful and reliable on such matters. Truly yours, E. C. DURFEE.

Not Enough Free Soup.

SKOWHEGAN, ME, April 24, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5, for which send me Ingersoll's lectures in one volume. We expect to hav this talented orator in this city in September.

We hav had two hundred and fifty of God's chosen ones in our city the past week, being in attendance at the Methodist Episcopal Conference. They hav made Colonel Ingersoll's visit a positiv necessity, for they hav preached "hell-fire and damnation" quite strongly, and the atmosphere needs cooling, and they must know "What [they] can do to be saved."

Considering the fact that the conference had not been held in Skowhegan for thirty years, many were grieved, and I think the ministers most of all, to think that eighty members had to stop at the hotel and pay board. DR. F. S. BIGELOW.

What is the Matter in Ohio?

SHYVILLE, OHIO, April 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2. Apply $1 on subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and send me "Men, Women, and Gods," "Sabbath Breaking," "Thumbscrew and Rack," and "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." I am sorry that I cannot send you any new subscribers, as I had expected. There are a number of Liberals in this part of the country, but they are apathetic. A number of them are teachers like myself. Ohio is becoming so Christianized that I think God will soon resign as celestial king to become presiding officer in the Ohio legislature. If I hav not been misinformed, a man who thinks so lightly of God's day as to fish on said day may be fined $50 and costs. The parties who furnish the convicting evidence get half the fine. If the person fined is poor, he is sent to the workhouse as a slave to this most Christian state, the state paying the informer. Sunday patroling will pay better than fishing. I hereby recommend the legislators of Ohio to study Remsburg on Sabbath-breaking.

Yours for a perpetuation of constitutional liberty, SAM. C. WESTFALL.

Wettstein Cannot Faze Him.

URBANA, O., April 24, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $6 for subscription. Now I don't want to tell stories or make excuses, for I did the best I could. Almost all Freethinkers are poor; no millionaires among us. I wish there were.

I am not able to get "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" and other books I want, but think I shall soon.

I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from the start and I hav not yet seen an argument that could knock me out of the true principle of Spiritualism, but I hav no controversy with Materialists. I hav been there, but I hav progressed and that is the line upon which we can work to kill orthodoxy and every man-made god. If I hav to stop the paper it will be because I am not able to pay. WM. H. BAXTER.

Some Questions.

LOCKWOOD, WASH., Feb. 4, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please permit me to ask a few questions. What would be the most benefit to the human family, science and facts or religion and faith? Would it be any more trouble for a god to giv us facts than it would be to giv faith? Who hav been fighting science from its infancy? Hav they been the so-called devil's people, the Infidels, or hav they been the so-called God's people, the Christians? Would the world be better off without science than it would with science? Will some Christian friend who is well versed in history please answer the above questions? For an illustration: If it could be possible for two parties to start out in opposit directions on a straight line, and travel a billion years and a billion miles a second, what do you suppose each party would find God doing at his journey's end? And do you suppose little brother God-Jesus would hav himself spread out from one party to the other?

Yours truly, H. O. CROCKER.

Our Reward When Reason Rules.

VERA CRUZ, IND., Feb. 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed fiud $3, renewal of my subscription for one year. I tried in vain to get some Liberals to join me. I went to Bluffton, our county seat, on purpose, but failed. They all say the paper is too dear. Well, we know, but the number of truth-loving people is so small that I know you are not getting very rich, even at this rate.

The Investigator, the Freethinker, the Independent Pulpit, etc., all good, are swamping my table with sample copies. Well, after deliberation, I thought I would stick by you. I may hav "an ax to grind" by and by, brother, and as I am a poor man, I am not very saucy.

I would very much like to hav Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," but I cannot reach it now.

Tell the Liberals all over the world for me, that as the light of reason dawns the cause of truth against error will prevail, when we may obtain our reward.

Fraternally, J. M. MILLER.

"Infidel" Grates on the Ear.

SAN CARLOS, A. T., Feb. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Your interesting journal is gladly received here each week by the few who are inclined to our way of thinking, and is read by quite a number who do not openly profess to be of Freethought opinions.

The rather harsh term "Infidel" deters many a person from avowing his true thoughts in public, but the fact that he harbors these ideas, no matter how deeply hidden within him, shows us that sound common sense is in the ascendant and will eventually gain the day.

Religion has been the curse of mankind from time immemorial. Directly or indirectly, it has caused war, persecutions, famin, insanity, murder—in fact, nearly everything detrimental to the good of mankind, which it so zealously claims to protect. Our lunatic asylums are crowded to overflowing by victims of this baleful superstition. Even those who are proof against the wiles of this social monster, but lack courage and determination to proclaim their honest opinions, willingly and knowingly pursue their way through this vast net-work of hypocrisy and illusion, with no thought or consideration except when their gains are affected by it.

With most sincere hopes of prosperity and success for your truly interesting sheet, I am, respectfully yours,

H. M. MEAD.

Hopeful, and Prospectivly Generons.

RIDGEWAY, N. Y., April 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just been reading pages 250-51 of your issue of April 21st and I find so much to commend in all of them, but particularly the letters of W. F. Jamieson, S. G. Etheridge, G. A. Boyd, Overmyer's speech, and the Editor's reply to Peter Wessel's letter, that I wish to heartily indorse and commend them all.

I hav been passing through severe financial embarrassments for the past seven years, so I hav been unable to support the cause of truth as against superstition as freely as I would hav been pleased to do.

My financial prospects, however, are now looking brighter and if realized will involve a change of residence to another state, when, if my hopes are not delusiv, I will giv a liberal percentage of my income to the support of measures to prevent our beloved country being cursed with a theocracy. GEO L. PRATT.

From a Hotbed of Orthodoxy.

NEW MARKET, IA., April 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been taking your paper till it has become necessary to my existence. I liv in such a hotbed of orthodoxy that but for THE TRUTH SEEKER and your publications I would never hav believed that the silly dogma of Christianity is on the wane, for here the bloodsucker still gets his sustenance by preaching up the horrors of hell, to which he never fails to consign everyone outside his own particular creed, and especially all doubters and investigators. In fact, there are not a half dozen outspoken Freethinkers in this (Taylor) county. I hav the honor of being the only one who ever spoke in public against the Christian religion within this county. That was in a two nights' discussion with a young sky pilot of the Disciple creed, and realizing that this would be my last and only chance, I tried to hit the rotten old hulk of Christianity a hard blow; and when through I felt that I had not failed. We will try to hav Remsburg the Great to deliver one to three lectures within this county this spring. Now let me say again that I know of no other paper that approaches equality with THE TRUTH SEEKER. I admire the wonderful genius of Heston. I am amused at the wit of George. I fully appreciate the untiring zeal of Putnam. In truth, I feel myself a friend to all contributors and correspondents of that paper; but for solid food for thought, for masterpieces of logic, reason, and argument, presented in a manner so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, etc.—for all these giv me our worthy Editor. I would much rather shake his hand than that of Grover Cleveland.

The $6.50 is for the renewal of my subscription and "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Hoping it will not be too late to enroll my name in that book, I am, as ever, a friend in the cause of freedom.

WARREN O'DELL.

A Tandem Discussion.

ROWLAND, OR, Feb 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The most of the people here are "wedded to their idols." But few of them hav ever heard a Freethought lecture, and fewer still read Liberal books or papers.

The nearest we hav ever had a Freethought lecture here was at Harrisburg, distant seven miles. C. B. Reynolds lectured there four or five years ago, and then there were but few of the orthodox fraternity out to hear him. Colonel Ingersoll and Brother Putnam hav been at Eugene City, some twenty miles from here, twice each, and had good audiences. There is where I. D. Driver, D. D, claims to hav had a discussion with Colonel Ingersoll. Well, he did; but he did his discussing about a fortnight after the colonel had gone back to Chicago.

It relieves the doctor very much to tell the people here how he had a discussion with the colonel in Chicago, and to tell the people there how he had a discussion with him in Oregon or Washington, when, as a matter of fact, he never had a public debate with the colonel anywhere. But it is almost impossible for the doctor to deliver a discourse at any time or any place without telling his audience something that Colonel Ingersoll has said or done.

Remember me kindly to "The Man with the Badge pin," and tell him that his "Observations" are almost like a love-letter to me. I hav never seen him, but I feel that I am acquainted with him. Indeed, I feel so toward the whole TRUTH SEEKER family. With much esteem, I remain, F. M. KIZER.

Eternal Hell and the Golden Rule.

SAN BERNARDINO, April 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $4, to renew subscription and for Miss Wixon's book, "Right Living."

We are great admirers of this charming writer's stories, so simply true to life. They teach a good lesson while affording delightful entertainment. All parents wishing their children to imbibe ennobling sentiments and lofty aspirations with their pastime reading should secure her books.

We once thought we had the truth in the Bible, but thanks to your paper we are now elevated to a higher level, and enjoy a broader, clearer outlook. We hav now ceased turning over such knotty problems as the sun standing still for the space of three hours and the whale swallowing Jonah, in the effort to make them harmonize with what we know to be truth.

We hav now ceased trying to understand why a God, infinit in power and wisdom and perfect in love, should yet be the author of sin and eternal damnation, by creating beings whom he predestined to eternal damnation millions of years before they were born. We heave a sigh of relief that this diabolical infinitude of malice and hatred has been ruled out of the universe. How could any man in his senses suppose for a moment that such a God could hav ever inspired the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you?"

Yet such is the logic of orthodoxy. THE TRUTH SEEKER should be read in every family in the land. When we take our paper from the post-office, and hear the ejaculations on every side, "Oh, my! do you take that paper? How did it ever happen?" we understand there are great difficulties in the way of its circulation. It was purely accidental with us, and, like many accidents that hav led to great results in the arts and sciences, it has opened the way to knowledge.

MRS. R B. KUFFEL.

A Skirmish with Salvationists.

CROSBY, TEX., April 22, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I came in contact with some of the Salvation Army yesterday in Houston, at the celebration of the anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto. About two weeks ago I was in Houston, and exchanged some of my TRUTH SEEKERS with the army for the War Cry, which was the cause of the rout that they sustained yesterday. As it is their custom on all occasions to dispose of their War Cry to all who will giv them a nickel, one of the parties yesterday offered me some, when the following colloquy ensued: "Hav a War Cry?" "Oh, ho! Did you read THE TRUTH SEEKER?" "Yes, but do not understand it." "Well, read it again; I think you will catch on." "Oh, no? I won't, for Bob Ingersoll does not believe what he says, and is a convicted man, for he has never said that there is no 'God,' and is talking only for money." "Be that as it may, Ingersoll givs more to the poor out of his earnings than any other man in his profession" Salvationist fired another shot to the effect that Robert Ingersoll could not buy a seat in heaven with his money. Here is where I got in my work. I said: "Look here, my Salvation friend, I do not believe that Mr. Ingersoll thinks of a place in heaven in return for the suffering that he relieves by his charity, and that is not all. You will hav to convince me by better logic than has yet been produced that a person can be cognizant of an existence without brains, and as we bury our dead and their brains with them, there is no chance for the future existence of man, if there be any. If there be such an existence, your God and devil will hav a merry chase to catch the brainless souls of men; and also, your God and devil being without brains or material for that much-needed organ, will not hav sense enough to catch a Salvation Armyist, to say nothing about people who had beaten the God that you preach so much about in every adventure that he, through the priest, has invented." The Salvationist bolted at this juncture, and cast imaginary fire and brimstone upon my poor devoted head, as is the case in every instance where you corner any of God's chosen people.

Find inclosed $5 for Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." I am still searching for truth. J. C. HARVEY.

To the Liberal Press and Friends of Freethought.

FOREST GROVE, OR., March 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: As a worker in this great field of reform, I am glad to be able to address you individually and collectivly, so that you may know what the progress and need of our work is, and what the few earnest workers in the vinyard of Freethought are doing in the far West. As a licensed speaker under the Oregon State Secular Union I began my work in Forest Grove, February 11th. The Liberals here are very earnest workers and rally nobly around the banner of Universal Mental Liberty and render every assistance in their power to make our work a success.

Forest Grove has a population of about fifteen hundred, and is the most creed-bound village I was ever in in the West. The Congregational church governs the Pacific University and high school. All the churches are much enraged because I am a regular speaker here. They are not afraid of the lecturer who comes and goes, who leaves nothing but a little enthusiasm behind him, but they are afraid of organized Freethought. We organized under the name of the Forest Grove Secular Union, auxiliary to the Oregon State Secular Union, and established a Sunday-school, where lessons in secular science are systematically taught; also a kindergarten class and a class of adults where various topics are discussed, likewise calisthenics, singing, declamation, etc., are engaged in to the advancement and edification of all. Where in the world could a Freethought reading-room and circulating library be established more effectually than here? Owing to the depression of the finances of our country it is quite probable that among the few Liberals here it would be impossible to raise a sufficient sum of money to start a library and reading-room; but if each one who is willing to help us will send a book or periodical he may hav read that treats of current topics, the sciences, and all subjects that are designed to crush superstition and enlighten the people, specimens in mineralogy, entomology, botany, fossils, etc., for our cabinet, in short, if you will send that which you can spare to giv us a start it will be thankfully received. Secularists, Liberals, Freethinkers, Spiritualists, let us each bend to the oars and work and help till we see the ship of progress, with every sail unfurled, plowing through the sea of superstition and putting into port at every home.

Address all contributions to A. E. Barker, Forest Grove, Or.

He Wants Your Assistance.

CARR, Mo., April 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I am not a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, but intend to be soon; hav just received some sample copies and like it ever so much. I know no one taking it in this (Stone) county. Send me some more samples and some tracts if you hav any for distribution. I will try to get some subscribers. This is and has been the worst preacher-ridden country that I ever saw. To show how much superstitious rot still remains in the minds of the people here: We held our annual school meeting April 3d, and among other things voted upon was this: Whether the schoolhouse should be used for devotional and literary purposes. The sky-pilots and their duped followers came out in full force and voted in "public worship," but voted out literary societies, saying, "There is too much worldliness in a literary society; that kangaroo or moot courts should not be held in any community, because they taught the people to be shams and liars." Being a farmer, I am not very well informed on literary and educational topics, and hav never had the opportunity of reading any Liberal literature; therefore I ask all the readers of the grandest paper I hav ever seen, THE TRUTH SEEKER, to write out a speech and send it to me by mail. Write it just as you would stand before an audience and deliver it—one in favor of literature and literary societies. I will read and study and commit it to memory and call the people together and try to talk them out of such ridiculous nonsense. The myth-worshiping people hav organized a Sunday-school and are holding religious meetings in our new schoolhouse and are laughing in their sleeves over keeping out the young folks' lyceums.

My mother and father belong to the missionary Baptist church. My grandfather was a Methodist preacher. All my grandparents were church-members.

I hav read a history, or some might call it a novel. Probably some of you hav read it. Now and then a church-member will read it. This book is called the Jewish Bible. When I found it was their way-bill from earth to sky I became disgusted with such silly, ridiculous nonsense. The "dust" story; the big "fish" lie; that muscular man with the new jawbone; the great cornstalk ark story; that big bear that ate forty-two children without any salt; the great destructiv quail story; and the story of that man who sailed up into heaven, chariot and all, where flesh and blood has no business to go—such stories will do to read when you cannot get anything better, but for mercy's sake don't take it for truth. JOHN ADAY.

Will Stand Up for His Rights.

GALLUP, N. MEX., Feb. 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Although not a subscriber to your very valuable paper, I see nearly every copy by exchanging the Ironclad Age for it, so you see that my friend Murray and myself can get two papers for the price of one. Not that we begrudge the price, but we are really unable to do otherwise. I am heartily in accord with all that leads to the emancipation of the human race from the degrading bonds of priestcraft, and I hope to liv to see the day that the churches will hav to pay their share of the taxes and all sectarianism, of whatever kind, will be expunged from our statutes. It is a disgrace to an intelligent people to hav such laws as are now in vogue in most of the states. In this territory there is a law prohibiting all work on the so-called Lord's day; but I hav not heard of its being enforced up to date. I hav worked Sunday as well as any other day of the week, in coal mines and on the railroad, at work that I thought could well be dispensed with for a day, and also on work that could hav been prevented by an Almighty being, had he so desired. But no, he allowed water to accumulate in the mines on Sunday as well as on other days, and had it been left to be taken out any day but Sunday, it would hav entailed a serious loss to the miners as well as the owners. I hav seen a train that had gone through an open switch and bridge; this could hav been prevented had God sent one of his angels or come himself and closed the switch. It would hav prevented the engineer's leg being broken, the fireman's back being bruised, the brakeman being thrown from the tender to the whistle, and about $9,000 worth of property being destroyed. This is only one case out of millions that are recorded in history.

Now, Mr. Editor, I would not take up a straw to enforce my beliefs or opinions on others, but I will do what I can to prevent others from enforcing their opinions and beliefs upon me. I am willing to do unto others as I would that others do unto me, and I want others to treat me accordingly. I am the father of two young scamps who will receive the best education I can afford. I am by degrees gathering all the books I can, not only those upon our side, but the opposite also. I shall try to get "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," which I believe will be a grand book, but at present I am deeply in debt. I am crawling out little by little, and if I retain my health for a year I will be on my feet and in shape to look after my little ones. I was reading "Why Don't God Kill the Devil?" to my wife the other evening, and several days afterwards my boy, four years old, asked me the same question, "Papa, why don't God kill the devil?" I hav not answered the little one yet, but I would like to ask some of our clerical friends to do so.

Yours for truth, E. WILLMUNDER.

A Kansan Says a Few Words.

KIRWIN, KAN., Feb. 13, 294.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed money for renewal of subscription. I am a little short this winter; we in Kansas are in a bad fix; cannot sell anything here but fat hogs and they are scarce and do not bring a very big price.

The preachers are making a vain effort to draw in a few fishes, but, after weeks of steady pulling, when they got their net ashore they did not hav many fish. So they gave it up. The Abiah came to my house and wanted to pray. I told him he was welcome to pray all he wanted to; that so far as we were concerned we did not go a red on prayer; that we could not see that it would affect anything but the individual who was making it, and possibly the hearer. So he went away, saying that we were a perverse and stiff-necked people.

I want to say, Mr. Editor, that political articles in THE TRUTH SEEKER are not relished very well by some of us, that is, some of the subscribers. We are of diverse political views and what one would relish another would not. For instance, one brother wrote about our legislature last winter, when some fellow at Topeka, calling himself a non-partisan, jumps on this brother and proceeds to call him bad names, etc. Now, I want to say in few words that notwithstanding what this non-partisan says about it, the struggle of last winter was between the farmers of Kansas and the great railroad lines which hav got the agricultural class throttled and are squeezing every drop of sweat and blood out of them. It was well known that there would be some legislation that the railroads did not want if the People's party got both houses of the legislature; so the railroad combined and through the great Santa Fé road they laid their plans. These plans it would take more space than you probably could spare to explain. That great and notorious villain, Geo. R. Peck, was the principal manager in carrying out their plans. They downed the farmer members, over-reached them. It is a well-known fact that the rural class is more simple and unsophisticated than those of cities and towns, also that the farmer is no match for the lawyer when it comes to trickery and chicanery; so the final result was that the farmer man got left, but it took almost the whole force of the Santa Fé railroad, assisted by the Gould roads, to do it. Now, as I said before, the whole thing was done to prevent, if possible, certain contemplated legislation that the railroads did not want; for instance, the Iowa maximum freight rate law, which is very satisfactory in that state to the farmers, was thought to be the right kind of law to pass in Kansas; hence the trouble. The railroads did not want it and brought all their force to bear to prevent its enactment and succeeded. There is another point in this controversy, that is this: Nothing can go over the telegraph lines of a political nature until it is conned and scratched and hatcheled and pruned and then submitted to the final revision committee to see if there is anything left in it that would be detrimental to certain folks or combines; then, after it is thoroughly scanned so that not a truth or fact in regard to their plans to skin the public remains, it is sent to the headquarters of the Associated Press, there to be again conned. So you see, Mr. Editor, there is rather a slim show for any truth or facts that would be objectionable to these great combines to get to the general public. Now, and finally, it appears to us that you should be very chary in accepting anything of a political nature from the Associated Press dispatches

I am truly glad to see that your brother, George E., has taken up the cudgels and is rapping some of the schemers over the head.

With best wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER and all its friends, I remain,

Yours for Freethought,

S. M. TRAVIS, M.D.

Where the Sun Goes Down.

April 20th, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Don't permit the idea to long remain in the sensorium of E. O. Roscoe that he is leading or misleading any of your readers referred to as the "public" on the money question. Out here, where the sun sinks to rest in the Pacific ocean and the grasshopper sits on the sweet potato vine, we hav not a very exalted opinion of Mr. Roscoe's ideas on money, for his verbose emanations disclose the fact that several barrels of coal oil would hav to be consumed in his student's lamp before he could write anything sensible or worthy of serious consideration on that subject.

Any man in this age of the world who holds to the idea that money must hav an intrinsic value is either a knave or a man badly in need of information. Aristotle, in his day, had a correct idea of money, and he did thus remark: "Of itself, money is an empty thing. It has value only by law, and not by nature, for a change of agreement among those using it can depreciate it entirely, and render it unfit to satisfy our needs." To hav money you must first hav a government, and that government invariably coins and regulates the value of all kinds issued, be the various kinds made of gold, silver, nickel, copper, or paper; and if the full legal tender quality is given to each kind, the same power is possessed by all alike. Nothing can disprove this fact, and I challenge Mr. Roscoe to show one instance where a paper dollar endowed with full legal-tender qualities, under a stable government, ever depreciated or failed to perform the functions for which it was issued. Gold and silver are nothing but commodities without the monetary stamp of some government, and their power to pay debts is fixed by law. Let this government enact a law that gold is legal tender for all debts and dues except duties on imports and interest on the public debt, and make the paper dollar a full legal tender without any exception, and the gold dollar will depreciate in value. Law can regulate its monetary value every time, and the present value of gold as bullion is largely fictitious because of its being so generally used for money. Subject the yellow metal to the same legislation silver has received, and its bullion value would be likewise affected. We all know that the great increase of gold during the California and Australia excitement led to the talk of demonetizing gold as money, but since then silver has come to the front in such quantities that the Shylocks and bankers had that metal demonetized, fearing the people might hav too much money. When it was demonetized, its bullion value was greater than that of the gold dollar, but since that event it has steadily decreased, showing indisputably the power of legislation to affect it. But what idiotic nonsense it is to say that until men dig and delve in the bowels of the earth for gold and silver we cannot hav money to effect exchanges of property and pay debts! Neither one of these metals has intrinsic value in the true sense of the word, for neither possesses the power to sustain or prolong life, like wheat, corn, or potatoes. And if Mr. Roscoe was removed from the center of society and left on some desert with the opportunity to choose for the support of life between 100 lbs. of gold and the same weight of wheat, no one can doubt what his choice would be. There is as much superstition in the reverence of some people for gold and silver as there is in the reverence of others for the father, son, and holy ghost; and some are as blind financially as others are religiously. Let the government demonetize gold and silver, issue nothing but paper money, and that direct to the people without the intervention of Shylock bankers, and we will behold such changes in the material comfort and welfare of the people as the world never saw before.

While we remain slaves to the superstition that gold and silver possess intrinsic value, and money can be made of nothing else and hav value, we will continue to be the victims of Shylocks' greed and the despotic tyranny of those who control and manipulate these metals. A full legal-tender paper dollar is good enough for

Lying on a bed of down, decked in ribbons gay;
What a pleasant life you lead, whether night or day.

Dining like an epicure, from a costly dish,
Served with what you like the best, chicken, meat or fish,
Purring at an outstretched hand, knowing but caresses:
Half the comforts of your life, pussy, no one guesses.

Romping through the house at will, racing down the hall,
Full of pretty, playful pranks, loved and praised by all,
Wandering from room to room to find the choicest spot;
Favored little household puss, happy is your lot.

Sleeping on my lady's lap, or dozing by the grate,
Fed with catnip tea if ill, what a lucky fate!
Loved in life and mourned in death, and stuffed may be at that.
And kept up on the mantelshelf—dear pet cat.

II. THE TRAMP CAT.

Poor little beggar cat, hollow-eyed and gaunt,
Creeping down the alleyway like a ghost of want,
Kicked and beat by thoughtless boys, bent on cruel play;
What a sorry life you lead, whether night or day.

Hunting after crusts and crumbs, gnawing meatless bones,
Trembling at a human foot, fearing bricks and stones,
Shrinking at an outstretched hand, knowing only blows;
Wretched little beggar cat, born to suffer woes,

Stealing to an open door, craving food and heat,
Frightened off with angry cries and broomed into the street;
Tortured, teased, and chased by dogs, through the lonely night:
Homeless, little beggar cat, sorry is your plight,

Sleeping anywhere you can, in the rain and snow,
Waking in the cold, gray dawn, wondering where to go;
Dying in the street at last, starved to death at that;
Picked up by the scavenger—poor tramp cat.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in Independent.

Still the cars go rocking, rocking, amid the Rockies. Piles upon piles of magnificent rocks, boulders rising straight upward hundreds of feet, make the wonderful Granite Canyon. What an upheaval was here! What an awful tumult and convulsion of nature has in this region taken place!

At Spinney the mountains are less rocky, and assume more of a sugar-loaf shape—brown sugar. Grass lands are here and mounds, and places are noted where land sections hav been taken. "Snowy range" is on the left of us, covered the year round with snow and ice. At Hartsel beautiful, park-like lands appear. I cannot see what may be the principal industry, but it may be stock-raising. What immense tracts of land appear! And I thought if government would expend some money in opening up these lands, devoting them to agricultural purposes, what a blessing it might be! People ought not to crowd the cities so, but should follow Horace Greeley's advice and "go West," and our republic, instead of itching to acquire more territory, ought to develop the resources of this one.

On Tuesday, the third of April, at a quarter-past 4 p.m., we were at Buena Vista, a lovely village in a valley with snow-capped mountains around it, like a row of stately sentinels. Gold mines hav recently been discovered here in the valley of the Arkansas, which river we strike between this place and Leadville.

A man on the train built the first house in the valley here twenty-seven years ago. There were no railroads then in this region, and the lumber for the little house which he pointed out cost $300 for the hauling to this place. Most of the railroads hereabouts hav been built since 1880. This gentleman lived there two years, and then left on account of difficulty in getting out gold from the mines. On the other side of the road, in 1860, were rich placer mines. He lived there, and with eleven other men took out $600 worth of gold per day. The earth for several acres shows evidence of having been worked for gold in other days, but is now washed out, if that term is correct, and gold is not found there any longer. Gold may be found sometimes a foot below the surface, and sometimes 400 or 500 feet, or more, below.

This gentleman, who explained many things that were strange to me, was Mr. Abner Brown, and he it was who taught the first public school in Denver in 1860. Mrs. Brown, also, had been a teacher in the early days of Denver.

The mountains are very deceiving in appearance. Although seeming only a short distance away, they may be fifteen or twenty miles distant. A man thought he would walk from Denver to the little town of Golden. He fancied it about two or three miles off. After walking six or seven miles, he came to a creek, and, pulling off his clothes, prepared to swim. A farmer remonstrated, and told him that it was only a small creek. "Ah," said the stranger, "you can't fool me. I thought it only a couple of miles or so to Golden, and I hav been told it is fifteen miles instead, and this creek may be a wide river, you know, and I'm going to swim."

Nearing Leadville, the snow was quite down to the railroad track.

Leadville is not a pretty city to approach. It appears dull and gloomy. It first came into notice in 1859, and was known as "California Gulch," and between that year and 1864 $5,000,000 in gold dust, it is believed, was washed out of the earth in this locality. In 1876 it became the great "Carbonate Camp," carbonate beds of silver having been discovered, and the place again became popular. It has now a population of 30,000, and its elevation is 10,200 feet.

I was as near the orthodox heaven as perhaps I shall ever be, and the altitude was anything but agreeable. My heart fluttered like a frightened bird, and my breath came in little gasps, much as one might breathe after running. I should think that a person affected by heart disease might hav serious trouble in trying to liv in Leadville. The Continental Divide is a few miles west of Leadville. We reach beautiful Glenwood Springs in the night.

We rode through a tunnel about two miles after leaving Leadville. This was put through by a tunnel company, and every passenger is charged twenty-five cents extra. He does not realize it, however, as it is assessed on the car fare. Leaving the Continental Divide we begin the downward grade, going toward the Pacific, running faster and the brakes are applied.

I had a long talk with a Mormon, or "Latter Day Saint." He informed me he was a polygamous child and was proud of the fact. His father had five wives, and he himself had thirty-seven brothers and sisters. Quite a family, to remember all their names. We had quite an interesting conversation, in which Mr. Sheehan, an assayer and Catholic, who is acquainted with Colonel Ingersoll, joined. Mr. Sheehan spoke in highest terms of praise of Colonel Ingersoll, as a high-minded gentleman, one of the finest he ever met.

I was in Colorado when I went to sleep on the third of April, but awoke on the morning of the fourth in Utah, and looked out upon long ranges of stony cliffs that appeared like forts, after which we passed some wonderful and majestic hights. Saw another coyote skipping along, unmindful of civilization and its devious ways. Our road was through a wonderful canon, and through Castle Gate, a magnificent spectacle, with great natural pier on the right. For many, many miles we rode through mountain scenery, beautiful and inspiring, all sizes, shapes, and forms, rough, smooth and jagged were the hights. And, now and then we passed a little log house, occupied by a miner, who some day may be a millionaire.

We reached Salt Lake City in the afternoon, and the train stopped long enough for a drive around town. The city is in a delightful situation, in which are lovely homes, fertil fields, and luxuriant gardens, shady streets, and in each one, as in Colorado Springs, are two swiftly flowing streams of purest mountain water. The city is at the foot of the Wahsatch mountains, in which it is said there are rich silver mines.

I saw the houses that much-married Brigham Young had built for his numerous wives, namely, the "Bee-hive," the "Lion," and "Gardo House." The Tabernacle is a queer-looking turtle-shaped building, in which are seats for 8,000 persons, but it is capable of holding eleven thousand. It is 233 feet long, 133 feet wide, and 79 feet high. Its acoustic properties are wonderful, a pin dropped on the floor being easily heard at any part of the building, and also a whisper was heard just as readily. A visit was made to the grave of the founder of this beautiful city, by passing through Eagle Gate, an arch through the old mud wall, which once inclosed Brigham's private property. This grave is inclosed by an iron railing, and no stone marks the spot. Several of his wives repose near his grave, and there is space left for his other wives.

This strange "saint" was the father of fifty-six children, and when he died, left seventeen wives, sixteen sons, and twenty-eight daughters to lament his loss. In many respects he was a remarkable man, but how he managed to liv harmoniously, or, in fact, at all, with such a number of wives, when too many can barely get along with one wife, is a marvel and a mystery. We drove past the house of his favorit wife, Amelia, a very hadsome edifice, indeed. Amelia is said to be a cousin of the wife of Grover Cleveland.

The Temple, to which vistors are not admitted, is built of granit from Cottonwood Canon. It is a handsome structure, with walls one hundred feet high, and cost $4,000,000.

There are glimpses and broad views of that mysterious body of water known as the Great Salt Lake, for many miles after leaving Salt Lake City. This wonderful American Dead Sea covers three thousand square miles, and is ninety-three miles long by forty-three miles wide. It is higher than the top of the Alleghany mountains, being more than 4,200 feet above the sea level. It is sixty feet deep on an average, and has nearly fourteen per cent of solids, nearly ten per cent more than the Atlantic ocean. The mountains around the great basin are exceedingly picturesque and attractiv, and for miles the views are of a most lovely and bewitching character.

I went to sleep early, and was awakened by the voice of a beggar, who, while the train stopped at a small place, had, watching the porter's absence, crept into the sleeping car. He wanted something to eat, and said he was riding on the trucks, but he quickly disappeared when the porter came in sight. The porter said it was not true that he was riding on the trucks, though some do ride that way. One man rode on the trucks for fifteen years. The porter felt uneasy, and said the beggar was undoubtedly on the train for plunder, and he did not feel right until he had looked everywhere, and was certain the man was not secreted anywhere in the cars.

Correspondence.

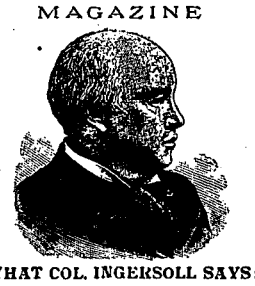
WAMIC, OR., Feb. 6, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would attempt to write to the Corner. I hav been thinking about it for a long time. I am going to school now. I study reading, writing, spelling, geography, language, arithmetic and history. I hav one brother and one sister. I am twelve years of age. I hav two cats and one dog. The dog's name is Cap and the two cats' names are Toudles and Dude.

I will close for this time.

Yours truly, PAINE DRIVER.

[Paine is a bright boy.—ED. C. C.]



GORE BAY, ONT., May 1, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON AND READERS OF THE CORNER: I now write my fourth letter to the Corner. I hav a severe cold, so I did not go to school to-day. The ice is breaking up, and will soon be gone. If the Cornerites will take their geographies, turning to the map of Ontario, they will see "The Grand Manitoulen Island." At the north of that great island they will see the North Channel, and then on the mainland are the Spanish mills. The train does not come to Gore Bay, but to Spanish Mills, and all the mails hav to be taken across the channel to these. In the winter, when the channel is frozen over, dogs pull the mail over on a large sleigh, and sometimes people too. But when the ice is breaking up in the spring, a tug-boat has to plow its way through the ice to Spanish river. This is the day the boat starts, and now, as I write, I can hear it puffing and tooting. Every month we hav examinations on different subjects in our school, to see how we stand. The last examination, the subject was Composition. For my subjec I choose "Journals and Newspapers." In my composition I praised the journals TRUTH SEEKER and Secular Thought very highly. The other pupils wrote a lot about several religious papers, and got ninety-five marks (total, one hundred), while I got only fifty-eight. The teacher is a Methodist crank, so that accounts for it. Papa says that he thinks it would take a professor to make ninety-five marks out of one hundred. Our teacher said that skeptical men hav never made any mark (at literature) in the world yet. I hav named my doll Nana Wright Irene Mazena. A long name, is it not? But the doll is strong, and I think she will liv under it. I am learning to dance, and hav been to two balls this spring. Do you think it is wrong to dance? I do not, if in good company. I think I will close my letter now. Hoping you will enjoy your trip, I am, you Freethinker friend,

GRACE BRAZENN.

[Your teacher cannot be posted in literature or science, or she would know better than to make such a remark. I do not think it wrong to dance. Certainly not. It is an innocent and agreeable amusement, but it must not be indulged in to excess.—ED. C. C.]

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knee"

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt beveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

Just Out.—25 Cents.—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about

1300 MINISTERS HAVE BEEN GUILTY

of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF A GREAT BOOK.

With the eighth edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man," the cost of production has been lessened so that we can reduce the price from $1.75 to $1.00.

The book has had a phenomenal sale for so heretical a work, second only to Helen Gardener's Men, Women, and Gods," and we give our readers the pecuniary benefit of it. The

"MARTYRDOM OF MAN"

is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how War and Religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for Liberty, and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. The chapters are:

WAR. Egypt, Western Asia, the Persians, the Greeks, the Macedonians, Alexandria, the Phenicians, Carthage and Rome, Roman Africa, the Arabs.

RELIGION. The Natural History of Religion, the Israelites, the Jews, the Prophets, Character of Jesus, the Christians, Arabia, Mecca, Character of Mohammed, Description of Africa, the Mohammedans in Central Africa.

LIBERTY. Ancient Europe, Invasion of the Germans, the Castle, the Town, the Church, Venice, Arab Spain, the Portuguese, Discoverers, the Slave Trade, Abolition in Europe, Abolition in America. Materials of Human History.

INTELLECT. Animal Period of the Earth, Origin of Man, and Early History, Summary of Universal History, The Future of the Human Race, The Religion of Reason and Love.

Price reduced from $1.75 to $1.00. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

APHORISMS FROM THE WRITINGS OF HERBERT SPENCER. Selected and Arranged by Julia Raymond Gingell. Portrait. New York: D. Appleton & Company. Cloth. Price, $1.25.

About four years ago the compiler of this interesting and useful volume commenced the selection for her own satisfaction of short passages from the writings of Mr. Spencer. Subsequently she arranged these in the form of a calendar and presented a written copy to the friend, Mr. W. R. Hughes, F. L. S., who had brought the Synthetic Philosophy to her notice. Mr. Hughes wrote to Mr. Spencer, informing him of the existence of the calendar and asking if he would like to hav a copy. An affirmativ answer being received the duplicate was prepared. From this germ developed the book before us. Of the difficulty attending the preparation of a work of this kind the compiler says: "In all works there is danger that, in eliminating small portions from the context, the line of thought being broken, the clearness will either be lost or a wrong impression of the author's meaning conveyed; but in the case of the Synthetic Philosophy the danger is even greater, for every paragraph is a part of a great whole, and though many passages are fine when standing alone, all gain increased significance and beauty when considered in relation to the rest. My earnest hope, therefore, is that these quotations may awake sufficient interest in those who are unacquainted with Mr. Spencer's works, to induce them to read for themselvs."

We earnestly concur in this hope, for the writings of modern philosophers are shamefully and suicidally neglected by Americans, and "Aphorisms" are well calculated to whet the appetite for many substantial meals at Herbert Spencer's generous board. Mrs. Gingell says: "The Aphorisms hav been selected from the latest editions of the works, and I hav tried to make them illustrate, as fully as possible, the wide range taken by this unique philosophy, which not only soars to the sublimest hights, but takes note of the, apparently, most trivial matters, showing that nothing is too insignificant to form a more or less important factor in the great work of evolution."

The 166 pages of "Aphorisms" are apportioned among eleven chapters, the first of which is "Education" and its motto-definition is, "Taken in its widest sense, culture means preparation for complete living. · · · Acquisition of fitness for carrying on the business of life is primarily a duty to self, and secondarily a duty to others."

"Evolution" is defined as being "an integration of matter and concomitant dissipation of motion; during which the matter passes from an indefinit, incoherent homogeneity to a definit, coherent heterogeneity; and during which the retained motion undergoes a parallel transformation."

Of Science, the subject of the third chapter, we are given this definition, by comparison: "Knowledge of the lowest kind is un-unified knowledge; Science is partially-unified knowledge; philosophy is completely-unified knowledge."

Of the spirit in which we should approach the study of Sociology, and how that spirit is evolved, this is said: "A fit habit of thought, then, is all-important in the study of Sociology, and a fit habit of thought can be acquired only by study of the sciences at large. For Sociology is a science in which the phenomena of all other sciences are included."

That politics are almost hopeless of purification this would seem to show: "As originating from ultimate laws of right conduct, beneficence and veracity must go together, and political beneficence will be shown by insisting on political veracity."

Justice is better secured by prevention than by cure. "Intelligible laws and a good judicial system would advantage every one, not simply by righting him when wronged, but by preventing him from being wronged." But with thousands of new statutes every year, how can we hope to ever hav either intelligible laws or equal justice?

In the arrangement of this book "Justice" precedes "Liberty," but Spencer holds that it can only follow—a fact overlooked by most latter-day "reformers." In "The Study of Sociology," Mr. Spencer observes: "All other requisits are unimportant compared with this primary requisit, that each shall so liv as neither to burden his fellows nor injure his fellows." That is, translated into the vernacular, he shall mind his own business and hoe his own row.

The would-be truthful man has a hard task, for, as Spencer says, "there are lies told by actions as well as by words, and ethics giv no more countenance to the one than to the other."

"If we consider how much both our general welfare and our immediate pleasures depend on sympathy, we should recognize the importance of whatever makes this sympathy greater."

It is evident that Mr. Spencer would not agree with those religious gentlemen who glorify suffering as the great purifier, for he writes: "That happiness is the supreme end is beyond question true, for this is the concomitant of that highest life which every theory of moral guidance has distinctly or vaguely in view."

Compulsory moralists will find food for cleansing thought in this sentence: "Moral suasion is very admirable; good for us—good, indeed, for all who can be induced to use it."

We are very glad that Mrs. Gingell has prepared "Aphorisms" and had the book printed. There is in it much of the most healthful, invigorating reading.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN: WAS HE A CHRISTIAN? The Truth Seeker Company has issued a very valuable book under the above title. It is especially valuable, because the unscrupulous orthodox apologists so invariably claim the adherence and the weight of the name of every great man who has not distinctly, openly, and unmistakably denounced their barbarous faith, that many persons are readily misled by their vigorous assertions. One of the most noted controversies of the century has been waged over the question of the religious opinions of Lincoln. Very soon after his funeral, Dr. Holland put forward the claim that he was a Christian. The claim was promptly refuted; but, like many other orthodox calumnies, it is continually being repeated by unscrupulous Christians.

For several years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material on this subject, and his book presents us with an array of testimony which should finally dispose of the question. Reviewing and refuting the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, Mr. Remsburg arrays a phalanx of over a hundred in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian, including his wife and other relativs, his three law partners, his private secretaries, members of his cabinet, his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

It seems strange that the Christian body-snatchers should claim as an adherent a man whose whole life was a practical protest against their crude theology, and who, apart from one or two conventional expressions, simply, in his whole public life, ignored their entire system. Can a man be a Christian without being a Presbyterian, or a Catholic, or a Salvationist? If Lincoln was a Christian, then we may all of us expect to see Thomas Paine plucking harp-strings at the foot of the great white throne.

Mr. Remsburg has performed a much-needed work— a great work for Freethought—in compiling this book, and we trust he will be suitably rewarded by an immense sale of it. Its 336 pages are handsomely printed and very neatly bound in cloth at $1; in paper at 50 cents. —Secular Thought.

THE GIANT DELUSION. A paper read before the International Freethought Congress at Chicago, October 5, 1893. By Otto Wettstein.

Intensely anti-Spiritualistic; very strong as against the ordinary church arguments for immortality; but from the standpoint of Spiritualism the author is a man fighting in the dark, or completely blindfolded. Price 10 cents.—Progressive Thinker.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the search so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Socia Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight. Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered b men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without mu h thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman,

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. the book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for is bold, honest sayings.—E. K. Washburn.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union, Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

Miss Wixon has taken as her mottoes in writing this beautiful book of 292 pages—which she has dedicated to the memory of her father and mother—these sentences from the works of a great synthetic philosopher and a gifted liberal minister:

As with the physical, so with the ethical. A belief, as yet fitful and partial, is beginning to spread amongst men, that here, also, there is an indissoluble bond between cause and consequence, an inexorable destiny, a law which altereth not.—Herbert Spencer.

Living is an Art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the Arts.—Thomas Starr King.

The Creation of God.

By DR. JACOB HARTMANN.

An explanation of the origin of the God Idea, and the mental processes that led to the formation of idols and the worship of them. From the time of Terah's apostasy, Abraham's reformation and his banishment for heresy and blasphemy against the Chaldean idols, to Christ's coming, the principal characters are analyzed and shown to be human, by thought and deed. It is made plain that the peculiar phraseology, cant sayings, subterfuges, miracles, wonder-workings, and supernatural padding are the proper offspring of the then existing barbarism, ignorance, and superstition, constituting the peculiar politics of the day.

Gems of Thought.

FINAL and contingent profit sharing is all right, provided all the parties interested are ready to join each other in case a little loss-sharing becomes necessary.—Galveston News.

WE look before and after,
And pine for what is not;
Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;
Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought. —Shelley.

How to liv?—That is the essential question for us. Not how to liv in the mere material sense only, but in the widest sense. The general problem which comprehends every special problem is—the right ruling of conduct in all directions under all circumstances.—Herbert Spencer.

OF course, the reference here is to strictly private conduct; that is, to conduct which directly concerns the individual agent alone. Human laws exist only to prevent one from injuring another, or others; that is, from violating individual rights or public order. The law has no right to enslave a man; and it does make a slave of that man whose free will is coerced in matters directly concerning himself alone.—Moncure D. Conway.

A MERE reporter, if he has done his work honestly, has done his duty; but an author, who is more than a reporter, has very responsible duties. He must hav a genuin interest in his work. My advice to young would-be journalists is to know something really. Be the slaves of some great idea, or you will be the slaves of a newspaper. Every man ought to believe that truth is attainable, and should endeavor to attain it. A writer should be philosophic in spirit, and should look at the events of the day from a higher point of view than from that of personal feeling or of party politics. Then, even in political journalism, he will be discharging one of the most important functions of life.—Leslie Stephen.

WE believe in free thought, free speech, and free press. We hold that the exercise of individual judgment in all things is not only the privilege but the duty of every one, and the conscientious discharge of this duty is necessary to the full realization of the responsibilities of the citizen, the only manner in which he can attain the full stature of a freeman. We believe in the absolute separation of religious questions from the administration of civil government. Therefore, we are opposed to all organizations having for their object the political proscription of anyone because of his religious belief. Such societies are not American, and in pretending to be they sail under false colors.—San Francisco Star.

LAZARUS is a social evil, and as such looks out from his lair, often with much mischief in an evil eye, only because, humanly speaking, all legislation, with any practical bearing whatsover upon his real state and condition of most dangerous moral deformity, does not provide for flooding his lair with light. Some of those who are accounted leaders, both in church and state, are in truth grievous offenders against Lazarus. They are, indeed, the hope, not of his life, but of his lair. They hav made large profits out of his slums, and then, with shabby meanness, call him an unprofitable servant. The rookeries and slums of England hav yielded, and still continue to yield, immense returns to some legislators, and also, it is grievous to say, to some ecclesiastics; and in the sordid spirit in which such pernicious legislation has been conceived the oppressor has been highly regarded, and the oppressed no less pharisaically despised.—Rev. Arthur Robins.

THE objects of a republican state are purely civil and secular, relating to the present, not to a future life; to the duties which citizens owe to each other, not to those which they owe to the invisible God. It knows men neither as Christians, Mohammedans, nor Jews, neither as Catholics, Protestants, nor Skeptics, Theists nor Atheists, Orthodox nor Liberals, but simply and solely as citizens, extending equal protection to all. The Hindu may erect his temple, the Mohammedan his mosque, the Buddhist his shrine, the Chinaman his josshouse, and the Jew his synagog, just as freely as the Christian may build his cathedral, church, or chapel; and the protection of the government is extended equally to all the various forms of worship, so far as they do not endanger the public peace. Still further, the Infidel, the Atheist, or the Freethinker, may erect his hall wherever he lists, and the meetings held therein will be under the same protection as the assemblies for the worship of God. Such is the nature, the hight and depth, the length and breadth, of that liberty which is the boast of this republic, and which is not its shame, but its glory.—Oliver Johnson, in Atlantic Monthly.

"THE CHURCH TRIUMPHANT!"

Dr. Edward Bedloe is in town. That announcement made in Washington, Boston, New York, or San Francisco, always causes a pleasant ripple in the circles of good fellowship. The doctor was honored by a dinner at the Richelieu in Easter week, with Bemis as the host, and he rose to the occasion with a speech that is so brilliantly unique in its way that I am going to reproduce it. The toast was "To the Church," and this was the response:

"I never drink a toast without recalling the vast debt of gratitude we owe to the church of the middle ages. In the long-gone years the sybarites and good fellows of Greece and Rome quenched their thirst with rich, red wine. To them ale and beer and porter and stout were unknown terms; to them John Barleycorn was a perfect stranger; cognac and otard were sealed books, and the thousand and one liquors of to-day were unborn. Champagne, the idealization of all vinous beverages, had not come into existence. While, as for punches, cocktails, fizzes, smashes, sours, eggnog, Tom and Jerry, hot Scotch and Irish, the Greek and Latin tongues, despite the genius of Homer and Plato, Virgil and Cicero, were utterly unable to express or describe.

"Imagin, if you can, a dinner of to-day in which the sole alleviates of thirst were wine and honey, wine and water, wine and more water. When the inspired writer said: 'Look not upon the wine when it is red,' he was looking forward 2,000 years to our own time, when there are other and better beverages. Yet such was the condition which confronted Lucullus, Apicus, and other great bon vivants of antiquity. A small boy could giv a better dinner to-day, so far as the wine-card is concerned, than could all the Cæsars of the West and the kings and emperors of the East. What made the change? What great power so wrought upon nature as to giv us the wealth of enjoyment to-day? It was the church—the noble abbots and humble monks, who applied intellect to the world around them, and brought forth results which will never die.

"They took the culture of the vine from pagan Rome, and they converted it into a new art and science. They dignified their products by giving to them religious terms and titles. The golden juice of the grape in the Vesuvian vintage became the Lachryma Christi, or tears of Christ; the tawny pressings of the Andalusian clusters became known in lore as Sancta Trinidad, or the holy Trinity. In France two superior vintages were born under the parentage of the church, and even at the present day bear testimony in their names of White and Red Hermitage to their origin. From that wonderful race, the Saracens, the Mediæval church learned the art of distilling it to all Europe. In the emerald vales of Ireland they produced the potheen; in the green glens of Scotland, the usquebaugh; in the sunny vinyards of France, the eau de vie; in the steril plains of Russia, the vodka; in the frozen north of Sweden and Norway, the Kornbrantvin.

"Nor was this enough! The Christian workers ransacked the far East for its daintiest perfumes, the West for its sweetest flavors. They extracted aroma from the peach and pear, the incense from the lemon and orange, the bloom of the almond and the savor of the cherry. They robbed the cinnamon tree of its bark and the nutmeg of its kernel. Then with these they made delightful liquors which hav glorified our tables for generations, and shall endure to the end of all time. The modest monks of La Trappe produced their masterpiece in Trappistine, the poor Carthusian friars flashed upon the world glorious green and gold chartreuse, and the princely order of St. Benedict, in the grand old abbey of Fecamp, invented Benedictine, the finest drink that ever moistened mortal lips.

"But why continue? Does it strengthen the argument to add that a Creole monk in Louisiana discovered 'Parfait Amour;' that a German pastor first dissolved gold in a dainty fluid and christened it 'Eau de Vie de Dantzig;' that a French friar taught us how to immortalize the orange in curacoa; how a provincial priest liquefied the cherry in 'Maraschino;' or how the Spanish ecclesiastic from the sugar cane gave us Santa Cruz, the rum of the holy cross? It is needless. But it is well that in our joyful libations we so should look back on the centuries with gratitude and affection to those humble but noble pillars of the church, whose labors hav done so much to lighten, brighten, and beautify the lives of all to-day."—Contributor of Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The signers are Sherman, Allison, Voorhees, Hoar, Aldrich, Hill, Murphy, Gorman, Platt, Brice, Carey, Frye, Davis, Cullom, and Lodge.

The Outlook (formerly Christian Union) says that the causes of the prevailing depression are unjust taxation and a vitiated currency; that taxation which is levied upon expenditure instead of upon property is always unjust taxation, and that gold monometallism, giving a standard of value which is steadily appreciating, produces a falling market, which necessarily checks production. It says the desideratum is a stable currency, a standard of value which will neither rise nor fall.

CONWAY'S EDITION
OF
THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

COLLECTED, EDITED, AND CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED

By MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY.

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," "Omitted Chapters of History Disclosed in the Life and Papers of Edmund Randolph," etc.

Four Volumes, Royal Octavo, Gilt Tops, Uniform with the Editor's "Life of Paine." Price per Volume, $2.50.

An edition of one hundred and fifty numbered copies bound in half leather, gilt tops, uniform with the limited editions of "The Writings of Washington," "The Writings of Jefferson," etc. Price, per volume, $4.

For the general reader the $2 edition of Paine's works is sufficient, as it contains all of his writings upon which his fame substantially rests. But for those who desire to go deeper into the subject of the man and polemic we can most unreservedly commend the "Life of Paine" by Mr Conway, and this edition of Paine's works edited by him It is the fullest that we are likely to have, and the student of history, and particularly the writer, should have it upon his shelves.

The work will consist of four volumes, and will be arranged chronologically. The cause of America, as Paine said, made him an author, and the first volume will cover the period of the American Revolution, beginning with the year 1774. It will therefore open with Paine's anti-slavery essay, and his philosophical or moral essays, while editing the Pennsylvania Magazine; these being followed by the great revolutionary, political, and controversial pamphlets which made such a profound impression on the country.

The second volume will consist mainly of the "Rights of Man," and pamphlets relating to English politics, but will also contain certain papers on French affairs.

The third and fourth volumes will consist mainly of Paine's religious writings, but will also contain some essays relating to American affairs, written in his last years. At the close will be given Paine's poems.

The first volume is now ready for delivery, and the others will follow soon. Orders for the whole set will be taken and filled as the volumes appear, or the volumes can be purchased separately. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnific nt Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

Feuerbach.		Lick.	Tcherny-chewsky.	Ingersoll.	Heinzen.	Petrofsky.	Matilda Joslyn Gage.
							Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age. Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E Macdonald,	Capt R. C. Adams,	Dr. E B Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,

T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B Waite,	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

Some More Official Christians.

Three of our official Christians, the grave and reverend Senators Hoar, Gorman, and Vest, donned clowns' caps and jingled their bells merrily in the Senate on May 2d. Mr. Hoar asked unanimous consent for consideration of Senate Bill 1620, relating to the suppression of the lottery traffic. After some debate over comparativly unimportant amendments, Mr. Vest said:

"The language of the amendment of the committee continues:

Shall contrive, propose, set up, or draw a lottery, so-called gift concert, or similar enterprise, offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, or assists in such contriving, proposing, setting up, or drawing in any place within the jurisdiction—

"As amended it reads 'exclusiv jurisdiction'— and subject to the laws of the United States, or who, from any place whatever, whether within or without such jurisdiction.

"Under that section, as I understand it, it will be a criminal offense at a church festival in the District of Columbia, for instance, to hav prizes."

Mr. Hoar here interposed with another verbal amendment, and then the Missourian continued:

"While I am in entire sympathy with the purposes of the bill to prohibit lotteries so far as the national jurisdiction extends, I do not think we ought to leave this clause in the bill, which would involve the idea to which I hav alluded, that at a festival for charitable purposes, where there is the drawing of a lottery, it shall come within the prohibitions of this statute. I hardly think that is according to the idea of the framers of the bill.

"MR. HOAR: I hav not myself been able to contrive a piece of legislation which will hit the gambler and steer clear of other people. I do not know but it may be done.

"MR. VEST: If the Senator will pardon me, is that the meaning of this bill?

"MR. HOAR: If we are going in all the territories and the District of Columbia to prohibit gambling, and to prohibit it by the usual and ordinary penal descriptions of penal legislation, I do not see how we can except church-members. They will contrive to hav their church fairs very delightful without gambling, I think. If the Senator has any language that will accomplish that object, I hav been unable to find it myself, and I hav never heard of any before. I suppose that in every state in the Union, without an exception, church fairs and church lotteries and gift enterprises and raffles at temperance meetings and such places are in fact illegal and punishable, but they go on. I do not suppose anybody can frame language which will not apply to them also, and I do not think we ought to."

It will be observed that while Mr. Vest wants the bill so framed as to exempt the churches from its operations, Mr. Hoar, less pious or more politic, wishes it to be general in its phraseology, a drag-net for all kinds of gamblers, trusting that the church small-fry will be kindly thrown back into the water by the officers charged with the enforcement of the law. He admits that in all states church lotteries are illegal but are not molested by the officials, and he opines that the same state of affairs will prevail under the congressional law. In other words, to save appearances, the law will seem to be directed against all forms of gambling, but the churches, it is tacitly understood, will not be prosecuted. Inasmuch as the churches are the activ workers for this law, they are to be understood, assuming that Senator Hoar "speaks by the card," as laying the wires for the passage of a law which they do not themselvs expect nor intend to obey. If this is not the very sublimity of assurance, what would you call it? And would not the enactment of such a law be religious legislation of the most cowardly, the most demoralizing kind? But let us return to the Senate chamber and listen to some more of the debate. Replying to Mr. Hoar, the Missouri Senator says:

"I hav simply to say that within the jurisdiction of the United States, as I remarked before, I am in favor of the most stringent legislation against lotteries, such as the Louisiana lottery and the Havana lottery. That is the worst species of gambling, because it affects those classes in the community which are less able to spend money in this way, and because it is more widespread and far reaching than any other form of this vice; but I can never find my consent to go even into a fort or an arsenal or the District of Columbia, where we hav exclusiv jurisdiction, and punish people who, for charitable purposes, raffle off articles at a festival or a fair.

"It seems to me that that is carrying the doctrin entirely too far. In the state of Missouri we hav the most stringent laws against lotteries, statutory and constitutional. We hav a provision in the constitution of Missouri which makes all sales or the giving away of lottery tickets within the state unlawful, and declares all contracts in regard to lottery tickets to be unlawful, and we hav a statute to the same effect, but the legislature of Missouri, as I remember—I hav not examined it lately—made an exception as to charitable institutions or assemblies. It has long been the custom for people to raise money at religious fairs in that way, and however much difference of opinion may exist as to the propriety and morality of the proceeding it is the custom throughout the country.

"MR. GRAY: Would it be germane to propose an amendment exempting church members from the operation of this bill?

"MR. VEST: I am obliged to the Senator for that suggestion. I am not legislating as to individuals, but legislating as to practices, and if any Senator thinks that that should be put upon the same footing with the Louisiana or the Havana lottery he is perfectly consistent in so voting, but I do not think so. As a matter of course, I do not propose to exempt any man because he is a member of a church or because he belongs to any society. The question is hardly worthy of the Senator from Delaware. He knows my opinion very well in regard to that sort of legislation.

"But as to applying this penal statute to what is regarded all through the country as an innocent, if not a justifiable practice in religious and charitable assemblies, that is a very different question, and I am not prepared to vote for any such statute."

Mr. Gray's question is a fine bit of sarcasm, and it seems to hav been a shaft which penetrated the brazen armor of Mr. Vest, who resorts to the transparent subterfuge that he does not wish to exempt any man from the operation of the law because he is a church member. Here is a proposed law against gambling; if churches are not to be subject to it, then church members, as such, acting for the churches, are exempted. The fact cannot be got around or tunneled under.

After some further talk Senator Gorman intervened and this colloquy ensued:

"Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] that this bill is too sweeping. I hav not the slightest objection to confining it to the lottery business, but to provide that the offering of prizes shall be a penal offense at innocent church fairs and other little enterprises of that sort, it seems to me, is going beyond what we ought to attempt.

As I understand the law now, as sustained by the decision of the Supreme Court, lottery tickets pure and simple are excluded from the mails. There is no question as to that. I think every provision that can be made should be made to reach the great Louisiana Lottery and other enterprises of that sort, but I understand they are absolutely excluded from the mails to-day.

"MR. HOAR: Perhaps the Senator did not hear my statement. The law excludes from the mails to-day lottery tickets, and also requires postmasters to refuse to deliver registered letters to persons and corporations who advertise themselvs as engaged in the lottery business; but it does not extend to other letters; and this will only change the existing statute so as to cover other letters.

"MR. GORMAN: There will be no objection to extending it to other letters, but when you propose to extend it to all these little gift enterprises and fairs, I think it is going too far. If the bill were confined to letters other than those registered, there would be no objection to it.

"MR. HOAR: That part of it is not applicable to church fairs; it is applicable only to persons and corporations who advertise themselvs as engaged in the lottery business, as the Senator will find if he refers to the statute.

"MR. GORMAN: I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the statute to which he refers does not prohibit newspapers from publishing such advertisments, and if newspapers are not excluded from the mails if they do publish them? Under the provisions of the first section of the amendment, as I understand the bill, if a church desires to hold a fair where there are to be the usual drawings, they could not advertise in a newspaper.

"I trust that the Senator from Massachusetts will consent that the bill may go over until we may examin it further.

"MR. HOAR: I tried to consult with every Senator whom I could get to take an interest in the bill. I know the great interest which my honorable friend from Maryland takes in church fairs, and of course I do not wish to do anything which he thinks would affect that portion of his constituents who are interested in church fairs. All these laws hav a practical administration.

"No officer of the law ever does interfere with these little church fairs. Whether they should or should not is a question we might discuss, but we cannot make a law which will prohibit the evils of gambling and put in it a provision that church members and amiable people may gamble a little for pious purposes. It is not practicable; it ought not to be done, and, if done, it would make infinit mischief in our legislation.

"I do not believe there is a state in the Union in which such laws are not couched in general language which would prohibit what the Senator from Maryland speaks of; but practically nobody meddles with it. I suppose if the Senator from Maryland should come in here and move an amendment to exclude church fairs or to exclude lotteries for charitable purposes, when he got it written out he probably would not vote for it himself; I do not believe he would, but he knows better than I do about that. I think the best way is to do what the government has done, and what every state has done, so far as I am informed, make general laws prohibiting gambling."

The Maryland Senator speaks of "innocent church fairs." Innocent of what? What is this law intended to suppress? Gambling, of course. Then, if the church gambles, how can it be "innocent" in the eye of this law? Mr. Gorman evidently means that what is a crime in outsiders is all right when committed within the "sacred" precincts of the church. Further comment on this is not necessary. Now comes Mr. Hoar and tries to reassure the perturbed Marylander. He tells his friend that the part of the law which forbids the transmission of letters relating to lottery business will not hurt the churches, as it applies only to those concerns which advertise themselvs as engaged in that business. But Mr. Gorman is not to be deceived in that way; he knew all the time that this would shut out the newspapers which advertise church drawings, and there was where he was hurt, and he lets the Senate see his wounds, whereupon Mr. Hoar puts on some more of his they'll-never-enforce-the-law salve. He assures Mr. Gorman that "no officer of the law ever interferes with these little church fairs," but tries at the same time to impress upon the mind of his rather too candid fellow lawmaker the impracticability of openly exempting the churches. The Massachusetts man is shrewder but apparently a trifle less honest than the Marylander. He is clear-seeing enough to perceive that it would not do to put into the law "a provision that church members and amiable people may gamble a little for pious purposes," but he is perfectly willing that executiv officers shall universally connive at the violation of the statute by said church members and amiable people. By the way, we are pleased to see that Mr. Hoar differentiates these two classes of our citizens.

George Frisbie Hoar is quite well satisfied that Arthur Pugh Gorman would not, after he had himself written out an amendment excluding the churches from the operation of the law, vote for it when it came to the pinch. Presumably he thinks that Mr. Gorman would become a convert to the Yankee Senator's game of guile, by means of which the precious set of Senatorial Pecksniffs play fast and loose with the "moral sentiment" of the country.

Later on Mr. Gorman again takes the floor and proceeds to make this plea for gambling churches:

"Now, if there is the slightest defect in that law, if it does not cover ordinary letters and applies only to registered letters addressed to lottery companies, I can understand that such a defect ought to be cured. There can be no objections to that being done; but I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, Why should Congress go beyond legislation that deals with the vicious system that we hav tried to drive out of the country? Why should we undertake to include in legislation of this sort all the little enterprises that are carried on by churches, hospitals, and institutions of that kind? Let the Senator from Massachusetts take the District of Columbia, where we hav original jurisdiction. Our aid to charitable institutions in the District constitutes only about one-fourth of the cost of keeping up those magnificent hospitals and splendid institutions for the unfortunate in different relations of life.

"How are these institutions kept up? They hav followed in the District the old custom that existed by law in Maryland from the foundation of the government, of having their little fairs and offering prizes. They sell tickets and advertise in the newspapers that they will hold a fair at the private residence of Mr. So and So, or at the chapel, or at some hall in the city, and there these drawings take place as regularly as the year comes around. There is not one of these institutions, from the Little Sisters of the Poor up to the great Garfield Hospital, where two-thirds of the revenue does not come from these innocent drawings. To enact legislation prohibiting drawings of the character I hav described by churches, hospitals, etc., merely for the purpose of carrying out the view that has been enforced here recently, to drive out the lottery, it seems to me is most unfortunate.

"There is not an institution in Maryland, created prior to twenty years ago, that is not the creation of a system of this sort authorized by law. There is not one of them in that state or in the District of Columbia that is not maintained in that way. If you pass the bill in the way in which it is framed now, what is the result? The public treasury will be called upon for double the appropriations, and you not only therefore add to the burdens of the treasury, but you deprive these people of an innocent right, for no man can compare the drawing in one of these fairs and the selling of tickets to the drawings of those lotteries whose agents go in the byways and alleys and on the public places and take from poor people their hard earnings. That is a matter that can be stamped out and ought to be stamped out.

"The law to-day is sufficient to do it. The law is enforced to-day. No man can sell lottery tickets in Washington without going to jail. I know to my certain knowledge that the law here has been enforced rigidly, and so let it go on.

"Mr. President, there comes no demand for such legislation as that proposed in the pending bill. There is no necessity for it. If the Senator from Massachusetts and the Committee on the Judiciary think it necessary that there should be any further amendment to the law already upon the statute book, which relates alone to these lottery companies, let the committee report such a bill and hav it considered.

"Mr. President, I for one cannot consent to extend the anti-lottery legislation so far as to exclude all the innocent and proper enterprises which I hav attempted to describe."

Both Mr. Gorman and Mr. Hoar are anxious to destroy the "vicious system" of gambling which is not made conventional by the cloak of religion, but each is ready to save, one in one way and the other in another, the gambling schemes of the pious people. They are terribly afraid that the youth of the country are going to be demoralized by the Louisiana and Havana lotteries, and that the poor will be robbed by those concerns, but they do not appear to take into consideration the fact that in the churches and benevolent societies millions of people of both sexes get their first taste of games of chance. If the state should suppress gambling there is no reason whatever why any exceptions should be made to the rule. All just laws are applicable to every class and are equal and uniform. If the citizen must hav a national guardian to shield him from the seductions of the unsanctified lottery he needs that guardian just as much to keep his feet from straying into the by and tangling paths of the sanctified lottery. And ten persons are "tempted" by the latter where one is by the former. Mr. Gorman says that "no man can compare the drawing in one of these fairs and the selling of tickets to the drawings of those lotteries where agents go in the byways and alleys and in the public places and take from the poor people their hard earnings." This is nonsense. Anyone at all acquainted with the methods pursued by the male and female cappers for church games knows how people are bullied and cajoled into risking their "hard earnings." It will not do; church lotteries hav no better standing than other devices for getting a good deal for a little.

Mr. Hoar followed Mr. Gorman, saying, in part:

"What the Senator from Maryland says in regard to the history of lotteries in this country is true. After the Revolutionary war for a good while the colleges in this country were aided by lotteries. I know Harvard College in my own state had repeated lotteries, as had hospitals and humane enterprises also. But our people hav determined substantially in all the states in the Union that that ought not to be done, that it fosters a spirit of gambling, the idea of getting something that you do not pay for or do not work for, which is the bane of all human society wherever it prevails, and they hav crushed them out. There is not a state in the Union that would now hav its hospitals or its colleges or its universities supported by gambling; and why that should not apply to the District of Columbia I do not see. I do not think these little gift enterprises are in the least essential to anything, unless they are to make money by gambling. The churches and hospitals and other similar institutions can substitute some other form of amusement or contribution for them in all the places where they prevail.

"So far as they are a serious method of making money does the Senator from Maryland, at this time, in the close of the nineteenth century, think the government hospittals in the district of Columbia ought to get two-thirds of their support by gambling and by selling lottery tickets, out of which they make money, and by which they poison the minds of the youth and of the persons who take part with them? Certainly the Senator from Maryland does not mean to be so understood. . . .

"So the bill prohibits bringing in lottery tickets or lottery advertisments from outside the country or carrying them from state to state. To that the Senator does not object.

"The third thing that it does is to prohibit gambling in the exclusiv jurisdiction of the United States, namely, in the forts, arsenals, and so on, and in the District of Columbia. That the general law does, which applies to all lotteries. If this be impolitic substantially all the lottery legislation of the country is impolitic. If this be unjust or badly written in language all the lottery legislation of the country is liable to that objection.

"Now, the Senator from Maryland thinks we should put into the bill, in order that a deacon at a church fair may not get into trouble if he has a raffle, something which not in terms, but in substance, will except that class of persons. I do not think it is possible.

"If it were possible I do not think it is wise. I think they will go on just as they go on in the state of Maryland, or the state of Masaachusetts, or the state of Missouri, without being meddled with. But if it is necessary for the sake of the great good of suppressing this most dangerous and destructiv species of gambling to break it up in little church fairs, I think it ought to be done. I do not think it is.

"In regard to the serious part of the Senator's speech, in which he says a great revenue comes to these people from gambling operations and that the government would hav to pay their expenses if they are cut off from such operations, I say they ought to be cut off from them, and I shall vote against my honorable friend when that is the issue."

This is a wretched jumble of moral inconsistencies, a politico-religious beating of the devil around the stump. In one breath Mr. Hoar protests against poisoning the minds of the youth by means of these church and hospital lotteries and in the next he declares that they will go on just the same, spite of the law. If it is necessary, he says, to suppress the church fairs, in order to break up the regular lotteries, he is willing that the former shall be sacrificed, but he does not think that such an extremely impartial measure will be required. While he wants these institutions in the District of Columbia which get two-thirds of their revenues by gambling to be cut off from that source of supply, he has said repeatedly that they will not be, judging the future by the past.

What a spectacle! Here are three of the most conspicuous of the Senators of the United States, two of them asking that church officers be directly exempted from the operation of a law which they clamorously demand shall be strengthened and vigorously enforced against officials of other lotteries, and the other Senator assuring the first two that while such direct exemption is not "practicable," the executiv officers of government will indirectly grant this exemption by failure to prosecute religious offenders! What next? Church property is exempt from taxation, churchmen appropriate to the use of the priest one-seventh of our time, the Bible is forced into the public schools, the religious bodies control the education of the Indians, the tax-payers foot the bills for public prayers, etc., and now we are told that church members should be permitted to violate laws which they are eager to enforce against everybody else. This government of ours is fast becoming a government of the church, by the church, for the church.

The PAINE MEMORIAL NUMBER will bear the date of June 2d instead of May 26th, as incorrectly announced last week. Among the other good things which it will contain, in addition to those previously enumerated, will be a poem written for the occasion by Geo. E. Macdonald. This later date givs you one more week in which to get in your orders for extra copies. Be sure to write in time so that we can hav a sufficient number printed to supply all demands. It will be an issue worthy the subject and satisfactory to the reader.

General Matthew M. Trumbull.

Freethought and social reform hav just lost one of their most polished, able, and lovable literary champions. General M. M. Trumbull died in Chicago on the 11th inst., aged sixty-eight years. He was born in London, and came to America forty-seven years ago. When he arrived in Canada he went to work on the railroad with pick, shovel, and wheelbarrow, and he later followed the same occupation in Massachusetts. He also taught school in Canada and in the states. He served in the Mexican war, was later obliged to leave Virginia because of his views antagonistic to slavery, and finally settled down in Iowa. In that state he worked in a brick-yard and studied law. Admitted to the bar, he soon had a good practice and was elected prosecuting attorney, against his protest, however, and he refused to qualify. Shortly after, in 1857, he was elected to the legislature. He served with distinction in the Civil War, entering the service in the Third Iowa Volunteers, and subsequently commanding the Ninth Iowa cavalry. For bravery in the field he was made brigadier-general. At the close of the civil conflict he was elected district attorney in Iowa, and when Grant entered upon the presidency he appointed General Trumbull Collector of Internal Revenue, which office he held during the whole of President Grant's administration.

Some twelve or fifteen years ago he removed to Chicago and entered upon a distinctivly literary career. Here he acquitted himself well and did humanity excellent service. Under the department head of "The Pulpit" he wrote for the Radical Review spicy, keen, and ably critical synopses and reviews of the sermons of Chicago clergymen. His most pretentious work, "History of the Free Trade Struggle in England," has had a good sale and is now an authority in some institutions of learning. His splendid legal ability was exerted in behalf of the Chicago labor agitators who were hanged, and later of their comrades who were imprisoned, his "Trial of the Judgment" being an exhaustiv analysis of the arguments and methods of the prosecution and of Judge Gary. Last year he wrote and had published in the Arena an answer to Judge Gary's retrospectiv view of the famous trial. Gary's article appeared in the Century, but the reply of General Trumbull did not receive a like hospitality.

A regular contributor to the Open Court, the Monist, and other periodicals, General Trumbull has written some of the brightest things in the literature of rational, common sense radicalism. The book by "Wheelbarrow," "Articles and Discussions on the Labor Question," appeared first as contributions in Chicago papers.

A Republican in politics, at least until very recently, General Trumbull was yet an unqualified free-trader and one of the most incisiv, outspoken critics of the pension abuses of the last decades. He has also written some very readable and trenchant articles on the United States Senate.

Personally, Matthew M. Trumbull was one of the most agreeable, sociable, and kindly men we hav ever known. He was a good citizen in the best sense of that much abused term, an honest man, and a patriot without being a jingo. He was a thinker and a worker. He lived without and beyond the creeds and was a co-laborer of whom all Freethinkers in all lands may well be proud.

The Letter-Writing Corps.

Owing to an oversight no target for the Freethought Letter-Writing Corps was announced in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 12th. Two are given herewith, and each member of the corps can write two letters, which will even matters up to date. The first target is the House Committee on Education, which has in its keeping the Kyle-Johnson National Sunday rest bill. This committee is composed of the following members: B. A. Enloe, Tennessee (chairman); B. F. Grady, North Carolina; A. J. Pearson, Ohio; J. L. McLaurin, South Carolina; Marshall Arnold, Missouri; J. S. Williams, Mississippi; J. F. Stallings, Alabama; J. M. Wever, New York; H. F. Thomas, Michigan; H. C. Van Vooris, Ohio; G. W. Murray, South Carolina; S. W. McCall, Massachusetts. The second target is the House Committee on the District of Columbia, to which has been referred the Gallinger-Morse bill for protection of rest and worship in the District of Columbia. The members of this committee are: John T. Heard, Missouri (chairman); J. D. Richardson, Tennessee; Harry Welles Rusk, Maryland; J. E. Cobb, Alabama; E. E. Meredith, Virginia; C. A. Cadmus, New Jersey; J. Abbott, Texas; G. W. Cooper, Indiana; C. M. Cooper, Florida; A. C. Harmer, Pennsylvania; P. S. Post, Illinois; William Cogswell, Massachusetts; J. J. Belden, New York; J. W. Babcock, Wisconsin.

Next week we will giv you another official target, but the issue will be other than the Sunday question. There is not likely to be any scarcity of targets; we hav several in mind now, and no doubt more will be discovered each week.

Mr. C. Putnam, of Gibbon, Nebraska, reports that he has written to the target previously designated, and he makes the following suggestion and nomination:

"Would it not be well to hav a full set of officers scattered over the states who could report local occurrences to the captain for his consideration and disposal? I nominate J. D. Shaw, of Waco, Tex., for first lieutenant."

There is nothing objectionable in this plan, we are sure, although we hope that volunteers in every part of the country will furnish us with all information attainable. Mr. Shaw is a good worker, and we hav no doubt that he will do all that he can, whether as officer or "private," as Mr. Putnam modestly designates himself.

The Oakland Times pithily and wittily says that the arrest of C. C. Moore for blasphemy "is intended to dull the edge of his criticism of the Christian religion." But the performance does not appear to sharpen the arguments of Moore's opponents. Evidently the rule is a poor one, for it does not "work both ways."

The Independent would not be surprised to find a "blasphemous" picture in THE TRUTH SEEKER, but is shocked that such a picture, as it looks at it, should get into the Voice. To this the latter paper retorts that the Independent has been affected with "moral strabismus" for years and it pointedly intimates that its big neighbor is bearing false witness. Tut, tut, good pious gentlemen, don't you know that Christian brethren should dwell together in peace, and that "a soft answer turneth away wrath"?

Intelligent public opinion in England is becoming more and more outspoken on the side of G. W. Foote and against Hugh Price Hughes in the "Converted Shoemaker" affair. "Dodo," a highly esteemed writer in Reynolds's Newspaper, says that "Mr. Hughes stands before the public fully refuted." The London Echo remarks that Mr. Foote has "proved to a demonstration" that the Shoemaker story was "three parts fiction to one part fact." We regret that Mr. Foote has been compelled to cancel his lecturing engagements and lay off for a few weeks at the seashore. He is not really sick, but his physician counsels him to take a rest in time. This is well; Freethought cannot afford to lose the editor of the Freethinker. May full strength soon again be his.

Some months since a woman lost her life and other lives were put in jeopardy by the reckless antics of a band of students at Cornell. Pious President Schuman of that college in his address at the annual dinner of the alumni spoke of the affair "as a disaster, a sad accident, as purely an accident as God ever permitted to occur." It is well that President Schuman does not seek to relieve God of his responsibility for the crime, for if there is such an omniscient and omnipotent being he did permit the students to kill the woman; yes, not only did he permit the act to be done but he designed that it should be done, else the woman would not hav been injured. But when Mr. Schuman talks of that which God "permits" as an "accident" he talks nonsense. As a matter of fact, the crime was caused by the wholly reprehensible and excuseless rowdyism of the students.

God is in another arson scrape. Anyway, that is what Talmage says, but we admit that God, considering the character of the testimony, is entitled to the benefit of a doubt. Talmage declares that the fact that the Tabernacle did not burn until after the immense congregation was dismissed is proof that God's mercy is great. But where was that being with his wonderful stock of mercy when the thousands of helpless worshipers perished in the fire which consumed the cathedral in Santiago? And if God could postpone the Tabernacle fire for a few hours could he not hav prevented it altogether? Why has he destroyed three of Talmage's churches? It begins to look as though he has more sense than those who build the Tabernacles, for certainly people who can listen to Talmage Sunday after Sunday must be peculiarly made, mentally.

Colonel Ingersoll lectured at South Norwalk, Connecticut, Friday evening, May 11th. The Freethinkers of Northport, L. I., were invited by D. K. Cole to use his steamer Mystery to go over and take in the treat. A fog came up in the evening, and the captain, after fruitlessly trying to get out of the tortuous So. Norwalk harbor, put back and lay to until five o'clock in the morning. Starting again, it was not long before the fog belied its promis to lift and settled down thicker than ever. The boat forged ahead very slowly, but, cautious as was the captain, the Mystery was soon fast in the sand at Eaton's Neck, and the receding tide left her high and dry on the beach. Nobody was injured and the boat's damages were very slight. Now the pious folks are shaking their heads sagely and talking about "dispensations" and "divine displeasure." They omit to take into account the significant fact that had the Mystery grounded a few feet further east she would hav struck Eaton's Neck Reef and surely gone to wreck. The burning of Talmage's Tabernacle and the escape of the Mystery show clearly that "Providence" has a discriminating eye.

The other day Colonel Ingersoll dropped a spark into the pulpit powder magazine of Middletown in this state. He lectured there upon "What Must We Do to Be Saved?" and the preachers are yet trembling with mingled fear and rage. He spoke in the evening (Sunday) at the Casino and the ministers opened all their batteries at their morning services. The Episcopal rector was particularly denunciatory. It appears that several of the directors of the Casino are members of his church, and he swooped down on them for letting the arch-Infidel occupy their rostrum. The more liberal church people strongly censure the rector for his intemperate utterances, while the unco guid are disposed to look upon him as a modern Savior or rural Parkhurst. Rev. Dr. Beattie of the Second Presbyterian church was almost equally severe in his excoriations of the Freethinker, who, he said, did not "know as much about salvation as Balaam's ass." We hav observed the same phenomenon before; the animal named is sure that he knows all about salvation and the other "mysteries of God." Rev. Mr. Heath of the Baptist church preached on the "Invested Dollar" and attacked the Casino directors and the newspapers, the latter for printing notices of Colonel Ingersoll's lecture. "The Outrage at the Casino" was the title of the rector's sermon. It is apparent that all the clericals knew they were going to be hit. Well, the lecturer gave them a doubtless coveted opportunity to obtain a sensational advertisment for their own discourses. In the evening Mr. Ingersoll paid his sarcastic compliments to all the churches. Of the Episcopalian he said:

"The Episcopal church has done some good. It has not destroyed beauty. It has allowed vines to grow over its edifices. It has allowed its people to keep time to music with their feet. It allows them to play cards. God won't mind, or he'll look the other way. It is easier to get forgiven according to the Episcopalian creed when you belong to that faith, upon the principle that members of the firm are allowed to hav goods at cost."

A Few Mistakes Corrected.

Our friend, C. B. Reynolds, writes: "You are away off on the American Protectiv Association." We hardly see how this can be true, when all our adverse comments hav been based on the platforms of this and kindred associations and the utterances of papers speaking for the movement. Where are we to go for authentic information if not to such sources? Mr. Reynolds says that certain officers of the society in Washington are good Freethinkers. Supposing that is so, what bearing has it on the all-important fact is that the association is a Protestant organization formed to advance Protestant interests? The few Freethinkers will be overborne by the immense majority of Christians, and be forced either to yield the priceless principle of equal religious freedom or get out of the society. We are further told by Mr. Reynolds that the Association is "opposed to any religious instruction in the public schools, and is opposed to union of church and state." The one sufficient answer to this is that we hav shown that all these Protestant bodies are working for the retention of the Bible in the schools, and that "separation of church and state" means no more on the lips of these people than it does in the mouths of the National Reform Association and the American Sabbath Union advocates; and even Mr. Reynolds will admit that it is worthless in the latter instance.

We were well aware, as Mr. Reynolds informs us, that this Protestant party claims to be "opposed to any appropriation of public money under any circumstances to any religious society or organization." But this declaration does not prevent it favoring religious teaching in the common schools, which teaching, of course, necessitates the use of public money for sectarian purposes. It cannot be too earnestly insisted that we must be very cautious in accepting the ex parte statements of these Protestant politicians. They are out for votes and power. Here, to illustrate, is the "National League for the Protection of American Institutions." Like the American Protectiv Association it demands that all appropriations of public money to sectarian institutions shall cease. In fact, to secure an amendment to the Constitution forbidding such appropriations is the one object of its existence. Yet its officers are known to stand for the Bible in the schools, Sunday laws, etc. In the winter of 1889–90 the Supreme Court of Wisconsin decided that use of the Bible in the schools constituted sectarian teaching within the meaning of the Constitution of that state. In the words of one journal, "the Supreme Court of Wisconsin decided against the use of the Bible in the public schools, under Constitutional provisions which in substance and on their face are identical with this amendment which is proposed by the National League for the Protection of American Institutions." One not on guard against the tricks of these Protestant Jesuits would naturally suppose that this "League" would hav gladly embraced the opportunity to indorse the principle of secular education so well formulated by the Wisconsin court. Did it do so? NO. Its aim is to shut off state aid from the Catholics and at the same time strengthen the Protestant grip on the public schools. Dr. King was then and is to-day the general secretary of the League. On April 8, 1890, in the New York conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, he, as chairman of the Conference Committee on Religion and Public Education, submitted a report embodying the following declaration of principles:

"2. That the separation of church and state cannot mean, under our form of government, the separation of Christian morality and the state.

"3. Historically, and by the highest legal and judicial precedent, we are a Christian nation.

"4. It is well settled by decisions in leading states of the Union that Christianity is a part of the common law of the state; 'the American states adopted these principles from the common law of England.'

"5. Education consists in the symmetrical development of the whole man for the purpose of his creation. This purpose is admitted to be moral. Purely secular education is impossible in a land whose literature, history, and laws are a product of a Christian civilization.

"12. We repudiate as un-American and pagan, and as a menace to the perpetuity of our free institutions, the recent supreme court decision in the state of Wisconsin, a decision dictated and defended by the enemies of the public schools, that the reading of the Bible, without comment, is 'sectarian instruction of the pupils, in view of the fact that the Bible contains numerous passages, upon some of which the peculiar creed of almost every religious sect is based, and that such passages may be reasonably understood to inculcate the doctrins predicated upon them.' The enemies of the common school declare that 'exclusion of the Bible would not help the matter. This would only make the schools purely secular, which were worse than making them purely Protestant. For as it regards the state, society, morality, all the interests of this world, Protestantism we hold to be far better than no religion.'

"In the present state of the controversy, we hold it to be the duty of the citizens of a commonwealth, Christian in its history and in the character of its laws, to deny that the Bible is a sectarian book, and to claim for it a place whenever the state attempts to educate youth for the duties of citizenship."

What does Mr. Reynolds think of that?

Our friend in the state of Washington also tells us that if the American Protectiv Association "advertised itself as an Infidel institution" it could effect nothing! In the first place it is inconceivable that it could advertise itself as an Infidel asssociation, for the reasons that its principles fall far short of being those of Infidels and that its membership is overwhelmingly religious. In the second place, Mr. Reynolds's plea amounts to this: As Freethinkers we can accomplish nothing, therefore let us disband the Secular Union, the Freethought Federation, and other Liberal societies, and enlist under the sectarian banners of the various Protestant societies to pull their chestnuts out of the fire Let THE TRUTH SEEKER veil its Freethought under a semblance of Christian zeal and "put out" hooks "to catch the religious and then get them to think." Like St. Paul, we are to catch them with guile. Into what sorry straits we hav been driven if it is true, as Mr. Reynolds alleges, that in showing the real purposes of the American Protectiv Association and kindred aggregations we "denounce the only sure means to gain our victory"! We hav more faith in the sublime mission of Freethought than to think for a moment that we can do nothing for liberty of conscience unless we masquerade as Protestants crusading against the Catholics in the interest of the Bible in the schools.
